Railway Mail Service Short of Twine.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The Post Office Department is obliged to economize in the use of twine. At all events, James E. White, General Superintendent of the Railway Service, issues a notice to-day which sets forth that "on account of the scarcity of the supply of twine at the disposal of the department for the tying up of letters and circular mail, it cannot be too strongly impressed upon the employes of the postal service that they must use the strictest economy in the matter of twine compatible with the proper performance of this work. Division Superintendents will please see that the clerks under them are instructed accordingly."

LAWTON'S BODY IN MANILA

Was Brought from San Mateo by His Cavalry Yesterday.

UNIVERSAL SORROW PREVAILS

Native Mayors Installed by Lawton Will Attend the Funeral—Body Will Be Sent Home.

MANILA, Dec. 20.—Major Gen. Lawton's body was brought from San Mateo to Manila this afternoon, his staff and a squadron of cavalry acting as escort. It was found necessary to bridge the river.

The funeral will take place from his late residence here, a mansion formerly occupied by a Spanish General. The body has been placed temporarily in a vault in El Paco Cemetery, where many of the American soldiers have been interred and a guard of honor will be maintained.

When Mrs. Lawton and her four children shall have completed their arrangements for returning to the United States, the body will be taken on a transport, with an escort of officers, for final interment, as is thought probable here, in Arlington Cemetery.

Gen. Lawton's death has caused universal sorrow in Manila. No American officer had greater popularity among all ranks; and, in his dealings with the natives, he commanded their respect and confidence to a remarkable degree. The Mayors whom he installed in the neighboring towns are arranging to attend the funeral in a body.

To his executive ability and personal leadership is chiefly due the brilliant execution of the plan of campaign in North Luzon, which has scattered the insurrectionary forces from San Isidro to the Gulf of Lingayen. That section of the island which had to be traversed during the very worst season of the year presented difficulties considered by all acquainted with it to be almost insurmountable, but Gen. Lawton thoroughly covered the programme assigned to him. When he reached Tayug and found that the other division had not arrived, he went through to Tagupan on his own responsibility. Although he imposed great hardships on his men, he invariably shared their lot cheerfully.

Thirteen Americans, including three officers, were wounded in the engagement at San Mateo, where Gen. Lawton was killed. Capt. Breckenridge's wound is not dangerous, although the bullet penetrated his arm and side.

It is estimated that the insurgents numbered 500 and that half of them were armed with rifles. The Americans numbered 1,300, but the command had been much depleted by sickness. The wagon train found the roads impassable, and was obliged to return.

The insurgents retreated to the northeast leaving six dead. They have other forces near Taytay. This region, although close to Manila, has proved the most difficult from which to dislodge the enemy. It is now reported that the insurgents intend to concentrate at Santa Cruz, Laguna Province, and in the district east of Laguna de Bay.

PAY TRIBUTE TO LAWTON.

The Presidents and Secretaries Root and Long Eulogize the Man and Soldier.

Executive Mansion, Dec. 20.

Major Gen. Otis, Manila:

I have learned with inexpressible sorrow of the death of Major Gen. Lawton, and ask to share with the officers and men of the Eighth Corps in their grief. One of the most gallant officers of the army has fallen.

At the time the sad news came to us his nomination as Brigadier General of the regular army was already made for transmission to the Senate, but no rank can enhance his fame. He rose from the ranks of the Ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, filling every grade in the service to that of Major General of Volunteers, and in three wars was conspicuous for bravery and devotion to duty. The country mourns the death of this intrepid leader.

Convey to Mrs. Lawton my heartfelt sympathy in her everlasting affliction.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

War Department, Dec. 20.

Otis, Manila:

I join with the officers and men of the Eighth Army Corps in deepest regret over the death of their heroic comrade, Gen. Lawton. I beg you to convey to Mrs. Lawton expression of my sincere sympathy. It was the ideal death of a soldier, as his splendid courage and devotion to duty have met the ideal of a soldier's life. The sad news will be announced to the army and due ceremonies of respect for his memory will be directed in General Orders.

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

Secretary Root made the following statement to-day in regard to the death of Gen. Lawton:

"It is seldom that a loss can so truly be called irreparable as in the case of Gen. Lawton's death, because he not only possessed the highest soldierly qualities, but the process of selection by actual experience had brought about universal recognition of these qualities while he was in the full vigor of life, so that the opportunity for great usefulness and the highest commands lay before him.

"He had not merely the quality of courage, but the quality of command, which inspired his troops with his indomitable will and disregard of danger. When the story of his march through Central and Northern Luzon in the Autumn of 1899 comes to be written, I believe that the crowning achievement of his life of strenuous and noble service will be deemed to add lustre to American arms and secure for him an enduring place as one of the heroic figures of American history."

"Lawton was, in many respects, an ideal soldier; single-minded, devoted to his duty, and of unqualified courage. He belongs to that class whom the world designates as the bravest of the brave. He made his reputation on the field. I saw a good deal of him during the President's trip to Atlanta last Winter, and was impressed by his quiet, unassuming manner. When called upon to speak in public he answered with but a word. But, somehow, as you heard that word and looked in his face and saw the man, you felt that if anything was to be done he was the man to do it."

ASK AID FOR LAWTON'S FAMILY.

The Dead General Left No Property but a Mortgaged Home.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Gen. Lawton died a poor man, although but few beyond his circle of immediate friends knew of the small pecuniary return that had come to him from his life work in behalf of his country. Therefore some of these friends have thought proper now to come to the aid of his family, as is shown by the following statement, addressed to the American people, issued to-day:

"Washington, Dec. 20, 1899.

"Major Gen. Henry W. Lawton, United States Volunteers, whose death occurred at San Mateo, Island of Luzon, on Dec. 19, 1899, has left little but his good name as a legacy to his wife and children. A piece of property purchased by him as a home in California has a mortgage of half the purchase price still outstanding and unliquidated. The undersigned have voluntarily associated themselves together for the purpose of raising funds to pay off the indebtedness. Contributions will be thankfully received by them and be devoted to the object herein above set forth.

"The aid of the newspapers of the country is requested.

"Contributions will be received by any one of the following:

"H. C. Corbin, Adjutant General, Washington; John F. Weston, Acting Commissary General, Washington; William Ludlow, Brigadier General, Havana, Cuba; William R. Shafter, Major General, San Francisco, Cal."

PRINCE OF FIGHTERS HAS FALLEN.

ITHACA, N. Y., Dec. 20.—President J. G. Schurman of Cornell and the head of the Philippine Commission, to-day spoke feelingly of the death of Major Gen. Lawton. He said:

"Gen. Lawton's death is a great public calamity. At the front and in the very eye of danger, the post he always sought for himself, our prince of fighters has fallen. In him the army loses a mighty inspiration, the public a sure bulwark of confidence. Fearless, impetuous, and always successful, so that his very name was in itself the strength of legions, Lawton was also a noble and attractive man, a kind General, sympathetic, loyal, and honorable, the very flower of American manhood. His power, determination, simple straightforwardness, and intuitive sympathy made a combination of qualities peculiarly effective for dealing with Orientals.

"From the moment of his arrival in Manila he enjoyed the confidence and affection of Americans, as he soon won not only the fear, but the respect of the Filipinos. Fighter though he was, no man more loyally or cordially adopted the policy of conciliating the Filipinos. That clear mind and sound heart soon discerned that force was not the sole solution of our problem there. He heartily advocated displacement of military power by civil government, in which the natives should manage their own affairs throughout all the regions in which American sovereignty has been established.

"Had he lived I think no man would have contributed more to the pacification of the Filipinos, which is the grave problem now confronting us. But it has been otherwise decreed. The hero's work is done. The Nation mourns and has ample cause to mourn him. I lay my wreath lovingly and reverently on his bier. And my heart goes out in deepest sympathy to his noble wife, who, with her fatherless children, is now so desolate and sorrowful in the Philippines."

BILLS TO PENSION MRS. LAWTON.

Measures Providing for $2,000 Annually Offered in Both Houses.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Senator Fairbanks to-day introduced a bill granting a pension of $2,000 a year to the widow of Gen. Lawton.

Representative Landis of Indiana introduced a similar bill in the House. He desired to secure immediate consideration for the bill, and a request to this effect would have been made had not the rules imperatively required that the bill first go to the regular committee. Moreover, a bill of somewhat similar tenor has been introduced for pensioning the widow of Gen. Guy V. Henry, who was Governor General of Puerto Rico, and as this is pending before the committee it was felt to be desirable to make no distinctions.

Mr. Landis represents the district from which Lawton's first regiment was recruited.

BODY TO BE BROUGHT HOME.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Senator Fairbanks saw the President to-day regarding the return of Gen. Lawton's body to the United States. The Senator suggested that the funeral ceremonies be given something of a National character.

It is the intention of the authorities to bring the body of the dead General home for burial, but when this will be done has not been definitely settled.

School Flags at Half Mast.

All the public schools in the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx will display their flags at half-mast for the next ten days as an expression of sorrow at the death of Major Gen. Henry W. Lawton in the Philippines. A resolution to that effect was offered at a meeting of the School Board yesterday afternoon by Commissioner O'Brien, and was unanimously adopted.

Rush to Aid Mrs. Lawton.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 20.—Within two hours after the publication of the appeal of the War Department for aid for the wife of Major Gen. Lawton, $500 was subscribed in this city. Capt. W. E. English and H. H. Hanna each gave $100.

AGUINALDO NEAR MANILA?

Secret Service Reports that He Has Joined the Force Which Was Engaged by Gen. Lawton.

MANILA, Dec. 20.—The American Secret Service reports that Aguinaldo has joined the Mariquina force.

The Mariquina force is the one before which Gen. Lawton fell. The town of Mariquina is no more than twelve miles almost due east of Manila, and lies on the Mariquina River, about four miles below San Mateo, where Gen. Lawton was killed.

Aguinaldo, to reach this point, must have traveled rapidly, as traveling goes in Luzon, for on Dec. 17 a dispatch was sent from Manila in which it was stated that a dispatch dated Dec. 15 from a correspondent at Laoag, on the west coast, near the northern extremity of the island, contained the information that the natives of Manitong, in the Province of North Ilocos, had said Aguinaldo had left that town on Dec. 9 for Solsona, in the same province.

Information to the effect that Aguinaldo had several Generals and 500 men with him at the time was also given.

ARMY AND NAVY ACT TOGETHER.

"Manila, Dec. 20.

"The gunboats Concord, Ackley commanding, and Pampanga, Leigh commanding, on the 18th inst., with two companies of infantry, captured Romblon. John James, seaman, wounded in the knee, the only casualty in the navy. Newark's battalion landed from Callao, occupied Pamplona, north coast Luzon. Burwell, Wheeling, co-operating with Gen. Young like one service, landing battalion, doing excellent work daily north and west Luzon."

ENEMY'S BULLET SLEW LOGAN.

Lieut. Col. Brereton Writes How the Major Met Death.

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, Dec. 20.—A letter written by Lieut. Col. Brereton of the Thirty-third Infantry, who was with Major John A. Logan when he was killed, has been received here. It sets at rest the story circulated that he was killed by his own men. The letter is dated San Fabian, Nov. 12, and says:

"Your husband died a hero, while leading in battle the command to which he had been assigned upon joining his regiment, the Third Battalion. His battalion was the advance guard of the regiment in attack upon the town of San Jacinto.

"Yesterday, Nov. 11, Major Logan was leaning over a wounded soldier to assist him, when he was shot through the head. This was shortly before 9 o'clock in the morning. Prompt surgical attendance was at hand, but the Major never recovered consciousness, and died while being conveyed to the hospital. The exact locality was about two miles from San Fabian, on the road to San Jacinto. I was one of the last persons who saw him alive, and he was brave and self-possessed until struck down by the enemy's bullet."

Major Logan's valet, Morley, has arrived at San Francisco on the transport Sikh and will join the Logan family at San Diego.

Filipino Actors Are Stranded.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Dec. 20.—Immigration Commissioner North has received a telegram from the Inspector of Immigration at Seattle, stating that sixteen members of the Filipino troupe, landed in this city from the transport Leelanaw last July, are stranded in that city and have become a public charge. The nine members of the troupe at present in this city will be sent back to Manila on the transport Grant.

THE MAYOR AND THE BOERS.

Chicago Man Intimates that New York's Executive Is Aiding in the Work of Enlisting Volunteers.

CHICAGO, Dec. 20.—Peter Van Schaack, ex-President of the Holland Society of Chicago, said to-day that he knows of forty-eight men who are going from this city to join the Boer forces in the field, and that he expects the movement to grow until there will be an exodus of Dutch sympathizers from New York and other ports to South Africa.

He said:

"Holland's people are patriotic. I know of men in Chicago who are going to fight with their countrymen in the Transvaal and who will pay their own expenses. The pro-Boer movement in this country has some big men behind it—such men as Mayor Van Wyck, Judge Van Wyck, and Robert Roosevelt in New York. Of course Mayor Van Wyck is compelled to work carefully because of his official position, but he is nevertheless active."

LAUREL KILLED HIS GOATS.

Sherman's Acting Animals Ate the Christmas Decorations in a Philadelphia Museum and Died.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 20.—There is one man in the city to-day who would probably want to fight if any one should wish him a Merry Christmas. He sits around with a heavy heart hating the "joyous Christmastide." His name is Sherman, and he owned the six trained goats heralded the world over as Sherman's Caprine Paradox.

The goats were booked for a two weeks' engagement at the Ninth and Arch Street Museum. They finished one week of the engagement on last Saturday night, and then, in an unlucky moment, they discovered that by standing on their hind legs and stretching their necks as far as possible they could get at the Christmas decorations which festooned the curio hall. The decorations were made of laurel, and, it has proved, laurel is the one thing a goat cannot eat.

Alas, the six little goats will never finish their engagement; the only remaining one breathed his last this morning. They ate the decorations some time Sunday morning. They immediately showed signs of sickness. Two of the best veterinary surgeons in town were called, but they had nothing in their medicine chests which was an antidote for the Christmas decorations.

One by one the goats died, and now Mr. Sherman is goatless and $2,500 out. One of the carcasses was taken to the University Hospital, where a post-mortem was held, and the verdict was laurel poisoning. The poison produced heart failure.

POOL SELLING ILLEGAL.

Alabama Supreme Court Upholds the Anti-Pool Law—May Stop Racing in That State.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Dec. 20.—The anti-pool law here stands. It is unlawful to make a book or sell pools on horse races in Alabama. The Supreme Court of Alabama has decided that the anti-pool selling law passed by the Legislature in February, 1897, is valid and must be enforced.

The test cases came up from Jefferson, where they were tried in the inferior courts. Judge Feagin's decision was that the law was unconstitutional. The cases were then appealed to the Supreme Court, and in the meanwhile betting and pool selling went merrily on at the State fair in Birmingham. The decision rendered to-day is of far-reaching importance. Besides the pool sellers and bookmakers, there are numbers of men in Alabama who occasionally back their judgment of a horse with a few dollars.

It is claimed that the enforcing of this law will not only stop horse racing in Alabama, but will seriously interfere with the breeding of fine horses in the State. Riverside Park was recently leased by a Minnesota gentleman, who intended converting it into a driving park, where there would be tests of speed between fleet racers.

TWEED'S OLD HOME ENLARGED.

Present Owner Adds Seventy-five Acres to the Grounds.

GREENWICH, Conn., Dec. 20. — Mrs. Elizabeth Anderson, who owns and has her suburban home on the old Tweed place, in Greenwich, has recently purchased seventy-five acres of wooded farm land adjoining, and now has 500 acres of land in the heart of Greenwich village inclosed for a home.

There is nearly a mile of frontage on the Old Boston Turnpike, and negotiations are pending for the purchase of considerable more of the choice land by Mrs. Anderson. Only intimate friends of the wealthy owner ever have access to her grounds. At every corner signs stare at the would-be intruder setting forth: "Private grounds. Strangers not to enter under penalty of the law."

Great changes have been made in the place since the days when "Boss" Tweed entertained his intimate friends here. About the only vestige of Tweed's old home that is left is the circular seat and table built in the branches of an enormous elm tree. Access to these is by means of stairs winding about the tree.

WIFE SLEEPS WITH A RAZOR.

Washington Man Gives This as a Reason for a Divorce.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—After five months of married life, Henry Schwakopf has begun a suit for divorce against Emma Schwakopf, on the ground of cruelty. He alleges that Emma has formed the disconcerting habit of sleeping with a razor under her pillow. She will vouchsafe no explanation of this eccentric habit, and refuses to give any when asked.

Henry says he very often lies awake half the night wondering at his wife's peculiar taste. The thing has so strained his nerves that it affects his health, and as Emma will not give up the razor nor consent to keep it anywhere except under her pillow, Henry is driven to ask for a divorce.

College President Drops Dead.

FARGO, N. D., Dec. 20.—President H. C. Simmons of Fargo College to-night, while standing in a book store, dropped dead from heart disease. The deceased had been a prominent figure in Congregational work in the Northwest. He came to North Dakota thirteen years ago as Superintendent of Home Missions for the State. He conceived the idea of establishing the college and had been President since 1894. He secured a pledge of $100,000 for the college from D. K. Pearsons of Chicago, and had succeeded in securing pledges for another $100,000 demanded to be raised by Mr. Pearson.

Carter's Former Secretary Gives Bail.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Dec. 20.—M. A. Connolly former private secretary to Capt. Carter, arrived here to-day from Havana and gave bond in $10,000 for his appearance before the United States District Court. Connolly was recently indicted in connection with John F. Gaynor, E. H. Gaynor, B. D. Greene, and H. Carter and others for conspiracy to defraud the Government of large sums of money in connection with contracts for the improvement of Savannah River and Harbor and Cumberland Sound.

FALL IN COPPER SHARES

Values on Boston Exchange Shrink Nearly $200,000,000.

METAL NOW HIGHER IN PRICE

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 20.—Troublous conditions in the financial circles are apparently ended. The mischief that has been done, however, is still very manifest in present market values. Nowhere has the storm done more serious injury than in the copper shares. In view of the fact that the copper shares and their unhealthy inflation were indirectly, at least, the cause of the trouble, it is not at all surprising that this should be the case.

A shrinkage of nearly $50,000,000 in copper share values since the 1st of December, and of nearly $200,000,000 since the high prices of the boom last Spring, is what the record shows.

Even though copper is now selling at nearly 4 cents a pound higher than a year ago, it is a significant and suggestive fact that the shares of the companies that are producing copper or getting ready to produce it, show to-day nearly $200,000,000 less value in the market than they did last Spring. The shrinkage is the greatest that has ever been recorded in the history of the local market for any group of securities, and it shows more clearly than anything else could possibly do the injury done by overinflation.

Following are the figures:

ENRICHED BY CARELESS BOY.

John P. Martin and the stock company which owns the Martinique Copper Mines at Tucson, Arizona, of which he is manager, made more than $60,000 the other day through the failure of a messenger boy to deliver a telegram.

A three days' option on a block of Martinique stock had been given to representatives of a syndicate of Boston and Baltimore investors, which was to expire at midnight of the third day. On the evening of the last day Mr. Martin and his son waited until midnight, but did not receive an expected telegram. Negotiations were begun the next day with other persons.

Leon O. Bailey, counsel for the Boston and Baltimore investors, called on Mr. Martin later to complete the deal for the syndidcate. He was astonished to learn that a telegram he had sent had not been delivered to Mr. Martin. It was learned that the telegram had been put in a rack in the elevator car. From there it had been stolen.

Experts' reports during the three days allowed to the syndicate had caused the quoted values of the shares involved to rise $66,666 higher. Mr. Martin refused to complete the deal, as he considered the undelivered telegram an inadequate notice. He, however, paid Mr. Bailey $5,000 to release him from all claims. Mr. Martin will not sue the telegraph company.

GREAT SUFFERING IN INDIA.

ABERDEEN, S. D., Dec. 20.—W. F. T. Bushnell is in receipt of a letter from his sister, Dr. Katherine Bushnell, who is at present in India doing missionary work. She is in one of the plague-stricken districts, on the verge of the famine district, and says that the sufferings of the natives are already terrible, although the famine has just begun. The missionaries are doing their best to alleviate suffering, and are giving employment to the people, paying them for their labor at the rate of ten cents a day, which is sufficient in that country to supply food.

Dr. Bushnell writes that Pundita Ramabai, the philanthropist, is interesting herself in the subject of artesian wells for the Kedgoon district, and believes that if the wells can be sunk there will be no more famine. She asks for information regarding these wells and expresses the belief that a few American well-drillers would do well in that country.

THROWN FROM CAB TO STREET.

Mrs. Henry A. Robbins's Mishap Due to a Collision.

Mrs. Henry A. Robbins of 419 Fifth Avenue was thrown from a cab at Twenty-fifth Street and Madison Avenue yesterday afternoon and narrowly escaped serious injuries. The cab was owned by the New York Cab Company and was in charge of H. Cortwright of 4 West Forty-sixth Street.

The accident was due to an express wagon owned by the Hawthorne Express Company and driven by John O'Connor of 326 West One Hundred and Seventeenth Street, which suddenly turned to one side and tore off one of the hind wheels of the cab. The cab was thrown on its side and Mrs. Robbins was tossed to the pavement. She was carried into a Madison Avenue residence. A physician found that Mrs. Robbins was suffering from shock. She was conveyed to her home after a brief rest.

O'Connor was locked up in the West Thirtieth Street Station. It is said that the expressman was driving rapidly up the avenue when the accident occurred.

THE OCEANIC IS OVERDUE.

QUEENSTOWN, Dec. 21.—Considerable anxiety is felt regarding the White Star steamer Oceanic, Capt. Cameron, which left New York Dec. 18. She is thirty hours overdue.

The Oceanic was designed with a view to making the trip between Liverpool and New York in seven days, and between Queenstown and New York in six days.

Sailing from here last Wednesday, she should have reached Queenstown on Tuesday and Liverpool yesterday. While on her earlier voyages she did not quite meet the schedule, she has since made the trip well within, and her delay on this trip may be due to bad weather, which has retarded many of the large steamers, or may be due to some derangement of machinery, necessitating slow going.

When the Oceanic left this port there was a throng of prominent persons at the pier to see relatives and friends off and to exchange Christmas greetings. Among those who sailed were the Duke of Manchester, Mrs. William Rhinelander Stewart and two daughters, Mrs. Roswell D. Hitchcock, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel, Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Watson, Mrs. J. W. Ehninger, Mr. and Mrs. Morton Redmond, Mrs. Gilbert Parker, and Miss Alice Ward.

TO PAY BIG ELECTION BET.

Stakeholder to Pay Mr. Furey's $20,000 to James McGarry.

Robert Furey, a well-known Brooklyn politician, will be $20,000 poorer at noon to-day owing to the fact that his famous election wager with James J. McGarry will be paid before that hour. The stakes, $34,000 in all, are held by ex-Alderman Arthur J. Heaney, who has signified his intention of paying the bet at J. McGrorty's café, in Montague Street. The witnesses to the transaction to-day will include ex-Police Justice E. Clarence Murphy, Senator Coffey, Assemblyman Cain, Alderman Hennessey, Patrick Hayes, George W. Phillips, and Judge John Wilson of Canarsie.

Alderman Heaney said yesterday afternoon that Mr. Furey has made strenuous protests against the payment of the wager, and has even hinted that, under the gambling laws the entire transaction is illegal. "That makes no difference with me," said Heaney to the reporter of THE NEW YORK TIMES last night. "McGarry won the money, and I will pay it."

This wager, one of the largest political bets ever made, was effected about two weeks before the last election. Furey contended that the entire Kings Democratic ticket would be elected, and offered to back his opinion with $20,000. McGarry offered $14,000 against Furey's $20,000. The Democratic ticket won with the single exception of John Morrissey Gray, candidate for the office of Register, who was defeated by James R. Howe by a majority of 312, showing a change in the normal Democratic vote of nearly 16,000 votes. Politicians in Brooklyn claim that this reverse, which was planned, as alleged, by Senator Coffey and his friends, and was a direct slap in the face of the Willoughby machine, shows that Senator Coffey is the logical Democratic leader in Kings County.

ELEPHANT KILLS HIS TRAINER.

Had Been in Captivity for Twenty Years, but Resented Punishment.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Dec. 20.—M. J. Meagher, an elephant trainer, better known as Patsy Forepaugh, was instantly killed by an elephant to-day at Sellsville. The elephant, known as "Sid," has been in captivity for twenty years and was never regarded as vicious.

This afternoon Meagher led the animal into the training circle for the daily exercise, when "Sid" became unruly and the trainer jabbed the animal with his stick. "Sid" became furious and hurled the trainer to the ground with his trunk. The elephant then fell on his victim, piercing Meagher's body with one of his tusks, on which was a brass ball six inches in diameter.

HUGE SCHOONER TO BE BUILT.

change Trust Company:

Gentlemen: At the request of many of the large stockholders of the Produce Exchange Trust Company, who are interested in preserving its business and placing the company upon a substantial financial basis, I have continued my efforts to raise the necessary money to pay off its depositors, and I now have sufficient funds guaranteed to fully satisfy the Superintendent of the Banking Department of the State of New York.

You will remember that my first knowledge of any trouble between this institution and the Banking Department was announced to me on Sunday last at a meeting of a few of the members of the board at Mr. Beall's house, called at 10 o'clock on that night. There I found the Superintendent, Mr. Kilburn, in consultation with the President, Mr. Beall, and First Vice President, Mr. Edwin Gould, and a few others. We were given until 10 o'clock the next morning to raise $2,500,000, and I hardly need to say that it was impossible to raise that amount of money on so short a notice.

Through the efforts of myself and friends we agreed to furnish $1,100,000, but as all of the balance required was not forthcoming, the doors were closed.

I have since been able to secure the promise of sufficient funds to pay off its depositors, upon condition that a Board of Trustees and officers will be selected to manage its affairs upon sound banking principles and protect the interests of its stockholders; such changes to be made in the management of the company as will command the confidence of the public, and of sufficient experience to handle its assets to the greatest advantage.

I ask the board to adjourn this meeting until 2 o'clock on Tuesday next, and I will nominate a committee of three to investigate this proposition which I make, and who will report to the full board on Tuesday next.

I believe that very little loss, if any, will be sustained by this company, if its assets are intelligently handled, and if this proposition is accepted, the company will have the advantage of men of prominence and experience in its management.

The stockholders are the people principally interested in the rehabilitation and welfare of the company, as it is conceded by all that the depositors will in any event be paid in full, and I am here to do all in my power for the protection of the stockholders of the company.

A story was current yesterday that officers and trustees of the company had tendered their resignations so as to give Edwin Gould a free hand in reorganizing it. This was denied on the highest authority.

In regard to savings bank funds which were on deposit with the trust company, Frederick D. Kilburn, Superintendent of the Banking Department of this State, said yesterday:

"These savings bank deposits amount to about $500,000. As savings banks are preferred creditors, there is no chance of any savings bank depositor losing anything by the suspension of the trust company. They are amply secured, and I have no doubt that all the depositors are secured likewise. I haven't the least doubt that every depositor will get back every dollar. In addition to other assets, the stockholders in the company can be held for $2,500,000 if need be."

ATLANTIC TRUST COMPANY.

President Malster Resigns and Is Succeeded by Mr. Flower.

BALTIMORE, Md., Dec. 20.—A special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Atlantic Trust and Deposit Company was held to-day. President Malster called the meeting to order, and immediately offered his resignation. He resigned, he said, on condition that new blood and new capital be infused into the company, and that the interest of the stockholders be protected. J. W. H. Geiger, John G. Hertel, and John Burrows tendered their resignations as Directors. They were all accepted, and Vice President Flower of New York was elected temporary President.

Mr. Malster was elected President of the Atlantic Trust and Deposit Company upon its formation last Spring. The company is capitalized at $1,000,000, and has a surplus of a similar amount. The other Vice Presidents are Christian Devries and Allan W. Wood. J. Sewell Thomas is Secretary and Treasurer, and Rich & Bryan, counsel.

The company has not yet commenced business. No loans have been made, it is stated, and the doors have not been open to depositors. No time was set for further meetings of the Directory.

YONKERS TREASURER RESIGNS.

R. P. H. Getty Forced to Give Up on Account of Ill Health.

YONKERS, N. Y., Dec. 20.—City Treasurer Robert Park Hill Getty to-day sent his resignation to Mayor Leslie Sutherland. His action results from the increasing infirmities of age and had been contemplated for some time. He has been Treasurer for sixteen years, and is now eighty-eight years of age.

Mr. Getty was a member of the New York City Board of Aldermen in 1847. Two years later he removed to what was then the village of Yonkers, and at once took a prominent part in the affairs of the place. He was elected a member of the Board of Trustees and later became the President of the village. He served in this capacity for four terms.

He built the Getty House here, the leading hotel. Getty Square is named after him, and the Park Hill section bears his two middle names. He has been ill for eight months.

NEVER HEARD OF THE WAR TAX.

Ex-President Cleveland's Cousin Makes the Confession.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Dec. 20.—Job Cleveland, a cousin of ex-President Grover Cleveland, was initiated into the mysteries of the war tax in the office of Internal Revenue Collector Harkins to-day. The old man is a manufacturer of wine, and leads a secluded life in Buncombe County.

For some time reports have come to Collector Harkins's office that Mr. Cleveland was violating the revenue law by failing to affix a stamp to each bottle he put up. The Collector wrote the old gentleman, asking him to come in and make an explanation. To-day Mr. Cleveland stated to the Collector that he had heard nothing of the new law to raise money for prosecuting the war and he had gone on innocently violating the law. He made out a statement of back tax due, paid the amount, and bought a supply of stamps for future use.

APPRAISERS HEAR IMPORTERS.

Protest Against Mr. Wakeman's Ruling on Certain Cotton Fabrics.

Appraisers Wilbur F. Wakeman of New York, H. R. Torbert of Baltimore, Linn Hartranft of Philadelphia, and S. S. Blanchard of Boston granted a hearing yesterday at the Appraisers' office, in this city, to the importers of fancy colored and figured cotton fabrics who are protesting against a recent ruling of Appraiser Wakeman, placing 2 cents per yard more duty on their importations.

For two years past these fabrics have been taxed under Paragraph 310 of the tariff law, but lately Mr. Wakeman decided to tax them under Paragraph 313, which means quite an additional burden upon the importers. Their contention is that this class of cotton goods does not come under the head of lappets, where there is a fancy warp used to produce an effect or figure.

The protest was conducted by the importers in the New York Merchants' Association. Several manufacturers of the same class of cotton goods in this country testified that the additional tax will be unjust to the importers.

The hearing was concluded, but ten days were allowed counsel to hand in briefs.

POTTERY MAKERS TO UNITE.

EAST LIVERPOOL, Ohio, Dec. 20.—The first steps looking toward a combination of English and American pottery manufacturers have just been taken at the meeting of the Western Potters' Association in this city to-day. The President of the National Manufacturers' Association, Charles W. Franzheim of the Wheeling Pottery Company, presented a proposition he had just received from Trenton manufacturers to consent to the proposed revision of the price list on crockery, provided there is an iron-clad agreement to it on the part of the Western manufacturers.

The English manufacturers are willing to revise their prices, contingent upon the American potters taking a similar step. Mr. Franzheim assured the East Liverpool manufacturers that both the Trenton and English manufacturers will adhere to their propositions. A communication was then written indicating the willingness of the East Liverpool potters to adopt the new price and will be forwarded to England, where it will go before the manufacturers of that country, who will act upon and consider it.

A leading manufacturer who attended the meeting said that for some time inconsistencies have existed in both the American and English price lists on ware. It is proposed to correct these irregularities.

Another Fire Victim Dead.

Mary Barret, nine years of age, who with her father, mother, and sister, was fatally burned in a tenement house fire at Third Avenue and One Hundred and Second Street Tuesday morning, died yesterday morning in the Harlem Hospital. Her body was removed to the undertaking establishment at 202 East One Hundred and First Street, where those of her father, mother, and sister are awaiting burial.

BIMETALLISM IS DROPPED

PROBABLY INSPIRED BY BRYAN

Mr. Brewster Believes Action Will Be Approved by Party Leaders—Single Tax Also Wanted.

Eugene V. Brewster and his fellow-leaders of the Chicago Platform Democracy of Brooklyn last night cut loose from bimetallism and came out for a paper currency only. This action was taken at a meeting at the home of Mr. Brewster of the Executive Committee of the Democratic National Ways and Means Committee for Kings County.

Resolutions were adopted declaring that, "it being practically settled that bimetallism cannot be put into practice for years to come, at least, we urge the party to declare for a paper currency only, having no qualities of redemption, and advise that steps be taken to submit the question of a Constitutional amendment to this effect to the American people should the same be necessary. We do not believe in depending upon the mines for the world's supply of money, and we do not believe in handing over to the banks the power to issue money."

The Democratic Party is asked to take up the cause of labor, and declare for public ownership or public utilities, such as railroads, telegraphs, telephones, &c.; and to declare for only one form of taxation, viz., a tax on land values, for absolutely unobstructed trade with other nations, for independence for the Filipinos, and for no alliance with any nation, except an alliance with all nations for the purpose of securing universal peace.

This action by the Chicago Platform Democrats of Brooklyn is regarded as of more than mere local significance in some quarters. Mr. Brewster has long been looked upon as the personal representative of William J. Bryan in Kings County. It is known that he has been in frequent communication with Mr. Bryan of late, and by some the action of the local silverites is viewed as having been inspired from a source outside of Brooklyn.

Mr. Brewster was asked if the change from bimetallism to paper currency was suggested by Mr. Bryan.

"You will have to ask Mr. Bryan himself about that," he said, with a smile.

Mr. Brewster said, however, that he had reason to believe the action of the Kings County committee would be approved by the leaders of the party. He did not know whether similar action would be taken elsewhere, but believed this to be highly probable.

The single-tax clause in the resolutions, Mr. Brewster said, would probably not meet with the approval of the leaders, but it was only of secondary consideration.

CITIZENS' UNION REFORMS.

The Central City Committee of the Citizens' Union has adopted a new constitution and a new name. Hereafter it will be known as "The Citizens' Union of the City of New York."

The new constitution provides that nominations by the union shall be limited solely to candidates voted for by citizens of New York City, or of the judicial districts in which the city is situated. This will prevent action on nominations for State officers or for any elective official outside of the City of New York. The Assembly district is made the basis of organization, and the City Committee, City Convention, and other bodies will be built up from the district organizations, instead of down from the Central City Committee. Each organization will have great latitude.

In Mayoralty years a City Convention may appoint a Committee of Seventy, which shall be a Nominating and a Campaign Committee. Nominations recommended by the committee shall be approved by the convention, and the members of the committee need not be members of the Citizens' Union.

The new City Committee will consist of one member from each of the Assembly Districts in Greater New York, with thirty delegates at large selected by the City Committee. This course, it is believed, will materially strengthen the movement.

When twenty Assembly Districts have been thoroughly organized the new City Committee will take charge. This act, it is said, will do away with the criticism that the present governing body is self-constituted and self-perpetuated.

The new constitution has been drafted on the plans formulated by the original Committee of Organization, and the new City Committee will become a representative body.

The resignations of Alfred Frank, Boudinot Keith, Isaac H. Klein, Samuel J. Rose, and M. D. Rothschild, tendered, as alleged, because of the adoption of the new constitution, have been accepted.

TO AMEND THE CHARTER.

City Club Wants Commission Appointed by the Governor.

The Council of the City Club is taking an active interest in the proposed amendments to the charter of New York City. It was announced yesterday that the Council had unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the Council of the City Club earnestly support the demand of the Chamber of Commerce that a commission of thoroughly qualified persons be appointed by the Governor to undertake the systematic revision of the charter of New York City.

"Resolved, That, in view of the magnitude of the undertaking and its public importance, provision should be made by which members of the commission to revise the charter are given adequate compensation, and a sufficient fund to enable them to avail of expert assistance in regard to matters which may come before them for discussion and action.

"Resolved, That the conclusions and recommendations of such commission should be laid before the public in such form and at such time as will make possible adequate public discussion and criticism of the recommendations before action by the Legislature thereon."

It was stated at the clubhouse last night that another meeting will be held by the Council the early part of next week.

Kings's Sheriff Appointments.

Sheriff-elect William Walton of Kings County has settled upon the appointments to positions in his office. He has selected for Under Sheriff James Dunne of the Sixth Ward; for counsel, Charles H. Hyde; Chief Clerk, William P. Kennedy; Warden of jail, Richard Bergen; Deputy Warden, John Wilson; Sheriff's auctioneer, Thomas A. Kerrigan. William J. McPhilliamy, a Republican, has been reappointed equity clerk, a position he has held for the past six years.

Democrats Nominate W. W. Heard, a Silver Man, for Governor—Choice Creates Unfavorable Comment.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Dec. 20.—William Wright Heard was nominated for Governor to-night by the Democratic State Convention at Baton Rouge. He is a Silver Democrat with Populistic tendencies, and received the nomination through the aid of Gov. Foster, who is the present incumbent.

Heard's nomination by the Democrats will not affect the Republican Party in Louisiana in any way. The Republicans intend to put out two full State tickets. The "Lily Whites", will nominate one and the regular Republicans, of which the negroes are the backbone, will put out the other. Neither can win in the election, which will occur in April, 1900.

The fact that the retiring Governor of the State can and did name his successor practically in the manner that the Presidents of the Central American republics manage their political operations, will cause no end of adverse criticism throughout the State.

Mr. Heard was a man with but little backing politically, but was a close political friend of Gov. Foster. He and Foster have pulled the wires together for years, and Foster owes Heard many debts of gratitude. Up to the moment Foster's influence was brought to bear Heard was the weakest before the convention, but, as soon as the Governor said to his henchmen, "Heard must be nominated," the tide turned and the delegates tumbled over each other in their efforts to be first to please the great man.

The Times-Democrat will say to-morrow: "The Times-Democrat believes the Democratic Party, representing as it does the great majority of the white voters of the State, should control the destinies of Louisiana; but the methods by which Gov. Foster has secured absolute control of the State, naming its officials, distributing the offices as personal favors, is not Democratic. It is the worst form of autocracy.

"If there is an opposition party in the field it will be to Gov. Foster that we owe it—to his autocratic and undemocratic methods, to his concentration of all the power in his own hands, and to his absolute control and domination of the party. If Mr. Heard had taken his chances like the other candidates, had run on his own merits and been nominated, no objection could have been raised; but because he was nominated, not on account of his own strength, but at Gov. Foster's wish, his candidacy will arouse both dissatisfaction and opposition.

"The Democrats of Louisiana should throw off the bonds and dictation of Gov. Foster and restore the power where it belongs—to the Democratic voters."

M. S. QUAY IS CONFIDENT.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 20.—Col. M. S. Quay, leader of the Republican organization of Pennsylvania and claimant to a seat in the United States Senate under the credentials issued by Gov. Stone, dropped quietly into town from Washington this morning.

Col. Quay stated that he was in nowise disturbed over the contention that has been raised against the validity of his appointment as Senator and the efforts which have been made and are being made to prevent him from obtaining his seat. When questioned on this point, Col. Quay asserted that he was "perfectly satisfied with the outlook" and confident that he would be seated.

As soon as Col. Quay's arrival became known rumors were circulated on the political "Rialto" to the effect that his visit had some connection with the reports of efforts which were being made by some of his friends in co-operation with his opponents to bring about a compromise in the Senatorial situation. As the story went, ex-Senator J. Donald Cameron, on behalf of the Quayites, and ex-Gov. Hastings of the "insurgents" were trying to agree upon a candidate to succeed Quay. The Quay people, it was stated, were willing to turn in for either Gov. Stone, Attorney General Elkin, or ex-Lieut. Gov. Walter Lyon, while the other side had suggested ex-Congressman-at-large George F. Huff.

Insurance Commissioner Durham, when questioned as to the truth of the rumors declared that they were entirely groundless.

Col. Quay will return to Washington tomorrow. His visit, according to his assertion, was on strictly private business.

MRS. WALDEN PELL DEAD.

News arrived here by cable yesterday of the death of Mrs. Walden Pell, a famous social leader in this city more than a generation ago, and the head of the American colony in Paris for the last twenty years. Mrs. Pell was in her ninetieth year. She died at 7 o'clock yesterday evening at her home, 1 Avenue Montaigne, Paris, where she had lived for fifteen years. Her death was placid and was the result of a gradual decline consequent upon a violent inflammation of the lungs with which she was attacked on Nov 27.

Mrs. Pell had a large personal acquaintance not only in Paris, but in this country. She was a Miss Orleana Redwood Ellery. The first name was given to her because of the fact that it was the City of New Orleans in which she was born. This event occurred Oct. 2, 1820, and for many years she had been known among hundreds of friends as "Aunt Orlie." Her mother was a Miss von Weissenfels, and she was related in blood, through her father's family, to the William Ellery "of Rhode Island and Providence, &c.," who signed the Declaration of Independence. She married, about sixty-two years ago, Walden Pell in this city. He was head of the prominent auctioneering firm of Pell & Co., in Hanover Square, and a man of high standing and considerable means.

Mr. and Mrs. Walden Pell first lived in Chambers Street—the society of the city favored that thoroughfare for residential purposes then—and later the tide that took their friends up town took them northward, too, and they became established in 19 West Twenty-first Street. It has fallen into a boarding house now, but it was a famous social centre some forty years ago, a Mecca for many of the persons best-known socially in the city, and the scene of a good deal of fashionable gayety. Mrs. Pell remained a leader in New York society until her husband's death, in 1863. Then she went to Newport, where she lived quietly for four years, after which she went to Paris.

She had revisited America since then, but for more than two decades had lived in Paris, a relative, Miss Estella Anderson, being most of the time her companion. There she was the head and centre of the American colony. For an American to be received at her house was to have a recognized and desirable standing in that colony, and "Aunt Arlie" was the acknowledged leader in social, charitable, artistic, and musical movements in which the colony was interested. Her fortune was a large one, and she was constantly employing it in benevolent actions.

Her chief delight of this sort was the aiding in any possible fashion of American girls who were trying to get an art education in Paris. She had many opportunities to help them, and she took about all of them. She was interested in the National Art Institute, established for just such purposes as these, but designed to help on students of both sexes.

Mrs. Pell maintained her active social life to the end. On her birthday, even to the latest, she would give dinner parties to her friends. After each dinner a cotillion would follow and her guests would enjoy the interesting spectacle of a sprightly little woman eighty-eight or eighty-nine years old opening the dance by personally stepping out in the first number, and then turning it over to her more youthful friends, with the injunction, "Now, children, go ahead and enjoy yourselves." Her personality was a winning one, and the number of those bound to her by personal ties of friendship was exceptionally large.

Mrs. Pell was for years a member of the American Protestant Episcopal Church on the Avenue de l'Alma, of which the Rev. Dr. Morgan is rector. Her body will probably be shipped to this country, and taken by ex-Commissioner E. Ellery Anderson, who attended to her business interests here, to Newport to lie by her husband in the cemetery there.

Mrs. Pell's large estate will probably go largely to the children and grandchildren of the late Mrs. Elbert J. Anderson of Newport, who was her sister. A number of her husband's nephews, including Walden Pell of this city, survive her. She leaves no children.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST.—Fair, winds variable.

High pressure prevails throughout the United States, the only depression within the limits of observation being in Northern Alberta. The crest of the high pressure, as is usual at this season of the year, continues over the middle plateau. Temperatures have fallen somewhat in the Atlantic and Gulf States, and have generally risen elsewhere east of the Rocky Mountains. They are, however, nowhere high. Fair weather has also prevailed generally, except in the Southern and Southwestern States, where there were showers, with some little snow in Western Texas and New Mexico. In the Pacific Coast and plateau regions the weather has been fair, except on the north coast, where there were showers. Fair weather is indicated generally for today and to-morrow, except showers to-day in Eastern Florida, and fair weather is likely to continue throughout the interior of the country until the high pressure area in the middle plateau begins to disappear. Temperature changes will be unimportant for the next two or three days. On the New England and Middle Atlantic Coast winds will be mostly fresh westerly, while on the south coast they will be fresh north to east.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES'S thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

3 A. M.	38	36	35
6 A. M.	40	34	35
9 A. M.	42	35	39

6 P. M.	40	42	42
9 P. M.	38	38	40

Average temperatures yesterday were as follows: Printing House Square.....35½
Weather Bureau.....38
Corresponding date 1898.....40
Corresponding date for last twenty years.....42

The maximum temperature yesterday was 43 degrees at 4 P. M., and the minimum 33 degrees at 8 A. M. The humidity at 8 A. M. was 76 per cent. and 8 P. M. 67 per cent. The barometer read at 8 A. M. 30.44 and at 8 P. M. 30.43.

UNITED FOR DR. PURVES

Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church Ratifies the Committee's Call.

THE SEARCHING EXAMINATION

The congregation of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church by a rising vote and harmoniously decided last night to call the Rev. Dr. George T. Purves, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Princeton, to succeed the late Dr. John Hall. The report of the committee to which was allotted the task of choosing Dr. Hall's successor gave testimony of the searching tests as to orthodoxy applied in the case of all candidates favorably considered.

The chapel of the church was filled and there was a majority of the members present. The business part of the meeting lasted not over half an hour, and at its conclusion the members congratulated one another on the happy outcome of over a year's uncertainty in their search for a minister. Within a few minutes after the congregation had voted, the session, with a committee from the congregation, gathered in the minister's room and affixed their signatures to the call, for immediate mailing to Dr. Purves. Although the contents of the letter of Dr. Purves, received by H. Edwards Rowland last Saturday, were not made public, there is declared to be no ground for doubt that Dr Purves will accept.

In a long report of the committee of the whole, read by Mr. Rowland, the committee pledged itself to pay Dr. Purves $12,000 a year, give him the use of a parsonage, and provide him with an assistant minister.

The Rev. Dr. R. K. Booth, Moderator of the session, presided, and after religious exercises read the report of the committee of the whole, which decided Dec. 3 to recommend Dr. Purves. Mr. Rowland then read the principal report of the committee giving in detail its reasons for having fixed upon Dr. Purves as the most available successor to Dr. Hall. It was speedily adopted on motion of James O. Sheldon, seconded by James Talcott. William Brookfield proposed a rising vote.

The report in part is as follows:

"For the last thirteen months we have met every Sabbath morning, except during vacation, and at many other times also. We have given careful consideration to the great many names which have come before us. On only two of them has the committee been able to agree that they would probably unite our members, build up the Church in its most holy faith, be regarded with favor by all, and able to carry on the religious work in our midst, which, with Divine help, Dr. Hall was able to do for so many years. Our first aim has been to select and recommend for pastor a Presbyterian minister of our own Assembly. It is true that we have had names presented from every quarter of the globe, but the committee has been left perfectly free to make its own selection and recommendation. We have felt very keenly the weight of responsibility which has been upon us and the necessity of arriving at a decision as quickly as possible; but we have also been impressed with the fact that it would be worse for the church to make an unfortunate decision than it would be to wait until it was made clear to us whom the Lord desired us to unite upon.

"We have asked advice from many of the fathers and brethren of the church, from theological seminaries, where orthodox Presbyterians are trained for the ministry, and one or more members of the committee visited London, Birkenhead, Brighton, Belfast, and other places in the British Isles, and Canada, Washington, Minneapolis, Princeton, Spring Lake, Seabright, Long Branch, and many other places in this country, in our desire to hear different ministers preach.

"We knew that we were expected to search for a man who would subscribe to the Confession of Faith as interpreted by the General Assembly of 1893, and who was known to be conservative in his theological views, and not afraid to express them whenever an occasion arose for defending what we believe to be the Word of God. Since the appointment of the committee we have heard seventy-five different ministers preach in this church, and the Supply Committee has tried to secure for every service the very best talent available.

"To show how minutely we have gone into this matter we would state: Before we could decide in regard to the orthodoxy of one minister, whose name was prominently before us, we made twenty-one different inquiries concerning his theology, and as we came to the conclusion that at some future time he might vote in the higher courts of the Church as Dr. Hall would not have voted were he living, we struck his name from the list."

The report then goes into Dr. Purves's ministerial career, the incumbency of his present Princeton professorship, and the power of his preaching to attract audiences, and especially his hold over young men.

"We had several interviews in Princeton and elsewhere," the report says, "with many of the Directors in the seminary and in the university as well as with officers of the First Presbyterian Church there. They seemed to realize that Dr. Purves is just the man we need, and they had no one else to suggest."

The report also mentions the outspoken desire on the part of Princeton people in the church, university, and town to keep Dr. Purves there. It quotes the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, "who probably knows a larger number of the 6,000 ministers in the Presbyterian Church than any other man," who congratulated the committee on its selection, and further wrote: "I know of no man in our ministry who will be able to render you better service or who will exercise a more beneficial service both in the Presbytery and throughout the denomination."

Similar congratulations were received from other ministers. A Director of the Seminary at Princeton was quoted as saying: "There has been no such man in Princeton since the days of Dr. Archibald Alexander, nearly one hundred years ago, and no man would be as much missed as would Dr. Purves."

The men and women in the room looked unusually pleased at this statement and exchanged smiles of satisfaction.

Upon Dr. Booth's statement that Dr. Purves will be in town to-morrow, the congregation voted to invite him to be present at the Christmas festival of the church on that evening.

"Dr. Purves will be present and preach on Dec. 31," said Dr. Booth, "if he accepts the call, and his presence then will be a signal of his acceptance."

Negroes Shoot Planter and Manager.

ROSEDALE, Miss., Dec. 20.—T. H. McLemore, an extensive planter and merchant, and his manager, A. B. Dumas, were shot and fatally wounded to-day by two negroes, Bob and Wash Code. The trouble grew out of a business dispute, the negroes emptying the contents of a shotgun into the bodies of the white men. A large posse is in pursuit.

UNION CLUB GOES UP TOWN.

The Union Club, at a meeting held last evening at the clubhouse, Twenty-first Street and Fifth Avenue, adopted a recommendation of the Governing Committee that the club should purchase a new site at Fifty-first Street and Fifth Avenue, and subsequently prepared the way for this purchase by passing the following resolution:

That the Governing Committee be and hereby is authorized to purchase a site at the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-first Street, at a figure not to exceed $700,000, if it can be secured for that price, and that the President and Treasurer be authorized to sign any contract, when approved by the Governing Committee, necessary to carry such purchase into effect.

The resolution was adopted by a vote of 235 to 120.

The site in question includes three lots on Fifth Avenue and two adjoining lots on Fifty-first Street, making in all a plot 75 by 150. The site is part of the block now occupied by the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, which has recently been purchased by a syndicate for $2,450,000. No action was taken at last evening's meeting relative to the building of the new clubhouse, and there will probably be nothing done in that direction until the purchase of the ground has been consummated.

The Union Club was organized in June, 1836, and had its first house at 348 Broadway. In 1842 it moved to 376 Broadway, and in 1850 to 691 Broadway. The club has occupied its present home since April, 1855.

QUEER DIVORCE COMPLICATION.

Woman, Sued by Two Husbands, Sues Husband No. 2 and Questions Identity of Husband No. 1.

Justice Beekman, in the Supreme Court, yesterday, heard an odd divorce complication, in which a woman and two men bring two actions for absolute divorce and one for annulment of marriage. After hearing the cases Justice Beekman reserved decision.

Annie E. Schwaab sues Charles L. Schwaab for divorce, he sues her for annulment of their marriage, and Samuel G. McCormick, husband of Mrs. Schwaab prior to her marriage to Mr. Schwaab, sues her for divorce on the ground of her relations with Schwaab, who she claims to have supposed to be her legal second husband.

Mr. Schwaab is connected with George Pasco & Co., plumbers on Sixth Avenue. Mr. McCormick was formerly a dentist in this city, but now resides in England.

It appears that the woman married McCormick some years ago. She alleges that after their marriage he had to go to England to escape arrest, and that he left with her jewels and some fine dresses. Then she met Mr. Schwaab, and she claims that she gave him $300 with which to secure a divorce for her from McCormick.

She alleges that she was taken by Schwaab to the law office of Grant Mitchell, on Twenty-third Street, and that he made out divorce papers. She returned to his office, and a man named Collyer, who she believed was a referee appointed to hear the case, took testimony and gave a decree of divorce to Mr. Schwaab. She says that she has never seen the papers since, but that Mr. Schwaab told her that they had been destroyed.

At the time of her marriage to Mr. Schwaab she claims that she and he were both of the opinion that she would inherit money from a childless aunt. She disappointed them, and soon afterward, she says, Mr. Schwaab began to ill-treat her. She charges that he abandoned her in June last. She asks for counsel fees and $25 a week alimony.

In his application for the annulment of their marriage Mr. Schwaab alleges that when he married her on Jan. 22, 1898, he believed that McCormick was dead.

In his suit against his wife for absolute divorce, Samuel George McCormick says that he was married to the defendant in this city on March 6, 1889. Ten years later, says the plaintiff, he learned that his wife was living with Schwaab, on Eighth Avenue, as his wife. He therefore asks for an absolute divorce.

Mrs. Schwaab's answer to this suit makes the mysterious tangle more complicated. She admits that she was married to a Samuel George McCormick, but denies any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to whether the plaintiff named is the same person to whom she was married."

THE REV. DR. ROBINSON DEAD.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Dec. 20.—The Rev. Dr. W. J. Robinson, pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Allegheny and Moderator of the United Presbyterian General Assembly which met at Philadelphia last May, died to-day at Battle Creek, Mich., where he went three months ago.

He was pastor of the First Church twenty-seven years, and was born in 1838 at Argyle, N. Y. He graduated from Union College at Schenectady, N. Y., and took divinity courses at Newburg (N. Y.) and Allegheny Seminaries. In the latter institution he was for years secretary of the Board of Directors.

The deceased was well known as a leader in the movement having as its object the incorporation of express recognition of God and the Christian religion in the Constitution of the United States.

MADE A CHORUS GIRL HIS BRIDE.

George Bowles, Operatic Manager, Married to Miss Jessica Duncan.

George Bowles, business manager of the Alice Nielsen Opera Company, was married yesterday afternoon at the Church of the Transfiguration, in East Twenty-ninth Street, to Miss Jessica Duncan, one of the members of the chorus. It had been known among those connected with the company that Mr. Bowles admired Miss Duncan. It is now known that soon after a divorce had been granted Mr. Bowles from his wife, Babette Rodney, last September, he proposed to Miss Duncan, and was accepted. Their engagement had been kept a secret ever since. The marriage was a very quiet affair, and was witnessed by a few personal friends.

Miss Duncan is a daughter of the Mayor of Burlington, Iowa. Her stage career has been very brief. Her accomplishments as a harpist and a singer led her to display them in vaudeville for a short time, after which a position in Boston was obtained with Hoyt & McKee's company. After remaining with that company for a season she went back into vaudeville, joining the Nielsen Opera Company early this season.

Mr. Bowles has been identified with the business end of various theatrical enterprises for many years. He has a daughter fourteen years old, who is being educated in a convent.

Jesse Metcalf Dies in Providence.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 20.—Jesse Metcalf, President and Treasurer of the Wanskuck Company, and one of the best-known manufacturers in Rhode Island, died to-night, in his seventy-third year. He was at one time a member of the Legislature, and was a Director of several manufacturers' mutual insurance companies, a member of the Union League Club of New York, and the Cobden Club of New England.

HANNA CALLS CONVENTION

Republican National Chairman Issues Formal Notice.

DELEGATES FROM TERRITORIES

Recommended that Six Be Admitted from Each Except Alaska, Which Is to be Allowed Only Four.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The following call for the next Republican National Convention was issued to-night:

"Headquarters Republican National Committee, Washington, D. C.

"To the Republican Electors of the United States:

"In accordance with established custom and in obedience to instructions of the National Convention of 1896, the National Republican Committee directs that a National Convention of delegated Republicans of the Republican Party be held at the City of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, for the purpose of nominating candidates for President and Vice President, to be voted for at the Presidential election Tuesday, Nov. 6, 1900, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it, and that said convention shall assemble at 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday, the 19th day of June, 1900.

"The Republican electors of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Territories, and all other electors, without regard to past political affiliations, who believe in the principles of the Republican Party, and indorse its policies, are cordially invited to unite under this call in the selection of candidates for President and Vice President.

"Said National Convention shall consist of a number of delegates at large from each State, equal to double the number of United States Senators to which each State is entitled, and for each Representative at Large in Congress two delegates at large; from each Congressional district, and the District of Columbia, two delegates; from each of the Territories of Alaska, Arizona, Indian Territory, New Mexico, and Oklahoma, two delegates. For each delegate elected to said convention, an alternate delegate shall be elected to act in case of the absence of the delegate, said alternate delegate to be elected at the time and in the manner of electing the delegate.

"All delegates shall be elected not less than thirty days before the meeting of the National Convention. Delegates at large shall be elected by popular State and Territorial conventions, of which at least thirty days' notice shall have been published in some newspaper or newspapers of general circulation in the respective States and Territories.

"The Congressional district delegates shall be elected by conventions called by the Congressional committee of each district, in the manner of nominating the candidate for Representative in Congress in said district, provided, that in any Congressional district where there is no Republican Congressional Committee, the Republican State Committee shall appoint from among the Republicans resident in such district a committee for the purpose of calling a district convention to elect delegates to represent said district.

"The election of delegates from the District of Columbia shall be held under the direction and supervision of an Election Board, composed of John R. Cotton, W. C. Chase, and L. E. Saunders.

"Such board shall have authority to fix the date for such election and to arrange all details and regulations incident thereto, and shall provide for a registration of the votes cast, such registration to include the name and residence of each voter.

"The Territorial delegates shall be elected in the manner of nominating candidates for delegates in Congress, and delegates from the Indian Territory and Alaska shall be elected by popular convention.

"We recommend that the Territories of Arizona, Indian Territory, New Mexico, and Oklahoma each elect six delegates and six alternate delegates, and that Alaska elect four delegates and four alternate delegates, and the admission of such additional delegates to the convention is hereby recommended.

"All notices of contest shall be submitted in writing, accompanied by a printed statement setting forth the grounds of contest, which shall be filed with the Secretary of the National Committee twenty days prior to the meeting of the National Convention. Contests will be acted on by the National Convention in the order of the date of the filing of notice and statement with the secretary.

"M. A. HANNA, Chairman.
"CHARLES DICK, Secretary."

FIELDING TRIAL ENDING.

Testimony Against the ex-Brooklyn Official—Case May End To-day.

The second trial of Robert W. Fielding, on a charge of auditing fraudulent bills against the former City of Brooklyn while he was Deputy Commissioner of Public Works, continued yesterday before Justice Wilmot M. Smith, in the Supreme Court, and the prosecution closed its case.

District Attorney Steele announced at the opening of the trial yesterday that he would put Daniel F. Doody, a contractor, on the stand, and that the contractor would testify that he paid Fielding 10 per cent. on every bill he audited for him. Mr. Doody was placed on the stand, but he failed to remember any very important evidence for the State. Ex-Commissioner Theodore B. Willis was also placed on the stand. He gave the prosecution little help.

Late in the afternoon Charles J. Patterson, for the defense, made his opening address. It is expected that the case will be concluded to-day.

FEAR METHUEN IS CUT OFF

British Public Alarmed by Absence of News from Him.

BOER POSITION STRENGTHENED

LONDON, Dec. 21.—Nothing has been heard from Lord Methuen since Sunday, and it is feared that his communications have been cut. If this be so, his position is dangerous.

A correspondent of The Daily News, telegraphing from Modder River last Saturday, says:

"The Boer position, already formidable on Dec. 11, has since been greatly strengthened, extending for an area of twelve miles. It is intrenched according to the most modern methods throughout its entire length; wires fences have been placed before all the trenches at every point; guns have been got into position, and there is every evidence that the Boers are well supplied with ammunition. Only a powerful attacking force can hope to make a successful assault."

The Times, in an article from the pen of a military expert, laments the dispersion of the British forces, quotes the maxim of Napoleon in favor of concentration, and regrets that Lord Methuen did not retire to Orange River a week ago.

The latest dispatches received seem to show that the British forces are standing on the defensive at all points. Gen. Buller is ordering the troops now arriving at Cape Town to proceed to Durban to reinforce the Natal column. Absence of news from him has led to a surmise that he is trying to join Gen. White by a flank movement.

A special dispatch from Durban, Natal, dated Saturday, Dec. 16, says it is rumored Gen. Buller called for volunteers to recover the abandoned guns, and that a party issued from the camp after midnight and brought in the guns, which were uninjured.

According to another dispatch from Durban, sent off on the evening of the battle, and which has just been received here, the guns remained where they were left by the British troops and were covered by the heavy guns of Gen. Hildyard's brigade, occupying an intrenched position. The dispatch adds that the Boers have thus far not attempted to cross the river and carry off the guns, while advices from Pretoria, under the same date, say that an official Boer dispatch reports that two guns, thirteen wagons, and a quantity of ammunition were captured, besides 208 prisoners.

Further accounts of the Tugela River battle emphasize the ignorance of the British Intelligence Department in regard to the disposition of the Boer forces. The British were not aware that the Boers were intrenched along a series of low-lying hills, immediately northward of Colenso Bridge, until a staggering fire compelled them to retreat when the attack seemed about to succeed. The Boers, also, were in greater strength than anticipated.

It becomes clearer, also, that the British guns were lost in attempting to get within effective range of the Boer artillery, showing the latter outranged the British ordnance, which, in spite of numerical superiority, was wholly inadequate to reply to the long-range Boer guns.

The British War Office comes in for a scathing denunciation from The Times today for not providing effective artillery. It is pointed out, in this connection, that the longer range naval guns participating in the same attack escaped.

The appeals for yeomanry and volunteers are being responded to with the greatest enthusiasm in all parts of the country. Lord Wolseley proposes that the force being raised by the Lord Mayor of London be called the "City of London Imperial Volunteers." The Government expects the total of yeomanry and volunteers to reach 8,000. Baron Chesham will command, with Lord Lonsdale as Adjutant General.

The papers are now generally joining in free criticism of the Government and the War Office, as day by day fresh proofs of unpreparedness come to light. Special stress is laid upon the failure to provide proper transports, which compels the columns to stick tight to railways, and upon the inferiority of the British artillery.

It is reported that the Queen will abandon her proposed visit to Italy in consequence of the war.

BOERS GATHER AT STORMBERG.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—The Daily News has the following dispatch from Cape Town, dated Dec. 16:

"The Boers intend to make a big stand at Stormsberg, and are massing a great force at the abandoned British camp. One commando of 2,000 consists chiefly of rebel Dutch."

MAKE-UP OF CANADA'S TROOPS.

Minister of Militia Says They Will All Be Trained Men.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Dec. 20.—The composition of the second Canadian contingent to join the British forces in South Africa is no longer a matter of speculation. When the Minister of Militia left the Privy Council room, where the Cabinet had been sitting, this afternoon, he said:

"In the first place, I may say that the expression 'trained men' was used in the cable received from the War Office, and in regard to that point the following cable was received by the Governor General last evening from Mr. Chamberlain:

"'London, Dec. 20, 1899.—With reference to expression trained men, Secretary of State for War explains that volunteers must be good shots and competent riders, but need not be members of any regular milli force. CHAMBERLAIN.'

"Now, as to the composition of the contingent," continued Dr. Borden; "in the first place the entire contingent will be 1,044 in strength. There will be three squadrons of mounted rifles, or 531 of all rank. One squadron and a half will be taken from the Northwest mounted police. The other squadron and a half will be selected from the different cavalry corps and dragoons throughout the Dominion, and from good shots and riders wherever they are to be found, and there are quite a number to be had in Western Canada. The three squadrons will have 536 horses.

"There will be in addition three field batteries, the strength of each being 171, or 513 in all. They will have 393 horses. The artillery will be taken from the field batteries all over the Dominion. There will be no infantry."

GREAT BRITAIN HIRES GERMANS.

Veterans Secured to Fight in South Africa.

BERLIN, Dec. 20.—Despite repeated British denials, it seems to be a fact that British agents are busy in many of the rural districts of Germany hiring veterans for service in South Africa. Several well authenticated cases have been reported this week; but the following incident seems conclusive: The District Court of Hamburg has just issued an order for the arrest of a British agent named York for hiring a number of German peasants in the neighborhood for military service, which, under the imperial laws, is a criminal offense.

There is nothing, however, to interfere with Herr Krupp in the manufacture of steel shells for the British Army. An Essen local paper announces that 25,000 such shells are being made on a rush order and that the men are working night and day.

LORD ROBERTS TO AMERICANS.

New South African Commander Grateful for the Sympathy Expressed in the United States.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—Gen. Lord Roberts, who is to have full command of the British troops in South Africa, accompanied by Lady Roberts and their two daughters, arrived in London this morning, having traveled from Dublin with Mr. Chamberlain. Their departure from Dublin was marked by cheering crowds, but the General made a quiet entry into London. After going to a private hotel, he spent about an hour at the War Office in consultation with the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Secretary of State for War. Then Gen. Roberts returned to the task of packing his effects and interviewing the officers selected for his staff.

When "Little Bobs," the beloved of "Tommy Atkins," received a correspondent he was dressed in the deepest black, in vivid contrast with his snow-white hair and mustache. His dapper little figure was as straight as ever, but the keen eyes that have so often scanned British victory were slightly dimmed by the great personal sorrow that has befallen him. But, in spite of this and the multitude of details that claimed his attention, Gen. Roberts willingly assented to send a parting message to the American people, and gave the following statement:

"Circumstances naturally forbid my speaking about the campaign ahead of me, except to say that I have entire confidence in the British soldier, and that I believe the traditions of our army will be upheld in South Africa.

"For the friendly interest and sympathy exhibited by many Americans I am most deeply grateful. I feel sure the justice of our cause merits this. Though we may be at war, I can safely say that no unnecessary harshness and no acts of inhumanity will mar the fair name of this branch of the Anglo-Saxon race. I cannot too warmly express my admiration for the spirit which prevails in our colonies. The action of Canada will always be a glorious page in the history of the sons of the empire. I look for great things from the men she has sent and is sending to the front.

"The reports which indicated that disloyalty exists in the Irish regiments are absolutely untrue. In the hour of danger my countrymen have ever been among the first to lay down their lives for their Queen and country, and, whether it be against the Boers or men of any other nationality, the Irish soldier will be found loyal to his Queen and brave in battle."

The little Irish General, who goes to South Africa to redeem Great Britain's military prestige, then added:

"You cannot deny those reports of Irish disloyalty too strongly."

The correspondent learned that Gen. Roberts entertains a great friendship for Gen. Kitchener, though they have never served together, and that combination of generalship creates the greatest satisfaction in military circles. As one officer of Gen. Roberts's staff said:

FEARS OF A NATIVE UPRISING.

Another Danger Confronted by the British in South Africa.

CHICAGO, Dec. 20.—"The greatest problem that England will have to face in South Africa," said Dr. A. C. Hammett, who today returned from Mashonaland, in Rhodesia, northward from the Transvaal, "will in all probability be that of the natives and not of the Boers. Even if the Boers are suppressed and English supremacy established in a very short time, the natives will still be left to deal with. They are not causing any trouble just yet, but there are many signs that they will put England in a very difficult position at no distant day. Traders from the north think now that after the difficulties between the whites have been settled the conquerors will find a big native problem on their hands, and that the blacks will have to be conquered all over again.

"Almost all of the British and American subjects in Mashonaland have been compelled to take refuge in kraals or fortified camps, as a direct result of the war. The natives in that part of Rhodesia are very strong, and since the beginning of the war they have become restless. The whites fear them much more than they fear the Boers in that region, and expect at almost any time to see the massacres of 1893-4 repeated and the natives make use of the opportunity afforded by the concentration of British forces in Cape Colony and Natal for a general uprising."

MESSAGE SENT IN A SHELL.

Queer Method of Forwarding a Letter to Mafeking.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The latest news from Mafeking describes a novel method of sending a message, adopted by some Boer, Dec. 4. A five-pounder shell fired into the town that day did not explode. It was opened and found to contain a letter, as follows:

"Dear Powell, (Col. Baden-Powell:) Excuse iron messenger. No other means of communicating. Please tell Mrs. —— mother and family all well. Don't drink all the whisky. Leave some for us when we get in."

The sender's signature was torn off.

BULLER'S DEATH LIST GROWS.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—Revised lists have been received of the British casualties at the battle of Colenso.

They show that 137 non-commissioned officers and men were killed.

BOERS' DEMANDS MODERATE.

European Agents Instructed as to Peace Conditions.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—The Madrid correspondent of The Standard says:

"The Boer Governments have recently intimated to their agents in Europe their readiness to be moderate in regard to peace conditions.

CAPE COLONISTS ARE UNEASY.

Residents of Victoria West Will Oppose Great Britain.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—A Cape Town dispatch, dated Dec. 16, says:

"Five hundred colonists of the Victoria West District have perfected an apparently anti-British organization there, and, as individuals, have openly expressed disloyalty and have threatened to attack the railroad station, which is on the direct line between Cape Town and De Aar.

"The Afrikander Bundites, at a meeting there, passed a resolution asserting that the troops in the vicinity irritate the farmers dangerously. The meeting proclaimed its loyalty, but declared that the conduct of the troops forced the people to use expressions and commit acts which were capable of being interpreted as disloyal."

TO PAY VOLUNTEERS' EXPENSES.

London Raises £25,000 to Equip One Thousand Men.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—At a meeting of the Corporation to-day the Lord Mayor, Mr. A. J. Newton, announced that £25,000 had been subscribed by the large city firms which are contributing to defray the necessary expenses of a force of a thousand volunteers among the City Corps. The Lord Mayor also said that Gen. Lord Wolseley, the Commander in Chief, had accepted the offer of the services of these volunteers.

Lord Rothschild has given £5,000 of the amount raised and Mr. Charles Wilson, the Hull ship owner, has promised a fully equipped vessel, which is equivalent to a gift of £15,000, to transport these volunteers.

The Corporation passed a resolution to confer the freedom of the city on each member of the corps.

Balfour Encourages the Volunteers.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—A. J. Balfour, in his unofficial capacity, has written to the Earl of Haddington, dwelling upon the importance of the movement to raise yeomanry and volunteer forces for South Africa. He suggests, and offers to assist, a public fund to augment the necessarily limited allowance made to the men by the Government for equipment.

Queen's Son May Command in Ireland.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The Globe says there are rumors that the Duke of Connaught will succeed Gen. Lord Roberts as Commander in Chief of the Irish forces.

Great Britain Borrows from Russia.

PARIS, Dec. 20.—It is rumored here that the Bank of Russia has advanced the Bank of England £8,000,000.

Chamberlain Assailed by Bryce.

ABERDEEN, Dec. 20.—James Bryce, M. P., in a speech here to-day severely attacked Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and denounced his "methods, manner, and whole conduct," and said he hoped it would not much longer be possible for him to "do his best to excite hostile feeling in Germany and alienate and throw back and do all possible injury to the closest understanding between us and the United States."

Chicago Swells Britain's Aid Fund.

CHICAGO, Dec. 20.—President Scull of the British-American League of the Chicago Board of Trade to-day cabled $5,000 to the Chairman of the Soldiers' Relief Committee in London, the money to be used for the relief of families of British soldiers killed in the South African war.

Coal Famine in Great Britain.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—One of the results of the coal famine in the Sheffield district, indirectly arising out of the war, is that several important steel firms are not able to get coal even from their own collieries a few miles distant. They will sue the railway companies for non-delivery of coal. One of the great armor plate works has shut down partially.

Aldermen Adopt a Boer Resolution.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Dec. 20.—Alderman Peter Cuneen offered a resolution at a meeting of the Board of Aldermen last night expressing sympathy with the Boers in their war with Great Britain and denouncing England for "desiring to enslave the liberty-loving people of the Transvaal Republic and for destroying their liberties, their lives and their property." It further requested Mayor Dillon to call a public mass meeting to express sympathy with the Boers, and called upon Congressman Underhill to support the resolution introduced in Congress by Congressman Sulzer. The resolution was passed.

Boer Meeting at Academy of Music.

The United Irish Societies will meet at the Academy of Music Dec. 31 to protest against the British war in South Africa. Senator Mason and Congressmen Cummings and Sulzer have promised to be present and make speeches.

TO DIVIDE ERIE COUNTY.

Supervisors Adopt a Resolution to Form Buffalo County.

BUFFALO, Dec. 20.—The Board of Supervisors has adopted by a vote of 25 to 22 a resolution providing "for the division of Erie County and the county property on equitable terms, the new county to be known as Buffalo County and to include the City of Buffalo to the city line, and such other towns as may desire to become part of said new county."

The country members fought the resolution. A motion to reconsider the vote was rejected, 25 to 24.

TO INVESTIGATE GALLINGER.

Grand Jury to Take Up Alleged Violation of Civil Service Law.

LACONIA, N. H., Dec. 20.—The charges brought by ex-Gov. C. A. Busiel and Senator W. E. Chandler against Senator J. H. Gallinger, alleging violation of the civil service laws, will be taken before the Grand Jury next week. The case now is in the hands of United States District Attorney Hamblett. Ex-Gov. Busiel says concerning the case:

"The Attorney General has referred the charges against Senator Gallinger to District Attorney Hamblett of Nashua, who has notified me that the matter can go before the Grand Jury in Concord on Wednesday, Dec. 27. The case is in the hands of my attorneys, and they will take what steps are deemed necessary to have the matter properly presented at that time."

The case is based on the allegation that Senator Gallinger, as Chairman of the Republican State Committee, solicited subscriptions from Federal employes for campaign purposes.

TO ELECT MAGISTRATES.

Republican Leaders to Propose a Law in the Assembly.

A number of Republicans in Greater New York propose, if possible, to make the office of Police Magistrate elective. The movement has been started by Col. Dady, Walter B. Atterbury, and Naval Officer Sharkey of Brooklyn.

Messrs. Dady, Atterbury, and Sharkey visited the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday to confer with B. B. Odell, Jr., Chairman of the Republican State Committee, on the subject, but Mr. Odell had gone to Newburg.

"Yes," said Col. Dady to a TIMES reporter, "we propose to have a bill introduced to make the office of Police Magistrate elective. We would like to have it for all Greater New York, but if we can't get it we will make the effort for the Borough of Brooklyn."

"Certainly," interjected Mr. Atterbury, "and we propose, too, that laymen shall be eligible. The provision that only a member of the bar is qualified to serve on the police court bench is altogether wrong. What we want there is men of common sense. Lawyers are too technical and narrow minded.

"Justices of the Supreme Court are elected by the people," remarked Col. Dady. "Why should not the same rule apply to Police Magistrates? The latter are in closer touch with the populace than the former. I believe we can pass the bill, and I am hopeful of Executive approval. I am going to Albany to-night, but I don't say that I am to see Gov. Roosevelt about this matter."

In answer to queries Col. Dady said that it was proposed by the bill to have seven Police Magistrates in Brooklyn, who should serve for six years at an annual salary of $5,000.

McKnight Not to Contest.

H. Stewart McKnight, who, on the face of the returns, was beaten by a plurality of 13 in the Second Assembly District of Queens County by Cyrus B. Gale, Democrat, has decided to make no contest in the Legislature. His action for a recount of the ballots rejected on account of alleged defects is still in the courts, and Mr. McKnight will abide the result there.

PAULIST FATHERS WIN.

Father Doyle and the other priests of the Paulist Church, on West Fifty-ninth Street, have succeeded in their effort to prevent Frank Campbell, a nephew of "Billy" McGlory, who kept the notorious Armory Hall in Hester Street, from opening a concert hall on West Fifty-ninth Street.

A liquor license for the place had been granted to Frank Campbell, but Father Doyle enlisted the co-operation of Gen. Roosevelt, and the latter called the matter to the attention of State Excise Commissioner Lyman, with the result that the license has been declared void.

DELAWARE CLUB FESTIVITY.

Sheriff Thomas J. Dunn's followers in the Twenty-sixth Assembly District opened the new clubhouse of their district organization, the Delaware Club, at 222 East Seventy-first Street, last night with a beefsteak dinner and vaudeville show, and they were helped in their house warming by about 1,200 visitors, most of them well known Tammany Hall men and many of them office holders. No less than 2,400 pounds of selected beefsteak and 500 pounds of chops were consumed, and with these went gravy, celery, beer, and wine. William Hornidge of the County Clerk's office had charge of the eight fires over which the juicy morsels were broiled, and George Washington Kayton looked after the liquid refreshments. The vaudeville show was an excellent one, and lasted until after midnight.

Medico-Legal Society Election.

At the annual meeting of the Medico-Legal Society, at the Hotel St. Andrew last night, these officers were elected: President—Clark Bell of New York; First Vice President—Dr. George L. Porter of Connecticut; Second Vice President—Dr. T. D. Crothers of Connecticut; Secretary—H. Gerald Chapin of New York; Assistant Secretary—Caroline J. Taylor of Connecticut; Corresponding Secretary—Moritz Ellinger of New York; Treasurer—Clark Bell; Librarian and Assistant Librarian—Howard Ellis and Thomas G. Frost.

Mrs. Fingerhut Testifies.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Dec. 20.—Mrs. Fingerhut, who is charged with killing Paul Roehricht, went on the stand to-day in her own defense. She identified the battering ram which Mr. Roehricht and his party used in breaking down the door of her home, and described the shooting. She said she did not mean to shoot Mr. Roehricht, but merely to scare him away, as she thought he was going to kill her. Her son testified, corroborating his mother's statements. It is thought the woman will be acquitted.

Against Rate Reclassification.

The Committee on Railway Transportation of the Board of Trade and Transportation has forwarded a protest to the Inter-State Commerce Commission at Washington against the proposed reclassification of rates on merchandise by the trunk lines. The commission is requested in the protest to do all in its power to have the reclassification postponed until shippers can be granted a hearing.

Woodruff's Secretary Bankrupt.

Eliot T. Lane, private secretary to Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff, yesterday filed in the United States District Court, Brooklyn, a petition as a voluntary bankrupt. He schedules thirteen unsecured creditors, with claims amounting to $5,632.77, and gives no assets.

THE FIGHT FOR MOLINEUX

John F. Tyrrell Continues His Handwriting Testimony.

MAKES CHARCOAL DRAWINGS

There was another full day of handwriting expert testimony yesterday in the trial of Roland B. Molineux. John F. Tyrrell of Milwaukee was on the stand under examination by Assistant District Attorney Osborne, and confined himself to illustrating the alleged various points of resemblance existing between the various handwritings in evidence—the admitted writings of the defendant, the disputed writings consisting of the Cornish and Barnet letters for medicinal remedies, the poison wrapper address and the writings made by Molineux at the request of Mr. Kinsley, and commonly known as the request writings.

To illustrate what he termed the points of resemblance, the expert drew with a piece of charcoal on white sheets of paper such words and characters in the various writings as were best suited to his purpose. He was asked to do this by Mr. Osborne, and his work was as much of a surprise to the District Attorney as to any one else in the courtroom.

Mr. Tyrrell demonstrated his ability to reproduce any kind of writing by merely glancing at the original. The fidelity of these reproductions was best evidenced by the fact that Mr. Weeks rarely made objections to the copies, and in some instances where Mr. Osborne thought they had not been made entirely right Mr. Weeks came to the rescue of the opposition's expert and said the copies were exact. Even Mr. Carvalho, who did not seem to take much interest in Expert Kinsley's testimony was visibly impressed with Mr. Tyrrell's reproductive faculty.

Mr. Osborne said after the session that he had had no idea of Mr. Tyrrell's accomplishments along this line and had anticipated merely that he would illustrate in the usual manner the points on which he based his opinion that Molineux had written the words on the poison wrapper. The expert, as he made each of the writings, stated that it was impossible that any other hand than Molineux's could have written the exhibits in question, poison address and all.

THE PSYCHOLOGICAL SIDE.

The psychological side of the case was also touched on by Mr. Tyrrell after he had made copies of words from the Barnet and Cornish letters to medical companies, and the copies of these letters written by Molineux at the request of Mr. Kinsley. He said that in his opinion no one except the person who had written the originals could have made the copies from dictation in the manner they were made.

In other words, he advanced the theory that Molineux when he made the copies for Mr. Kinsley had in his mind the originals that the expert says he wrote, and made the points of similarity that were pointed out. Especially was this true, Mr. Tyrrell said, of the address on the poison package.

"You mean by that," said Mr. Osborne, "that while the expert could have supplied the pens and paper and the situation and [using Mr. Weeks's phrase] could have set the scene, the expert could not supply the writer with a brain. Is that it?"

"That is it exactly," was the reply.

"And you are sure of your deductions?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"As sure as any one can be of anything on earth," was the reply.

Mr. Tyrrell advanced the theory that Molineux had a peculiar wrist movement, which was noticeable in all his writings. He said that the writer wrote only so far, and was then obliged to rest his hand and take a fresh start. This, he said, accounted for the frequent breaks between the letters.

Molineux was calm as usual, and smiled occasionally at the theories advanced by Mr. Tyrrell. The jury followed the witness closely, frequent questions being put to him by the jurors. During the examination of the witness Mr. Kinsley entered the room, and took a seat among the spectators.

Mr. Tyrrell on taking the stand was asked at once to point out some of the peculiarities he had observed in the writings he had examined, and which he alleged to be in the hand of the defendant. He said the most prominent characteristic was that much of the writing was vertical without having any of the vertical style usually accompanying such writing.

The dotting of the letter "i" was commented upon. Mr. Tyrrell said in relation to this and in direct contradiction of Mr. Kinsley's statement that the dotting of the "i" indicated that the writer completed his word and often his sentence before going back to dot the "i." Mr. Kinsley testified that the writer, in his opinion, invariably stopped to dot the "i" before completing a word.

PENDULUM OF THE WRITER'S HAND.

Mr. Tyrrell brought out the point that the writer of the poison package address could only write a certain distance without lifting his hand or changing the position of his pen. The distance, he demonstrated, between the first stroke in the word "Harry" to the last stroke in the word "Cornish" and the distance between the initial stroke of the "K" in the word "Knickerbocker" and the final stroke in the letter "r" in the same word was practically the same.

The witness then at length pointed out that this same measurement was found to exist throughout the address, the phrases "Harry Cornish," "Knickerbocker," "Athletic Club," "Madison Avenue," "and Fourty-fifth Street," and "New York City" being of practically the same lineal measurement, representing, the witness said, "the swing of the pendulum of the writer's hand."

Mr. Tyrrell said the base line in each of the phrases or parts of the address on the poison package had a different horizon. It showed, he said, that the writer had put his hand down on the paper and then written "Harry Cornish." The limit of the reach of the hand had been reached in so doing, thus necessitating a lifting of the hand and a shifting of position.

The writer had attempted to replace his hand on the paper in writing the next phrase, "Knickerbocker," so as to form the same base line, but had failed to do so. None of the attempts had been successful, and the result was the formation of six different species of base lines, each differing from the other in from five to ten degrees.

The request by Mr. Osborne that the witness make a comparison between Exhibit A, the poison package address, and Exhibit D, the Harpster letter, brought out a long series of objections by Mr. Weeks, and finally he was permitted by the Court to state his ground of objection at length, and this he did, consuming some twenty minutes, at the end of which time he was overruled and took an exception.

SIMILARITY OF SPACES.

The witness then was called upon to demonstrate his pendulum proof in connection with Exhibit "D," the bogus Cornish-Harpster letter. He showed that "Gentlemen" took up one space and was on one base line; that "A. A. Harpster" was in another space, and on a different base line, "has applied" another space, and showing another base line, and so on through the letter, showed that certain phrases each occupied the same lineal space and was in a separate and different base line.

The witness was next called upon to take one of the admitted specimens of the defendant's writing, Exhibit 1, and compare it with Exhibit "D," and demonstrate if the rules of lineal space and base line applied to the defendant's admitted writing. He first reproduced the word "Gentlemen" by use of crayons from Exhibit "D" and then reproduced the same word from the admitted writing Exhibit 1.

The witness said the writing showed that in Exhibit 1 the hand had been lifted after the words "will you" had been written. The word "allow" was next written. This was his conclusion because of the two phrases being on a different base line.

The space occupied by the phrase "one of your salesmen" was the same and showed, Mr. Tyrrell said, that the words of all the exhibits had the same capacity and penhabits.

Mr. Tyrrell then took up Exhibit "C" and Exhibit "D," letters signed "Cornish," and stated the same peculiarities of space measurement were to be found in them. The same style of letter was used in many of the words, showing, the witness said, that the writer of them had the same general trend of mind, and thus the same general pen habit of characteristics. He also pointed out what he claimed to be pertinent similiarities in the formation of many of the letters, the loops, strokes, and curves.

THE HOOK IN THE "Y."

Foreman Martin called the attention of the witness to the "y" in "truly" in Exhibits "D" and "C," and asked how he reconciled the fact that one had a loop and the other a hook. The witness said the loop in "y" in Exhibit "D" had been added after the pen had been lifted from the paper.

Mr. Osborne asked the witness to show the hook in the "y" in "City" in Exhibit "A" and the "y" in the defendant's admitted writing. This was done, and they were found to have the same hook at the bottom. The witness said that he found the same characteristics in the "y" in the poison package address, the disputed Barnet-Cornish writings, and the defendant's admitted writings.

Proceeding further, the witness said he found in the writings four distinct forms of the word "oblige." He demonstrated in crayon what he termed the "formal oblige," in Exhibit "21." He called it formal because it appeared in the defendant's letter of resignation from the Knickerbocker Athletic Club. Mr. Tyrrell illustrated the "oblige" in Exhibit "C," a Barnet letter, "G" a Cornish letter, and said they were of the same conception and showed the same general characteristics.

He considered this of great importance, because he did not think that more than one person in a million could form the mental conception and physical manipulation that is indicated in each of the words taken from three separate exhibits.

The same word taken from Exhibits "E," "24," and "11" was illustrated in every one, and the same peculiarities, he said, were shown in each. The same thing was done in this word in Exhibits "F," "4," "2," and "25." The words corresponded, he said in all, save in "F" the "b" has a peculiar double base that is slightly brought out in Exhibit "14."

Having gone through with the word "oblige," the witness illustrated the word "gentlemen" as written in the vertical and slanting styles. He explained the points of resemblance between the writing in the two styles.

TAKES UP THE WORD "MR."

He then took up the word "Mr." in Exhibits "D" and "4," and pointed out the resemblances between the disputed and admitted writings. He was asked by both Mr. Weeks and Mr. Osborne if he had not made the initial stroke in the "m" in the Harpster letter too large.

"No, Sir," he replied. "Maybe you cannot see it so large, but the pen started away out there and the ink failed to flow. If you'll take a microscopic glance at this exhibit, you'll find I'm right." It was agreed that he was right, and the work of demonstration was continued.

Mr. Osborne then called the attention of the witness to the word "employ" in the same exhibits. Following a moment's explanation of this word, the word "applied" was taken up in Exhibits D and 4 and the peculiarities shown up at some length.

Passing on still further, the word "confidential," in Exhibits 3 and D, was illustrated in crayon. Several other words from the two exhibits were dissected rapidly by Mr. Tyrrell, each one being much similar to the other.

Mr. Tyrrell next illustrated the initial "A" in Exhibit 4, the admitted handwriting, and "D," the Harpster letter, in the name of "A. A. Harpster." Following that he took the words "Mr. Harry," in Exhibits 3 and A, and drew comparison between them.

Mr. Tyrrell was then requested to take up the peculiarities that appeared to him most striking in Exhibit I, a diagnosis blank. This line of examination was continued through first one exhibit and another until adjournment was taken.

THE REV. S. McCOMB RESIGNS.

Has Been Pastor of the Rutgers Presbyterian Church for Two Years.

At a meeting of the Rutgers Presbyterian Church last night the Rev. Samuel McComb formally resigned the pastorate. He desires to devote more time for literary and academic work. Dr. McComb thanked the congregation for the great kindness he had received at their hands and urged speedy and united action in the choice of his successor.

After Dr. McComb's remarks the congregation passed resolutions eulogizing his work among them, and voicing their regret at his resignation, and appointed a committee to act with the pastor in asking the Presbytery to dissolve the existing pastoral relationship.

Dr. McComb entered upon his present pastorate a little over two years ago, coming here from the Elmwood Church at Belfast. Previous to that charge he had held pastorates at Armagh, Ireland, and Reading, England. He was educated at the Academy of Derry; Magee College, Londonderry; Assembly College, Belfast, and Oxford University. Dr. McComb intends to spend several years in study in Germany.

TWO THROWN FROM A CARRIAGE.

While John F. Roess, a retired merchant, sixty years old, and his sister, Mary, who is a few years younger, were driving along Third Avenue last evening, the horse became frightened, bolted, and dashed the carriage against an elevated road pillar at Eighty-eighth Street. The carriage was overturned, and its occupants were thrown to the sidewalk.

Mr. Roess received a scalp wound and contusions of the body. His sister was cut on the head and her left arm was fractured. Both were removed to the Presbyterian Hospital.

The Roesses live at 159 East Ninetieth Street. They were returning from a drive when the accident occurred.

PLUCKY WOMAN HURT IN A FIRE.

Miss Marie Loweree, who lives at 2,183 Fifth Avenue with her sister, Mrs. J. S. Babcock, wife of the senior member of the publishing firm of Babcock & Co., was painfully burned on the hands and face and her hair was singed in a fire which started in her boudoir last evening, and which she pluckily helped to extinguish.

While dressing for dinner she set fire to a silk toilet table cover with a spark from a match. She tried to put it out, but it soread to a lace curtain and got beyond her control. Then she called for help, and directed the efforts of the servants to check the flames pending the arrival of the firemen. When the latter arrived almost the entire first floor was burning, and it took them an hour to extinguish the blaze. The damage was estimated at over $5,000.

Georgia Woman Burns to Death.

MACON, Ga., Dec. 20.—Miss Lulu Stevens, aged thirty-two, member of a well-known family, was burned to death to-day. She was in a room by herself at her residence, when in some manner unknown her clothes caught fire. Her screams attracted help, but when it arrived she had been so seriously burned that death resulted within a few hours. She was unable to explain how the accident occurred.

Fugitive Cashier Captured.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Dec. 20.—State Auditor Merriam to-day received telegraphic advices that Jeremiah Kendrick, defaulting cashier of the Citizens' State Bank of that place, had been captured in the East. Kendrick disappeared three months ago, $14,000 short in his cash, and his capture was brought about through efforts of the Guaranty Surety Company of New York. Mr. Merriam is not informed where the capture was made. Kendrick will be brought to Iowa for trial.

To Release Neustria's Passengers.

The steamer Neustria, from Naples, which has been detained in Quarantine since Tuesday, because of a report that a some of her steerage passengers had been put aboard without regard to the American Consul's objections, will be released this morning. Dr. Doty has received a cablegram from Naples denying the report.

Japan Signs The Hague Convention.

THE HAGUE, Dec. 20.—The Japanese envoy, on behalf of the Mikado, has signed all the conventions of the International Peace Conference. A Chinese envoy from St. Petersburg is expected to sign certain declarations for the Chinese Government, excluding the laws of war.

THE DEWEY ARCH PLANS.

Women to Aid in the Work—The Big Concert.

The Executive Committee of the Dewey Arch Committee met in Parlor B at the Hotel Savoy last evening. There were about sixteen members present, and William C. Church presided. The members present said that the building of a permanent arch was now assured.

Louis Windmüller, having charge of the organization of a woman's auxiliary committee, reported that already about thirty well-known women had agreed to undertake the work of such a committee, and the concert which will be held under the auspices of this committee in Carnegie Hall on Feb. 8 promises to be a success. Walter Damrosch has promised that the Oratorio Society will sing, and the New York Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Emil Paur, has also tendered its services. Several of the stars of the Metropolitan Opera Company, among them Mme. Sembrich and Mme. Schumann-Heink, have offered to sing at the concert.

Edward R. Johnes of the Committee on Organization of Sub-Committees among the trades and professions, reported that already fifty sub-committees had been formed and eighty or ninety more were organizing. The most active of these organizations, he said, was the metal trade, which has subscribed $5,700, and proposes to make it $5,000 more. The largest individual subscriber in the trade is Robert W. Thompson.

The total subscriptions received by the committee up to this time in cash and pledges is $175,000. The committee has decided not to give out the list of subscribers until the sum reaches $250,000.

An informal meeting of fire insurance men, which was held immediately after the regular monthly meeting of the New York Board of Fire Underwriters yesterday, was addressed by Mr. Johnes in regard to the needs of his committee. Following his address, a subscription committee of fire underwriters was appointed. The committee consists of Henry W. Eaton, William N. Kraemer, J. Montgomery Hare, S. P. Blagden, George P. Sheldon, and Mason A. Stone.

Inspector of Elections Arrested.

James J. Corcoran, an Inspector of Elections in the Thirteenth District of the Tenth Ward, Brooklyn, was arrested yesterday by Deputy Kelly of the staff of Superintendent of Elections McCullagh for alleged violation of the election laws. Corcoran lives at 198 Nevins Street, and is a brother-in-law of John Morrissey Gray, the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Register in the last election. He is charged with registering one William Fields, knowing it is alleged, at the time that Fields had registered in another place. Magistrate Bristow, in the Butler Street Police Court, held Corcoran in $1,000 bail for examination.

After To-morrow—Christmas Eve

ALL ready? Never mind, the store is big and helpful. We can send home quite thirty thousand packages a day, and you'll help us to help others by carrying little things with you, we know.

We can still promise things that need to be engraved—and promise means performance here. If there is any hitch, please enter complaint quickly—come to Mr. Cooley or his helpers, or write.

You have given us splendid support. We gathered over nine million dollars' worth of merchandise for the Wanamaker winter business—for New Yorkers and other millions who depend on us for supplies. The figures sound big, but it doesn't take large spending per capita for Our Public to carry off even that much.

Store will be kept open till Ten O'clock To-night and To-morrow Night. It will be closed at 7 o'clock on Saturday night.

Meantime all is bright and cheerful. The Christmas attractions are planned to please those of good taste, to give little folks right ideas of the beautiful.

The Halsey-Stirling Paintings and Descriptive Talks at 10:30 and 11:30 a. m. and at 3 and 4:30 and 8 and 9 p. m. The exhibition closes Saturday.

Wanamaker Shoes---Some Bargains

The shoes in our regular stocks are made to our order—many of them are of our own designing. The shoe chief is an expert—his "know how" is turned to your advantage. "Somehow or another," said one old customer, "shoes I get at Wanamaker's wear longest." That isn't accident—somebody planned that they should wear, and be comfortable, too.

Do you think that the largest retail shoe business in the world came to us by chance, or stays by us for our delight?

But read us aright. We are not the only good suppliers of shoes—we simply are singular in giving best service for the dollars charged. That's the main shoe store—first floor.

We find that many dealers order good shoes, and sometimes fail to receive them after ordering. And factories have odd lots from other causes. If they are good enough for us to stand by, we take them. That accounts for the Bargain Shoe Store on fifth floor. To-day, these lots—

Men's $3.50 Shoes at $2.30. Just 603 pairs. Box Calf; splendidly and fashionably made up.

Boys' Shoes, $1.75 and $1.50. Depends on the size. Regularly worth half as much again.

Women's Shoes, $1. Not all sizes, but well worth the trouble of trying for a fit. $2 shoes or better.

Men's Slippers, 90c. Kidskin, black or russet. They are reduced because of defects in finish that make them just less than perfect, but do not hurt.

Fifth floor—Express elevators.

Candies for Christmas

Some of the candy boxes are works of art—satin and silk, with meritorious hand-painted decorations. Here is a basket that looks for all the world as though overflowing with fine fruit—it is just a candy box. Some of them are as much as $20, but there are dainty ones for dimes and quarters. These are mostly imported.

But the candies we make—except the chocolates in fancy shapes. They are put up in Germany.

Our candy kitchen is as sweet and clean as yours; and we never yet tried to save money on materials. We buy vanilla beans in thousand dollar lots, while the inferior flavors could be had for a fourth of the cost.

You wonder how we can sell

Five Pounds of Good Mixed Candy for $1

It is safe economy; not at the expense of excellence.

But for table or tree or holiday treat, we can meet your demands.

We've rented the use of two extra candy factories till Christmas, and our methods are enforced in them as in our own.

Two candy stores { Basement, and at 76 E. Ninth st,

Women's Black Cloth Capes A black cloth cape is as useful to a city woman as is a sun-bonnet to a country woman, and is neat and "in place" for almost all sorts of occasions in city or country.

As giveable as a kiss.

At $9—Capes of good black beaver cloth; 30 in. deep; full sweep; Watteau back; collar and fronts edged with opossum fur. Neatly lined. Second Floor, Broadway.

Yoke Silks Here are some luxurious silks—made to be used just for revers or yoke or girdle. Some are embroidered in chenille; some have beautiful designs in white braid, touched off with iridescent beads; this one looks as though fairy-lamp wick had been run all over it.

There are all the pretty ground colors—yes, of course, the best of the pastel shades, too.

Well, beautiful as they are, they must go while they're in demand. Hence—

$2.50 from $5 a yard.
$1.50 from $3.50 a yard. Rotunda.

Book Cases There are two hundred and forty-seven sorts of Book Cases here—a thousand in all, for of the finer styles we've just one. The price range is $5 to $100, and we can make all reasonable deliveries by Christmas.

There are book cases at $6.50 that are 4 ft. 8 in. high and 3 ft. 4 in. wide; with four adjustable shelves. No doors. Finished with moulding at top. These are of oak in golden finish.

There are combination cases at $9.50—desk and book case. Golden oak.

But never mind a list—come and see the cases. Remember, though, that all pieces of furniture look larger in your rooms than in this big showroom. Fourth floor.

Women's Golf Capes

More here—we are doing our best to meet your demands. Golf Capes are as varied as the flowers—that is their charm. These newest ones are $7.50, $9, $12.75 and $15—all American made. You know we have imported ones up to $25.

A word of one of the newly arrived lots—

Golf Capes at $7.50—Of rough cheviot—navy blue, black and brown on the outer side; all have fancy plaid back. Made up with monk's hood (of the plaid); 30 in. deep.

Second floor.

Tissot's Life of Christ

The testimony of the years has been gathered by M. Tissot in his pictorial Life of The Christ. Over five hundred sketches were made by him during his ten years' travel and work in the Holy Land. Over a hundred of these he perpetuated as wonderful miniature paintings in oil—for, as a rule, the Tissot pictures are little larger than they have been reproduced in this work. Le Mercier & Cie. of Paris, are as wonderful in the world of lithography and printing as is M. Tissot as a painter, and think of the possibilities when a hundred of their men devoted their whole time for four years to these productions.

The rest of Tissot's drawings are reproduced exactly in black and white. The architectural designs are wonderful in their detail—so wonderful that we've delivered one set of the work to an architect for his working library.

Tissot's memoranda, gathered during those ten years, throw a flood of light on Scriptural scenes and passages, and is given liberally, as is the Gospel text. It is—

The Most Wonderful Picture Book Ever Made

The picture of the Calling of St. Andrew and St. John perhaps deserves no special study, but let us look at it a moment—

Andrew and John were not in their boats, but fishing after a style now called sweep-net. The north shore of the Tiberias is particularly well adapted for this style of fishing, and even to this day remarkable skill is shown by the fishermen with their nets.

At the time of Christ the Lake of Tiberias, was much frequented; now it is entirely, or almost entirely, deserted.

Tissot says at the time of his visit in 1888 there were not more than fifteen boats to be seen. This is a great change from the time of the historian Josephus, who tells us that four thousand (4,000) skiffs, barges, and other vessels were upon the lake. He also describes a naval battle which took place, and speaks of the numerous boats which surrounded the Roman vessels.

If You Join the Club To-day You Will Have the Books for Christmas

if you give references that will obviate delay in meeting the club's requirements.

Initial Fee, $1. Then in thirty days begin a short series of monthly payments of $3 each. How many? That depends on the expensiveness of the binding you select.

Book Store, Ninth street—but you can use the mails. A subscriber, who after ten days' examination of the work, repents his bargain, may return the books and we'll return the dollar and destroy the contract he signed.

Princess May, $1
Victoria, $1.85

—all of real kidskin; carefully selected—quality sustained in spite of tariffs and in spite of the most rigorous attempts to drive us out of this direct glove business. We own no factory, but we give Grenoble's best maker such orders as justify our control of the situation. To insure a supply of skins we have set to work travelers who in turn employ others who know skins but have no knowledge of their employer. We don't often tell "how the wheels go round." But good service to you doesn't come without worry to us.

GEN. WOOD AT HIS POST

NO LAND RECEPTION GIVEN

Function Omitted Out of Respect for Gen. Brooke—Lawton's Death Greatly Affects Gen. Wood.

HAVANA, Dec. 20.—The welcome given Gen. Wood, the new Governor General of Cuba, this morning on entering Havana, was, according to all the old residents, without parallel in the history of the island. The elaborate display of bunting in the harbor and the multitude of boats and bands showed that the hastily formed Reception Committee had done excellent work. Moreover, there was a heartiness in the cheering that was quite unusual.

Gen. Wood arrived here at daybreak today on the steamer Mexico, Capt. McIntosh, which left New York for this port Dec. 16. The steamer was gayly decorated with flags. From Cabanas Fortress a Major General's salute of 13 guns was fired, and the Cubans from the Punta fired a Governor General's salute of twenty-one guns by the explosion of petards.

Civil Governor Nunes was the first man, after the pilot, to board the Mexico. He was accompanied by Commissioner of Customs Bliss, Gens. Chaffee, Richards, and Humphreys, Mayor La Coste, a deputation from the courts and from every department of Government.

Every launch in the harbor, barges, and rowboats were hired and decorated with bunting. Even a big ferryboat, with a band, was pressed into service. Three bands played during the hour which Gen. Wood remained on the Mexico after her arrival. Then he boarded a launch supplied by the Entertainment Committee, while a salute of twenty-one rockets, each having American or Cuban flags attached, was fired. Much enthusiasm was manifested on every side.

Very beautiful was the display made by the procession of launches which escorted the new Governor General to the shore. Many of the launches towed large and gayly decorated boats. Col. Rathbone, Director of the Cuban Postal Service, was on board the division tug.

A large crowd received Gen. Wood at Machina Wharf, and upon landing there he was greeted with hearty cheers. He was then driven to the Hotel Inglaterra.

During the morning there was a constant stream of callers at the hotel, where Gen. Wood will remain until Gen. Brooke's departure. During the next few days Gen. Wood will only attend to routine work at the palace. He is the recipient of numerous invitations to stay at private houses, but has felt it wiser to remain at the hotel. One of the first callers was Señor Quesada, Special Commissioner of Cuba at Washington, who arrived on the steamer Mascotte at the same time the new Governor General arrived on the Mexico.

No reception was given to Gen. Wood on shore, as the committee thought that to do this might show a want of proper respect for Gen. Brooke, the retiring Governor General.

Next Saturday Gen. Ludlow will give an official reception in honor of the new Governor General from 3 to 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and a Governor's salute of seventeen guns will then be fired from Cabanas.

Gen. Ludlow, accompanied by his staff, visited Gen. Wood by appointment at 10 o'clock this morning. He was immediately followed by Gen. Wilson and his staff. Gen. Wilson came to Havana to attend the ball given by Gen. Brooke last evening. He left this afternoon for Matanzas.

Accompanied by Gen. Chaffee and Lieut. Brooks, Gen. Wood called upon Gen. Brooke at noon, when the Governorship was officially transferred. The retiring Governor General will leave for the United States on Saturday, remaining for some time in Tampa before going further north.

When told of the death of Gen. Lawton Gen. Wood was deeply affected, and for several minutes was unable to converse.

The local papers devote considerable space to the reception, declaring that Gen. Wood is the most acceptable man who could have been appointed to bring Cuba out of her difficulties and into a quiet harbor. The Lucha says:

"His first act is enough to ingratiate himself with the Cuban people, because he declared that he had no intention to issue a proclamation. This is a novelty which Cubans will keenly appreciate, as it indicates that he means to reply upon deeds rather than words. Cubans will feel that no other American would be received here with such heartfelt rejoicing. Our people, of all shades of opinion, will give him all the assistance in their power."

The Nuevo Pais believes that "a bright future is about to commence," and all the papers allude to the extraordinary number of representative men who participated in the reception. Particular reference is made to the presence of Gen. Rodriguez and the aides of Gen. Maximo Gomez. Owing to illness, Gen. Gomez was not able to be present himself.

The Nuevo Pais says: "The respect which is generally given to the dead does not suffice to impose silence upon us regarding the misdeeds of the now defunct Advisory Cabinet of Gen. Brooke, who, in the abuse which they made of power, did not scruple to take advantage of Gen. Brooke's ignorance in legal matters to commit injuries of a personal nature, thus placing the intervening Government in an atmosphere of disrepute."

SENATOR HALE PRAISES BROOKE.

Says the Retiring Governor Has Accomplished a Great Work.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—In the Senate to-day Mr. Hale (Rep., Me.,) had read from the Clerk's desk the proclamation issued by Gen. Brooke in Havana on turning over the civil Government of Cuba to his successor, Gen. Leonard Wood.

"This proclamation," said he, "must arrest the attention of the Senate Committee on Cuban Affairs and of the country. It is a most remarkable statement of the progress that has been made in Cuba. If Gen. Brooke be right, peace and order practically have been restored on the island, and the people will be ready at an early date to enter upon a government of their own.

"Gen. Brooke is to be congratulated upon having accomplished a vast work. It is much greater than I had supposed. I see the dawn of the time when the Cuban people will be able to set up a government of their own. Gen. Brooke, having been displaced, will soon come North, and when he arrives will receive our congratulations upon his great work."

The matter was referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba.

MANY SOLDIERS' BODIES SAVED.

One Hundred in Caskets Rescued from Destruction in a Hospital Fire at Santiago de Cuba.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Dec. 20.—The yellow fever hospital, situated on an island across the bay, was destroyed by fire today. Before the American occupation the building had been used by the Spanish as a pest house, for the treatment of victims of smallpox, yellow fever, and Asiatic plague. During the epidemic last Summer many hundreds of American soldiers and civilians were treated there; but for some time the building had been used as a warehouse for hospital supplies.

The fire was evidently of incendiary origin, as several attempts to destroy the building had been made during the last four days.

Large quantities of hospital supplies, tents, cots, and blankets were destroyed.

The adjoining building, containing a hundred bodies of American soldiers in sealed caskets, ready to be shipped to the United States, was saved by the heroic efforts of the firemen, who went quickly in a Government tug to the scene of conflagration.

A new hospital will be erected immediately on the same site, specifications having been already prepared.

CUSTOMS FRAUDS IN HAVANA.

HAVANA, Dec. 20.—A sensation was caused in Havana this afternoon by the arrest of ten of the Chief Appraisers of the Custom House staff, on the charge of being in collusion with many Havana merchants to swindle the Government out of large sums. It is asserted that the fraud has been practiced for two weeks at least, and probably for a longer period, and it is believed that the Government has been defrauded of many thousands of dollars. Col. Bliss obtained evidence enough to warrant the arrests, and, as he believes, to insure conviction. The swindle was accomplished by a classification of articles under which valuable goods went into cheap classes.

Several merchants are likely to be arrested within the next few days. Col. Bliss has received many congratulations upon the good work of his secret service.

Consternation prevails among many of the principal families of Havana, as the men arrested are well known socially. Several of them belong to the Union Club, the most exclusive social organization in the city.

All assert that they do not know why they have been taken into custody, and that they believe the arrests are connected with the recent apprehension of an alleged counterfeiter. Members of the Union Club are very indignant that their fellow-clubmen should not have been allowed to take hacks on the way to the city prison, instead of being marched there in a body, surrounded by police. Orders were given that the prisoners' friends should not be allowed to communicate with them. Gen. Ludlow, who was appealed to on behalf of the mother of one of the prisoners, made an exception in her case, but this has caused much dissatisfaction among the others.

Those under arrest are Alberto Colla, Julio Mess, José Lass, Francisco Lopes, Enrique Vueltas, Enrique Huertas, Juan Chacon, Enrique Cubas, Pedro Chacon, and Angel Corugedo.

NAVY YARD PUMPING PLANT.

The Secretary of the Navy has approved plans and estimates for the building of an underground pumping plant for Dry Dock No. 1, in the Brooklyn Navy Yard. The idea of building the pumping plant underground was adopted to save space in the yard.

It will be incased within a caisson, so that the machinery will be insured against damage by heat, cold, or moisture. Centrifugal pumps with a capacity of pumping 30,000 gallons of water out of the dry dock per minute will be installed. The machinery will be operated by electricity. The entire plant will cost about $40,000.

GEN. ANDERSON TO RETIRE.

Will Reach Age Limit Jan. 21—Gen. Brooke May Get His Command.

CHICAGO, Dec. 20.—Brig. Gen. Thomas M. Anderson, commandant of the Department of the Lakes, with headquarters in Chicago, will be relieved from active duty Jan. 21, 1900, by the operation of the law retiring army officers at the age of sixty-four years.

His retirement will remove from the army lists one of the most prominent officers of the old school, whose military training was gained on the field of battle in the war of the rebellion. He is a nephew of Gen. Robert Anderson of Fort Sumter fame.

It is probable that Gen. Anderson will be relieved by Major Gen. Brooke.

$500,000 to Repair the Olympia.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—It will probably cost $500,000 at least to repair the Olympia at the Boston Navy Yard. The Board of Survey has reported that the construction work alone will cost $350,000, and it is not doubted that the repair of the engines and boilers will make up the balance of the half million. Fifteen months is the estimated time necessary to complete the work.

Columbian Iron Works Failure.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The Navy Department officials do not apprehend any embarrassment on account of the placing of the Columbian Iron Works in the hands of a receiver, as reported from Baltimore. It is assumed that the receiver will continue with the Government work, and a slight delay is the worst that is apprehended now. There is not much work in progress on account of the navy at the Baltimore yard, the Tingey, a twenty-six-and-a-half-knot torpedo boat, and the submarine boat Plunger comprising all of the naval construction under way there.

JOHN L. SULLIVAN "BROKE."

Ex-Champion Prizefighter, Who Made a Million, Acknowledged Plight on Witness Stand.

Figures prove that during the twelve years he was champion heavyweight pugilist of the world John L. Sullivan earned more than a million dollars, and yet yesterday the ex-prizefighter declared, under oath, in Part IV. of the City Court that he is "broke." The Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company was the plaintiff against him in a suit to recover $1,600 for beer supplied by them for the saloon Sullivan conducted until recently at 908 Sixth Avenue. The case was called on the one-hour short-cause calendar, but, as it was not over within the required time, it was put at the foot of the long-term calendar and the plaintiff paid the $30 costs.

The news that the old champion was to be on the stand brought many visitors to the court. Sullivan gave the brewing company his notes for the beer they delivered, but did not take them up on time, and not long since closed the saloon and moved to another saloon on Broadway.

"It's all because I've always been on the level with everybody that I'm here," Sullivan explained as he sat in court waiting to be called. "I thought they were on the level with me, too, but they put the place on the bum, and I got the worst of it. That's the way these guys always treat the old champ, see!"

Sullivan's lawyer asked if any of the jurors knew the defendant. Most of them smiled, but none of them acknowledged an acquaintanceship with the old gladiator. Sullivan sat uneasily in the witness chair and eyed every one fiercely. He was asked if he had signed last July the notes offered in evidence, and in answer he shouted out so savagely that Justice Hascall and the jury were startled.

"Now, look here, them's the notes I signed, but not in July. I signed them in August. That's them; they're all right, all right. Meyer, the agent of the brewing company, told me and me partner, Gorman, he was glad we were going to sell his beer, and he promised to make a lot of improvements in the place. Well, they kept jollying us along all right, but they made no improvements."

Sullivan was asked by the opposing counsel if he had held a chattel mortgage on the fixtures of the saloon, and was about to answer when his counsel objected to the question. The old pugilist made several attempts to answer in spite of his counsel, but was shut off. His counsel said he did not want his client to be trapped into making irrelevant statements, but when Justice Hascall looked at the burly form of the witness he remarked: "I don't believe the witness needs any protection from this Court." Sullivan and almost every one else in court smiled at this sally.

The examination of Sullivan ended then, and the case was transferred to the long-term calendar.

CASHIER KILLS HIMSELF.

Baltimore Post Office Official Was Unfortunate in Speculation.

BALTIMORE, Md., Dec. 20.—Capt. Louis Schneeberger, cashier at the Baltimore Post Office, committed suicide this morning by shooting himself in the head at his home, on Tremont Avenue. An examination of his accounts at the Post Office has been made under the direction of Postmaster Warfield, and it is said they are perfectly straight. Unfortunate speculations are said to have caused the suicide.

Capt. Schneeberger was fifty-five years old, married, and the father of five children, most of whom are grown. His wife is also living. The dead man was an enthusiastic lover of baseball, and was one of the best patrons of the National game in this city.

Brooklynite Wins an Art Prize.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 20.—The sixth annual exhibition of the Art Students' League opened at the Art Institute this morning, to continue until Dec. 31. There are 268 works on view. The awards so far made include a first prize to M. Jean McLane, Eightieth Street and Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn, for a work in oils entitled "The Quiet of the Day."

Will Build Boston's Pumping Engine.

BOSTON, Dec. 20.—Benjamin W. Wells, Superintendent of Streets, has awarded the contract for furnishing a 72,000,000-gallon pumping engine to the city to the I. P. Morris Company of Philadelphia for $219,400. The engine is to be installed at the sewerage station in Dorchester.

MR. HOAR FOR EXPANSION

Massachusetts Senator, However, Would Not Enforce It.

WOULD GIVE LIBERTY TO ALL

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Mr. Hoar (Rep., Mass.,) introduced a resolution in the Senate to-day declaring how the people of the island possessions of the United States should be governed. The resolution is as follows:

"Whereas, The American people and the several States in the Union have in times past, at important periods in their history, especially when declaring their independence, establishing their Constitutions, or undertaking new and great responsibilities, seen fit to declare the purposes for which the Nation or State was founded, and the important objects the people intend to pursue in their political action; and,

"Whereas, The close of a great war, the liberation by the United States of the people of Cuba and Puerto Rico in the Western Hemisphere and the Philippine Islands in the Far East, and the reduction of those peoples to a condition of practical dependence upon the United States constitute an occasion which makes such a declaration proper; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this Republic adheres to the doctrines which were in the past set forth in the Declaration of Independence and in its National and State Constitutions:

"That the purpose of its existence and the objects to which its political action ought to be directed are the ennobling of humanity, the raising from the dust of its humblest and coarsest members, and the enabling of persons coming lawfully under its power or influence to live in freedom and in honor, under Governments whose forms they are to have a share in determining, and in whose administration they have an equal voice. Its most important and pressing obligations are:

"First—To solve the difficult problem presented by the presence of different races on our own soil with equal Constitutional rights. To make the negro safe in his home, secure in his vote, equal in his opportunity for education and employment, and to bring the Indian to a civilization and culture in accordance with his need and capacity;

"Second—To enable great cities to govern themselves in freedom, in honor, and in purity;

"Third—To make the ballot box as pure as a sacramental vessel, and the election return as perfectly in accord with the law and the truth as the judgment of the Supreme Court;

"Fourth—To banish illiteracy and ignorance from the land;

"Fifth—To secure for every workman and for every working woman wages enough to support a life of comfort and an old age of leisure and quiet, as befits these who have an equal share in a self-governing State;

"Sixth—To grow and expand, over the continent and over the islands of the sea, just so fast, and no faster, as we can bring into equality and self-government, under our Constitution, peoples and races who will share these ideals and help to make them realities;

"Seventh—To set a peaceful example of freedom which mankind will be glad to follow, but never to force even freedom upon unwilling nations at the point of the bayonet or at the cannon's mouth;

"Eighth—To abstain from interfering with the freedom and just rights of other nations or peoples and to remember that the liberty to do right necessarily involves the liberty to do wrong; and that the American people has no right to take from any other people the birthright of freedom because of a fear that they will do wrong with it."

Mr. Morgan, (Dem., Ala.,) proposed an amendment to Mr. Bacon's joint resolution guaranteeing to the people of Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines a republican form of government and protection against invasion.

"That in pursuance of Section 4, Article IV., of the Constitution, the United States will guarantee to the people of Puerto Rico and the Pacific Islands and all other States and peoples within its sovereign jurisdiction and control a republican form of government and will protect them against invasion."

MR. PETTIGREW ASKS FOR LIGHT.

Demands an Investigation of the Spanish War.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Mr. Hawley, (Rep., Conn.,) Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, drew a sharp speech from Mr. Pettigrew (Silver, S. D.,) in the Senate to-day by a motion to reconsider a resolution previously introduced by Mr. Pettigrew and passed directing the Secretary of War to forward to the Senate the full report of the commission appointed by the President to investigate the conduct of the Spanish war.

Mr. Pettigrew declared that this was a most unusual proceeding and demanded to know whether "it is a part of a studied policy to suppress information."

"Is it," he demanded, "along the lines of the suppression of news from Manila, not because it is not proper news, but because of its possible effect on the people of the country? A day or two ago I asked the adoption of a resolution of inquiry that I deemed perfectly proper. It was laid on the table. Was the action taken because the resolution indicated that officers of this Government had recognized the Philippine Republic? Do you think if such a recognition had not been made that resolution would have been laid on the table? The fact is, we did recognize the Philippine Republic, and it was through the assistance of the Filipino vessels that a Spanish garrison was forced to surrender.

"It now seems that there are many things not to be brought to the attention of the people. My belief is that we ought to have another commission to investigate the entire conduct of the Spanish war. We might investigate the purchase of army transports, for which we paid two or three times what they were offered for to others. Is this policy of the suppression of news and facts to be followed for the purpose of re-electing the present Administration? In my opinion it is vastly more important that the people should have all the facts obtainable than that any man or men should be re-elected to office."

In reply Mr. Hawley disclaimed any intention of an endeavor to suppress any facts.

"The Senator from South Dakota does not surprise me," he said, "in his discovery of improper motives in the motion I made. He is the original discoverer of such motives."

Mr. Hawley then said he made the motion simply that the matter might be considered by a committee with a view to an ascertainment of the availability of the matter asked for. Nobody who knew him would suppose he was trying to conceal anything, and, so far as he was concerned, he was willing that there should be the most rigid inquiry into the conduct of the Spanish war.

Mr. Cockrell (Dem., Mo.,) believed that the report of the investigation commission, made by direction of the President, should be communicated to the Senate. That would be right and proper.

At his suggestion, the resolution was reconsidered and the request was made of the President, if not incompatible with public interests, to communicate the testimony and report of the commission to the Senate.

Mr. Allison (Rep., Iowa,) thought too that the Senate ought to have the testimony and report, and said: "I am sure those who made the investigation and the President will have no objection to the publication of the matter."

The resolution as amended by Mr. Cockrell was passed without dissent.

The Senate at 2:50 o'clock adjourned until Jan. 3, 1900.

PLACE ASKED FOR MR. OLNEY.

Smithsonian Institution Would Like Him for Regent.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—At the opening of to-day's session of the Senate, the presiding officer laid before the Senate a communication from the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, suggesting in the form of a joint resolution the appointment of former Secretary of State Richard Olney of Massachusetts, to fill the vacancy on the Board of Regents caused by the death of Dr. William Preston Johnson of Louisiana.

Mr. Hoar (Rep., Mass.,) thought this a most unusual proceeding. It was, he thought, the first time in the history of the Senate or of the institution that the Regents had been prompted to suggest the name of a new member. He thought it would be as proper for Justices of the Supreme Court to suggest to the President who should fill a vacancy on the board.

The resolution was left on the table.

HAGUE TREATY IN THE SENATE.

Convention Signed at the Peace Conference Submitted for Official Ratification.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The President to-day sent to the Senate the treaty negotiated by the powers at The Hague last July for the pacific settlement of disputes between nations and the declaration to prohibit for five years the launching of explosives from balloons. The Senate immediately removed the injunction of secrecy. The President's message was a formal letter of transmittal except that it invited attention to an accompanying report from the Secretary of State, urging immediate action by the Senate.

The Secretary's report is as follows:

The undersigned Secretary of State has the honor to lay before the President with a view to their transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to their ratification, a copy of a convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes signed at The Hague on July 29, 1899, by the Plenipotentiaries of the United States, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, Mexico, France, Montenegro, The Netherlands, Persia, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Siam, Sweden and Norway, and Bulgaria; and

A copy of a declaration to prohibit, for a term of five years, the launching of projectiles and explosive from balloons or by other new methods of a similar nature signed at The Hague on July 29, 1899, by the Plenipotentiaries of the United States and the Plenipotentiaries of the powers represented at the International Peace Conference at The Hague.

The original of each of these two instruments was signed in a single copy which remains in the archives of the Netherlands Government. The Department of State is advised by the Minister of the United States at The Hague that since July 29 the following signatures have been attached to the convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes: By the Plenipotentiaries of Italy on Oct. 12, 1899; by the Plenipotentiary of Austria-Hungary, Oct. 17, 1899; by the Plenipotentiary of Luxembourg, Oct. 26, 1899; by the Plenipotentiary of Servia, Nov. 17, 1899.

In signing the convention the following declaration was made by the Plenipotentiaries of the United States:

"Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions or policy or internal administration of any foreign States; nor shall anything contained in the said convention be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of America of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions."

I respectfully recommend that the attention of the Senate be called to the importance of immediate action being taken on the convention, in view of the fact that a sufficient number of ratifications will soon be obtained to authorize the organization of the tribunal, and the large part taken by the United States in the preliminary work renders it desirable that this country should not occupy a secondary place.

Accompanying the treaty is a signed declaration agreeing to prohibit, for a term of five years, the launching of projectiles and explosives from balloons or by other new methods of a similar nature. It also provides the method of approving or denouncing the convention.

HOUSE FRITTERS A DAY AWAY.

Time Devoted to Filibustering Over an Unimportant Motion.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—In the House to-day the time was occupied chiefly in a filibuster against a motion to adjourn, having been inaugurated by the Democrats and some Republicans in order to give Mr. Grow, the venerable ex-Speaker of the House, an opportunity to reply to some statements made yesterday by Mr. Gaines, (Dem., Tenn.)

Mr. Payne, the majority leader, was defeated on two roll calls. Mr. Richardson (Dem., Tenn.,) chaffed him on his defeat in a good-natured way. After Mr. Grow had made his statement, the House adjourned until 12 o'clock, Jan. 3, 1900.

Mr. Grow, in his remarks, reiterated his contention of several days ago that "coin" from 1862 to 1878 meant gold.

Mr. Gaines replied briefly, and then, at 1:35 P. M., the House adjourned until noon, Jan. 3, 1900.

NO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Chairman Barton Announces the Policy of the Majority.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Chairman Barton of the River and Harbor Committee authorized the following statement to-day:

There will probably be no River and Harbor bill at the present session. One strong argument against the bill is the fact that the engineers' force will be occupied during the coming year with projects already provided for. In many cases plans for improvements are not even completed. In others advertisements for bids have not yet been made. Another fact of importance is the increase in the price of material in the last year. Some of the projects already authorized cannot be completed for the amounts estimated by the engineers.

Of course, the demands upon the Treasury and the amount of revenue are facts to be taken into consideration, although I do not mean to say by that river and harbor improvements are less important than others. It is only because, contrary to the usual custom, the bill was passed during the last session of the last Congress. I recognize, however, that on many accounts it is preferable that the bill be considered at this session. There is so large an amount of detail, and the settlement of disputed questions arising from amendments of the Senate make it desirable to have plenty of time. This is hardly possible during the short session.

Also there are several projects of urgent importance, among them the improvement of the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi, the deepening of the Delaware River below Philadelphia, and the providing of further facilities in the channels between Lakes Superior and Huron. The continuing contracts on the Mississippi River run out June 30, 1900. These are the arguments on both sides, but, as I have said, there will probably be no River and Harbor bill at this session.

APPORTIONMENT FOR CONGRESS.

New Bill Asks Census Takers to Furnish Necessary Information.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—As a preliminary to the apportionment of Representatives in Congress, Representative Crumpacker of Indiana, a member of the House Census Committee, to-day introduced a bill providing that the Director of the Census shall collect the election and registration laws of each State, the number of registered voters, white and black, in each State; the number of votes actually cast in the late Presidential and Congressional elections, and the number of white and colored male citizens in each State of voting age and not among the disqualified.

The information is to be submitted to Congress before Dec. 15 of next year.

TO LOOK INTO ORIENTAL TRADE.

Bills Introduced Into Congress to Appoint a Commission.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Senators Gallinger and Foster both introduced bills in the Senate to-day authorizing the appointment of committees to investigate trade conditions in the Orient. The commission in each case is to consist of five members. Senator Gallinger's bill provides for one Commissioner from the Eastern States, one from the Middle States, one from the South, one from the West, and one from the Pacific Coast States. Senator Foster's provides for two Commissioners from the Atlantic Coast States, two from the Pacific West States, and one from the Middle West.

A bill authorizing the appointment by the President of a commission of five members to visit China and Japan and report on the commercial and industrial conditions of those countries was introduced in the House to-day by Mr. Hepburn, (Rep., Iowa.) The Commissioners are to be one each from the Eastern, Middle, Southern, Western, and Pacific States. The commission is to spend at least one year in China and Japan, and $75,000 is provided for the expense.

"Puerto Rico" the Official Spelling.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The Government has finally adopted "Puerto Rico" as the official spelling of the name of that island, and hereafter all official documents will adhere to that form. The Board on Geographic Names decided in favor of this some years ago, but usage has not been uniform. The board requested from President McKinley an expression of his views, and, in making the decision he says the name should be Puerto Rico in accordance with the custom of the people of the island.

Army Appointments Confirmed.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The Senate to-day confirmed the following nominations:

To be Brigadier Generals—James H. Wilson, Fitzhugh Lee, Joseph Wheeler, Lieut. Col. A. R. Chaffee, Col. J. C. Bates, Col. S. B. M. Young, Lieut. Col. W. G. Davis, Col. Theodore Schwan, Col. R. H. Hall, Col. Lloyd Wheaton, Charles King, Fred D. Grant, Col. R. P. Hughes, Col. S. Ovenshine, I. Hale, Col. J. F. Smith, First California, and Col. Frederick Funston, Twentieth Kansas.

All were officers in the late war, and to-day's action was merely the formal confirmation of their appointments.

Congressional Notes.

The bill, which attracted considerable discussion in the last Congress, codifying the laws of Alaska and providing a code of civil procedure, was reintroduced to-day by Representative Warner, (Rep., Ill.) It is practically the same bill as last year.

Representative Shafroth (Silver Rep., Col.,) introduced in the House yesterday a bill providing for a Constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy.

A joint resolution reported by Mr. Lodge from the Committee on Foreign Relations authorizing N. M. Brooks, Superintendent of Mails, to accept decorations from Liberia and Bolivia, was adopted by the Senate.

Mr. Butler, (Pop., N. C.,) in the Senate, proposed an amendment to the Constitution providing that the Chief Justice of the United States and United States Judges shall be elected by the people. It was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Presidential Appointments.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The President to-day sent the following nominations to the Senate:

POSTMASTERS: New York—Albert Weed, Ticonderoga. New Jersey—Henry C. Mead, Caldwell.

NAVY—M. S. Elliott, to be Passed Assistant Surgeon; E. Carmody, to be First Lieutenant in the Marine Corps.

Fourth-Class Postmasters.

NEW JERSEY—Gibbsborough, Georgianna Clark; Glenview, D. N. Cammeyer.

NEW YORK—Ashville, Daniel A. Neil; Moscow, Charles N. Strobel.

SAMOAN TREATIES REPORTED.

Senate Committee, Despite Bacon's Opposition, Acts Favorably.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to-day authorized a favorable report upon the two treaties negotiated with Great Britain and Germany for the dissolution of the tripartite agreement for the control of the Samoan Islands.

Senator Bacon, one of the new Democratic members of the committee, was the only opponent of the treaty, and he did not seek to delay the reporting of it to the Senate. His opposition was directed toward the acquisition by this country of the Island of Tutuila, and was based upon the contention that the consent of the islanders should be first secured. He was met on this proposition with the statement that the natives were nothing more than wandering tribes, and with the argument that the United States could not afford to forego the opportunity to secure complete control of Pago Pago Harbor, which this treaty furnishes.

Punishment Awaits Samoans.

BERLIN, Dec. 20.—Advices received here to-day from Apia, Samoa, say a slight disturbance has occurred at the village of Luatvanu owing to depredations upon the property of three chiefs who were expelled for refusing to pay the poll tax imposed by the Consuls of the Dreibund. The Consuls have demanded that the guilty parties be sent to Apia for punishment, which has been promised.

FALLOWS SEES THE GOVERNOR.

ALBANY, Dec. 20.—Assemblyman Fallows of New York, as Chairman of the special committee appointed by the Legislature to investigate the workings of the Surrogate's Court in New York County, called on Gov. Roosevelt this morning and submitted the committee's report, together with the recommendations that will be made.

"WHISTLING COON" ON TRIAL.

Eleven Jurors Chosen, One of Them a Colored Man.

The trial of George Washington Johnson of 246 West Forty-first Street, known in "Hell's Kitchen" as the "Whistling Coon," was begun before Judge Newburger in Part IV. of General Sessions yesterday. Johnson is charged with having killed his common-law wife, Roskin Stuart, at his residence last October. Eleven jurors were chosen before court adjourned. Martin Dodson, colored, one of the jurors chosen, is a real estate dealer, and has served recently on several juries.

The "Whistling Coon" seems to have suffered little from confinement and suspense. He spends much of his time in jail in whistling for his own and other prisoners' diversion. He manages to keep from bursting into music in the courtroom by keeping his mouth firmly closed.

NEUFELD JURY SOON CHOSEN.

Mr. Gardiner Pleased with Law Sanctioning a Special Panel.

The speedy selection of a jury to try William Neufeld, charged with the murder of Mrs. Kronman, in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, yesterday was the occasion for a short speech from District Attorney Gardiner commending the statute of 1896, which provides that a panel, out of which all undesirable talesmen have been removed, may be ordered for the trial of important cases.

Six of the jurors had been chosen on Tuesday afternoon, and the other six were soon selected yesterday.

The District Attorney said that he had argued in behalf of the statute before the Court of Appeals and was greatly pleased with its success.

"It will make the rule of practice in the District Attorney's office," said he, "so long as I administer it, that a special jury shall be applied for in important cases of this character."

The trial was adjourned after the selection of the jury on account of a death in the family of Joseph Moss, who is a partner of Lawyer William F. Howe, Neufeld's counsel. It required just two hours and fifty minutes to select the whole jury. The six jurors chosen yesterday were William F. Doolittle, a clerk, of 131 East Forty-third Street; Thomas Alexander, a soap agent, of 156 West Twenty-second Street; Cyrus G. Simpson, a salesman of 17 East Eighty-second Street; E. A. Le Roy, an auditor of 10 West Ninth Street; Henry Fincke, a manager, of 101 East One Hundred and Twenty-third Street, and Charles E. Harvey, a shoe dealer of 215 Eighth Avenue.

The trial will go on this morning.

ALLEGED GAMBLERS CAUGHT.

Anthony Comstock captured five alleged gamblers and seized a large quantity of gambling paraphernalia in a raid yesterday afternoon at 99 Park Row. The evidence was secured on Dec. 13 by Louis F. Dittmann, one of Mr. Comstock's assistants, and warrants for the arrests were issued by Magistrate Hogan in the Centre Street Police Court yesterday. Several court policemen, in charge of Roundsman O'Connor, aided Mr. Comstock in the raid.

The alleged gambling place was situated over a liquor saloon. Upon the arrival of the official raiders at the stairway leading to the alleged gambling rooms their way was blocked by Max Franck. He tried to throw Mr. Comstock into the street. He was subdued after a short but lively tussle and was marched up stairs. So intent were the men in the rooms on the games in progress that they were undisturbed by the scuffle. There were about a dozen players present, and they were all ordered out by Mr. Comstock. In the front room he seized one Klondike table, one double end roulette table, and one red and black table. In an adjoining room, entrance to which was gained by a hole cut in the wall, he seized a crap game that was displayed on a brilliard table. In a closet of the same room he found faro, crap, and bookmakers' "layouts" and another red and black "lay-out." He also seized 5,000 chips and $34 in silver and bills. All the games were in operation except the crap game. Five men were arrested, namely, Edward Connolly and Newton Rogers as roulette dealers, Samuel Floyd as red and black dealers, George Galz as the Klondike dealer, and Max Franck as the lookout.

The raid created great excitement in the neighborhood and about 1,000 persons gathered in front of the place to see the prisoners brought out. They were taken to the Oak Street Police Station and locked up. They will be arraigned in the Centre Street Police Court this morning.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

All this tremendous Christmas buying and incidental Christmas traffic is bringing thoughts of home, of happier days, perhaps, to a lot of people who have become flotsam and jetsam in the maelstrom of city life. It was unconsciously indicated by a conductor on one of the Broadway cars last evening. It was on an up-town trip and the car was filled with people, who were merry in the good, old holiday fashion. The car had passed Twenty-third Street, and was about stopping at the corner above when the conductor stuck his head in the doorway and shouted: "Herald Square Theatre!"

Passengers looked about with a bit of surprise, and a quiet gentleman who had a seat near the door said to the conductor: "Madison Square Theatre, I think you mean."

"Certainly," replied the conductor, who corrected himself, made the proper announcement, and then quietly remarked: "I must have been in the clouds for an instant; you see I was thinking of the old folks."

There was something that was decidedly of the pathetic in that explanation, and the passenger who had noted and corrected the mistake was himself so carried back to the old days that he perhaps sighed a bit in sympathy for the young conductor, who was probably alone in this great city. At all events, the collection of nickels became suddenly ashamed of the temporary weakness he had displayed, and with something like a blush and very much of evident embarrassment tried to brush away the explanation that had come from the heart, as if he did not care to have even the casual passenger know that thoughts of home could come overpoweringly to him who was fighting so hard to make his way in the world. That casual passenger would have thought much more of that conductor if he had only permitted that cry of a home-sick but manly man to have remained unexplained and without an attempt at apology.

"We of Iowa are beginning to put on a few airs, and feel as if we were about to take our place in the world, since Iron has dethroned both Corn and Cotton as the King," said Anson H. Stocking of Dubuque, Iowa, while he smoked his after-dinner cigar in the lobby of the Waldorf-Astoria. "Alabama and Tennessee have been crowing mightily of late, but there now seems to be a chance for us to play a prominent part in the productiveness that has made the people of those States a bit cocky of late. Up in the northeastern part of our State there have recently been discovered great quantities of iron ore, and the State Geologist announced just before I started East that something like 50,000,000 tons of it had been located in one section of Allamakee County alone. Specimens of it were shipped to Milwaukee for analysis and smelting, the result of which was to show ore of unexpected richness and with so small a percentage of phosphate in it that it can be used for Bessemer steel. The reports are that the whole county is underlaid with a bed of iron ore of tremendous thickness, about which no one knew until it was discovered quite by accident by people who were browsing about in that section for some other purpose. The story is that the Federal Steel and Illinois Steel people are both inspecting the territory, and that some of those early on the ground have secured options that are going to bring them untold fortunes. No, I shall not catch the fever; farming as we do it there is profitable enough for me, but I anticipate running into a boom when I get home that will quite have turned the heads of many of our ordinarily conservative Iowans."

With the migration of the songbirds, the hunting season for the Italians and Frenchmen of New York comes to an end, and as sportsmen they hibernate until Spring. But the German gets his best sport at this time of the year. Hare and rabbits are his favorite game, and Long Island his favorite shooting ground. His season lasts from Nov. 1 to Dec. 31, but during that time the east side German finds an abundance of sport, and the bill of fare of every German restaurant bristles with rabbits as its star feature. Rabbits have been in plenty this year, and there has been a daily exodus from town on the early morning trains of men who hunt such game. It is a very rare thing for one of them to return without a good bag, for they seem instinctively to know the haunts of bunny better even than do the natives of the island. Their cooks, too, know better how to make rabbit stew than do the Americans, for the latter never quite succeed in hiding that strong taste that is so offensive to most palates.

It is well worth one's while to go to the southernmost of the new hothouses in Central Park that have recently been opened to the public to see the fine display of Chinese and Japanese primroses. They are now in the full beauty of their delicate bloom, a sort of pearly pink, that it is a treat to the eye to see. One variety is a single bloom, and the other a double one, and with the mass of quaint Alpine violets shown, they make a creditable if modest display. There is also in the central house a banana plant in partial bloom that is a curiosity, even though the blossom lacks the richness and fullness of the flower as it is seen in the semi-tropical climates, where it is one of the most gorgeous of all rich blossoms.

"While traveling about the country," said one of the drummers of a big dry goods house yesterday, "I have noticed the very latest thing in theatrical advertising. A New York manager, who has more companies on the road than I would care to count, is responsible for it. It used to be the fashion to quote a few words of praise from the New York papers in commendation of the attraction announced. But he has changed all that, and the advertisements in the newspapers and on the dead walls have instead a short and crisp quotation as to the merits of the play baldly announced as from the manager of the enterprise. It is certainly novel, and I have been wondering if it was profitable. People generally, it struck me, would hardly expect anything but complimentary words from a man who was advertised as manager of the company. But it serves to make people talk, and that is what he is after, primarily, at least, for when people talk about a play they generally go to see it, if they have a chance."

The builder had just returned from a trip through Riverside Drive. He was pleased with it. Visitors usually are. "Magnificent houses most of them," he said, "but there was one that left a particular impression on my mind. It was on a sightly corner, well up near the end of the Drive. Sturdy, rugged, and roughly finished granite was the material used in the construction, and there was an exceptional air of solidity about it that would impress any one. Yet the whole was capped with a flimsy cornice of galvanized iron, painted in imitation of granite, that was so flimsy and ginger-bready as to ruin the whole business, to my mind. It converted what might have been a magnificent residence into a cheap and tawdry house, and all for the sake of saving a few dollars."

"Take away the man who drags his arm behind him, at the same time that you banish that one who carries an umbrella under his arm, so as to poke your eyes out," remarked the man who is forced to travel up and down the stairs leading to the elevated road stations, "for the one is as bad as the other. Perhaps you don't know who the man who drags his arm is? He is the fellow who always catches hold of the rail on the cars when he leaves, and hangs on as long as he can, to the infinite annoyance of the man or woman just behind him, who would like to get along, but who has to wait until that man with the arm is ready to allow him to do so. He always catches hold of the post at the foot of the stairs and swings about in a fashion that would knock down one coming from the opposite direction. He balks and fidgets, and if those behind him, who are forced against him, dare to protest, he is angry and insolent, and wants to know, 'Do you want all the sidewalk?' never thinking that he is himself preventing a lot of people from getting their share of it. He catches hold of a passing wagon when he gets off a street car if he can do so, and swings himself around in the way, and is generally one of the most annoying nuisances of city life. He is ubiquitous, intolerable, tireless, and, as he will never suppress himself, the police should take him in hand."

MRS. LOUIS F. PAYN DEAD.

Wife of Superintendent of Insurance Succumbs to Long Illness.

ALBANY, Dec. 20.—Mrs. Louis F. Payn, wife of State Superintendent of Insurance Payn, died at her home in Chatham this morning. She had been ill for over a year. The funeral will take place Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock at Chatham.

CALIFORNIA CELEBRATES.

Observes the Golden Jubilee of the State Government.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Dec. 20.—The celebration of the golden jubilee of the founding of California's Government began here to-day. The chief feature of to-day's proceedings was the reproduction of the inauguration of Peter H. Burnett, the first Governor of the State. The part of Gov. Burnett was taken by his son, who read the original inaugural address delivered on that occasion. Gen. Joseph Stewart, United States Army, of Berkeley, represented Gen. Bennett Riley, who was Military and Civil Governor up to the time of Gov. Burnett's inauguration. Other incidents of the day were re-enacted.

Among the pioneers present to-day were twenty, who are now residents of New England. The exercises will extend over two days.

FUNERAL OF LIEUT. BRUMBY.

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 20.—The remains of Lieut. T. M. Brumby, Admiral Dewey's flag officer, were laid to rest to-day in the soil of his native State. The funeral was under the direction of the military, and the service of the Episcopal Church was conducted by Bishop C. K. Nelson.

The body of the dead officer reached Atlanta early this morning and was immediately escorted to the Capitol, where it lay in state several hours. Lieut. Caldwell, the representative of Admiral Dewey, placed the magnificent sword presented Lieut. Brumby by the people of Georgia less than two months ago, on the casket. Among the mass of flowers about the coffin was a great wreath of white roses, japonicas, and carnations, twined with delicate ferns, and bearing a card with the simple inscription, "The President." Another wreath of similar design was marked with the name of Secretary Long. Admiral Dewey and Mrs. Dewey's card was attached to an anchor of roses and violets. A magnificent wreath of colored roses and palms was marked "From Georgia Friends."

The cortège accompanying the remains to Oakland Cemetery was composed of a company of the Seventh Infantry from Fort McPherson, the Fifth Regiment Georgia Militia, the Atlanta Artillery, and the Governor's Horse Guard. The honorary escort, headed by Gov. Candler, consisted of United States Senator Bacon, Mayor Woodward, Lieut. Caldwell, United States Navy; Justices of the Supreme Court of Georgia, and State, country, and city officials.

Mrs. A. E. Brumby, the aged mother of the Lieutenant, was unable to come from her home in Marietta to attend the funeral.

CHILDREN OF ITALY HAPPY.

Singing and dancing were the features yesterday of the annual Christmas festival of the Italian school of the Children's Aid Society in the assembly room of the school at 156 Leonard Street. The room was decorated with American and Italian flags. Numerous presents for the children were strung along the tiers which supported the roof, while a number of pretty drawings and embroidery, the work of the small children of the kindergarten department, formed an excellent background. In all the classrooms were specimens of the children's handiwork, consisting mostly of embroideries and knitting. The school is intended for the poor Italian children of the neighborhood, and no others are admitted. They are taught to sew, darn, mend, and knit, and the very needy are provided with a luncheon at noon. Clothing is given to the destitute, and sick children are visited by the school physician and supplied with nourishing food.

A large audience was present yesterday at the exercises, among whom were Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan and daughter, A. E. Cerqua, E. G. Fabbri, and Lawson N. Fuller.

The exercises began with the salutation of the American flag. This was followed by a prayer in which the whole school joined. A recitation by one of the children and a carol were liberally applauded. The small children of the kindergarten department took part in a dumbbell drill. They were led by a child smaller than the rest, and were enthusiastically received. Then there was an Italian dance. "Santa Claus" brought the affair to a close. Though the larger children knew of his coming from past experience, the smaller ones did not, and clapped and stamped their feet energetically when he was seen entering the door. The dolls, gifts of Mrs. Morgan, and toys were then distributed among the children.

The Duane Street school also held its exercises yesterday. Clothing and other necessaries will be distributed among the children at both schools to-day.

NO PARDON FOR McLAREN.

Efforts of the Little Daughter of the Wife Murderer Fruitless.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 20.—The Board of Pardons to-day refused the application of Thomas McLaren for a pardon. McLaren was sentenced from Hudson County to serve twenty years for wife murder. His case has been made interesting from the fact that his ten-year-old daughter, Jennie, who recently heard of his incarceration, has been making efforts to secure his release.

About ten days ago she visited the Governor at his law office at Elizabeth, and pleaded for her father's pardon. Since then she has been in Trenton, and has made the same appeal to the other members of the pardon court. McLaren is suffering from lung trouble, and this was urged as one reason for his pardon.

RELIEF FROM THE TREASURY.

It is very generally understood, we suppose, that there are only two ways of getting money out of the United States Treasury. One is to pay it out as authorized in the appropriations of Congress. The other is to buy or redeem bonds with it.

It is not so generally understood that when the Secretary, in his efforts to relieve a money stringency, offers to increase the Government deposits in the designated banks he must take the money he deposits from the daily receipts of the Treasury before it has been added to its balance. That is, he must take it before it goes into the Treasury accounts, because he cannot take it for that purpose afterward. For this reason Secretary GAGE takes from the internal revenue receipts, amounting to something like a million a day, the money he is now depositing in the New York banks to relieve the pressure on the market.

This is a valuable measure of relief, but it is obviously not quick enough in its operation to meet the needs of a sudden and great emergency. If the Government has only a million a day to divide among several banks, its help, though useful in tending to restore confidence, would not add very rapidly to the depleted stock of money. A currency panic would either be over or beyond control before the relief would become effective.

There are likewise two points about the Secretary's recent offer to buy $25,000,000 of bonds that are possibly not understood by the public. Only $20,000,000 of bonds have been tendered under that offer. People ask why the other $5,000,000 were not rushed in to get money to relieve the "panic." There are two reasons. One is that at this season of the year capitalists and institutions like to convert their wealth so far as conveniently possible into Government bonds and to keep it thus invested for a time to escape taxation. A shameful and dishonest evasion, says the stern commentator. Very likely, but we are at present recording the observed phenomena of capitalism, not delivering a homily on the duty of the upright citizen. The desire to retain the bond investment as a temporary shelter from the exactions of the assessor, then, works against the complete success of the Secretary's offer to buy bonds. The other reason why bonds are not offered up to the full amount is that in the Currency bill which has just passed the House and is now in the Senate, a plan of bond redemption is provided under which the holder would receive a slightly higher price than that offered by Secretary GAGE. The legislative department of the Government is bidding against the executive, and has outbid it. Is it not natural that the bondholder should want to wait for the better bargain?

The conclusion from these observed facts is that Treasury relief for money stringencies in Wall Street must be early and in sufficient volume to be effective. The determination of the volume, within reasonable limits, and also of the price which the market is willing to pay for relief, might well be left to the natural laws of trade. If, instead of offering to buy bonds at a price fixed by himself and stated in the offer, the Secretary of the Treasury should invite tenders of bonds up to, say, twenty-five or fifty millions, agreeing to accept, up to a certain amount, the lowest satisfactory offers on his desk each day, either freshly made or left over after the lowest offers of the previous day had been accepted, the volume and the prices of the tenders of bonds would constitute an automatic measure of the needs of the market. If the market was bare of funds and rates were soaring, the offerings would be liberal and low. The Street would ask and receive the amount of relief it needed. The Secretary's chief care then would be to make sure that his offer was made early enough to accomplish its most beneficial purpose of averting a stringency altogether. The effect of such an offer upon public feeling would be highly curative. The certainty that millions could be had if it was worth while to ask for them would tend powerfully to restore confidence.

THE WAR AND BRITISH POLITICS.

Doubtless the British public is looking for a scapegoat. Such a quest is mere human nature. Also it is one of the wholesome checks upon the degeneration of democracy into demagogy. It is the business of a responsible statesman to know more than the people he represents about the dangers of the courses which they desire. When he brings his country to grief by following the demands of his followers they turn upon him and rend him. And quite right. If he does not know more than his followers, or if he has not the courage to withstand their demands on the strength of his superior knowledge, he is not fit to be a leader.

Sir MICHAEL HICKS-BEACH seems to have been marked out for sacrifice. In that case, he is a pure and simple scapegoat. Apparently he did not see his way to disturbing his budget for the sake of making preparations for a war which he, in common with everybody else, believed was going to be a small war. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN at Leicester said it was a big war, but neither he nor anybody else, at least anybody else on the Ministerial side, said so before it began to be actually fought. If Sir MICHAEL is actually made the scapegoat he will go into the wilderness with the consciousness of bearing the sins of a good many other people.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN'S position is different. He has undoubtedly been the most conspicuous advocate for war, the Englishman who has done most to excite the antagonism of the Englishmen who believed that war might be averted. The same diplomatic methods he used with the Boers he has been using since. It is a curious fact that representatives of English opinion so wide apart as The Spectator, The Saturday Review, and The London Times, which last is described by The Saturday Review as the special organ of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, should have been devoting themselves to deprecating his Leicester speech or explaining it away. He is the natural and necessary target of the Opposition; and there is this peculiarity in the position he holds in the Conservative Party that he holds it on sufferance and as an "outsider." It is not guessing at any secrets, but merely pointing out a natural antagonism to say that the crew of her Majesty's Government would be delighted to throw him overboard as their Jonah in response to a reasonably strong demand on the part of the passengers. But his personal force is not to be denied. Whether he is to be chosen to go or not, it seems highly probable that the Ministry will be reconstructed as the result of the events of the last few weeks.

AN EDUCATIONAL PLUM.

To create a ten-thousand-dollar office and then put it absolutely outside of politics is an undertaking beyond the powers of any save the most resolute and celestial-minded of men. Some reformers tried it at Albany last week and their adamantine virtue became as soft as beeswax before that cruel temptation. They failed and fell. No doubt they struggled hard. We feel sure that they wheedled themselves and each other into the belief that they were acting from good motives for right ends. Yet the ugly fact remains that they have made a political "plum" of the office of Chancellor of the University, whose incumbent is to be the executive head of the educational system of the State.

A worthier result had been confidently expected of the labors of the commission appointed by Gov. ROOSEVELT to devise plans for unifying the educational system. The Board of Regents and the Superintendent of Public Instruction are two heads to one body. They often disagree. It is now proposed that the two be made one. The Governor's commission was to find a way. The substance of the plan it has recommended is set forth in a document submitted to the Governor, from which we quote:

> The commission has agreed upon a plan of unification, which provides for the establishment of a Department of Education, consisting of the University and the Department of Public Instruction as heretofore existing. The executive head of this department is to be called Chancellor of the University, and he is to have all the executive powers now vested in the Superintendent of Public Instruction and in the Regents of the University. The university is continued as the legislative head of the department, the present Board of Regents remaining undisturbed as to its personnel, with the exception that the Lieutenant Governor, the Secretary of State, and the Superintendent of Public Instruction are no longer to be ex officio Regents. All Regents above the age of seventy years are hereafter to be Honorary Regents, with all the privileges that members of the board have, but with no vote. No vacancy shall hereafter be filled in the board until the number has been reduced below fifteen. Hereafter vacancies are to be filled by appointment of the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Chancellor shall be elected by the Regents. . . . The first Chancellor is to be appointed by the Governor within twenty days after the passage of this act, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. He shall hold office for eight years at an annual salary of $10,000.

The act embodying these suggestions should be entitled "An Act to Reduce the Board of Regents to a State of Innocuous Desuetude." That would be an honest title, that is the plain intent of the plan.

The office of Regent is a Constitutional one. They are elected by the Legislature in the same manner as United States Senators. They are the only State officers who hold office for life. They serve without pay. They have supervisory power over the colleges, academies, libraries, and other educational institutions belonging to the University of the State of New York. They establish examinations and confer diplomas and degrees. The provisions of the Constitution and of the law relating to the board and its functions reveal the plain intent of the people to intrust the higher educational system of the State to a body which would always be composed of men chosen for their wisdom and fitness and who would be free from the entanglements of politics. The office of Regent has been an office of dignity. If the Department of Public Instruction is merged with the board and if the Chancellor, with his greatly enlarged powers, is chosen by the Regents, it will be an office of much power and responsibility. But if the ideas of the Governor's commission shall prevail the Board of Regents will become a board of clerks. The office is useless if its incumbents are to be treated in this way. It would be vastly more honest and straightforward to submit a Constitutional amendment abolishing it altogether, leaving it to the Legislature to authorize the Governor's Chancellor to hire his necessary help.

But if the recommendations of the commission are bad its apologies for them are worse. We reprint a passage from the report:

> The power and dignity of the Board of Regents have been increased, and it is hoped that its general efficiency will be promoted by the rule making members above the age of seventy honorary members with all powers and privileges, but without the duty or responsibility of a vote. This preserves intact the personnel of the present board. It gives to the State and to the university the advantage of the counsel and experience of every member once appointed, and preserves all the advantages of life tenure, chief among which is the removal of the action of the board from the influence of partisan politics. On the other hand, it has been deemed wise that the first Chancellor, upon whom will devolve the responsibility of starting, so to speak, the machinery now created, should be appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, rather than by a board no member of which was elected with reference to this duty. In this manner the jealous care with which the people regard all measures relative to the management of their public school system is duly safeguarded.

Olly Gammon outdone! We put the old fogies on a back seat, where they will not be bothered with the "duty or responsibility of a vote," and we strip the rest of the board of all real power for eight years. Then we say, "the power and dignity of the Board of Regents have been increased." We give to a Governor of our party the power to appoint the incumbent of this ten-thousand-dollar office, and as we think that in about eight years a Democrat may see the inside of the Executive Chamber, we provide that then the power to appoint the Chancellor shall revert to the board. And "in this manner the jealous care with which the people regard all measures relative to the management of the public school system," and so on ad nauseam.

If the Board of Regents is unworthy of confidence, why not frankly say so and provide for its reorganization? The handing over to the Governor of powers which it is plain the board should possess, if there is to be a board, is vicious in principle and bad as a precedent. If there happens to be a Black in office eight years from now, with an obedient Legislature, the trick will be repeated and then we shall see "a fine old educational mastodon" climb into the Chancellorship.

This plan recommended by the Governor's Commissioners won't do, unless Gov. ROOSEVELT wants to take the responsibility of putting the school system into politics. Ex-Judge JOSEPH F. DALY and Mr. MELVIL DEWEY supported in the commission an amendment giving the power of appointing the Chancellor to the Regents. If that method should be adopted, no politician high or low could ever approach the executive head of the school system with a demand for patronage. That is the logical and proper way of choosing the Chancellor. It is the only safe way.

BRIDGES AND TUNNELS.

Of course, it is greatly to be wished on many accounts that a higher grade of intelligence, not to speak of integrity, could be obtained for the Municipal Assembly. Since that is out of the question the dictates of experience point to the solution revived by the Controller last year, that the Municipal Legislature be abolished. The earnestness with which the framers of the charter insisted upon this Legislature recalls the remark of the excellent Dr. JOHNSON about the remarriage of the widower, "It is the triumph of hope over experience."

It is no wonder that the Controller should be made the victim of his sensible and public-spirited suggestion, on the part of Municipal Assemblymen of the baser sort. Doubtless there is some spice of personal animosity to the Controller in the debate in the Council on the resolution once adopted by that body, asking the Board of Estimate to appropriate $50,000 to investigate the practicability and cost of a tunnel from Whitehall Street to South Brooklyn. But the debate was nevertheless highly illuminative. Councilman OAKLEY blandly and unconsciously submitted his intellect to the examination of his fellow-citizens. The Councilman explained that he "stood with the Mayor," that he "believed in bridges as against tunnels," and warned his colleagues that $50,000 spent in investigating the respective merits of the two schemes would be "$50,000 wasted."

What can you do with a man like that? It has been observed that a main advantage of knowing anything is that you thus know what knowledge is, and that you have a measure of your ignorance about the things you do not know. This advantage has been denied to Councilman OAKLEY. He began by announcing that he believed in bridges as against tunnels and quite ignoring that no human being would give five cents for his belief on that subject, and then he went on to say that any money spent upon an attempt to enlighten his ignorance would be "wasted." That may be true and the truth of it would be a reason why a man who makes up his mind in blank ignorance and refuses to have his ignorance dispelled should not be a municipal legislator.

When you come to think of it, it is rather awful that the destinies of a great city should be committed to people of this kind. But it is more deplorable that a man of this kind should be the Mayor of the city than that he should be one of many members of its Municipal Assembly. And, if Mr. VAN WYCK does not look out, his fellow-citizens will put him in the same category, upon this subject of bridges and tunnels, with Councilman OAKLEY, as a willfully ignorant man who refuses to be enlightened. The Mayor, with whom the Councilman "stands," is in favor of spending thirty millions upon two bridges. The Controller has expressed a doubt whether the object to be attained by the construction of these bridges cannot be more effectively and more cheaply attained by the construction of a greater number of tunnels, and he has adduced expert evidence to show that his doubts are well founded. To spend $50,000 in making sure that you are not going to waste thirty millions, or half or a quarter of that sum, seems to be good economy, to everybody above the intellectual grade of Councilman OAKLEY. The Mayor is well known to be a stubborn person. But really he ought to be capable of seeing that it is to nobody's interest so much as to his own that he should retire from a position which is so clearly untenable as that he has taken upon this question.

MENELEK AND GREAT BRITAIN.

A dispatch from Rome makes the startling assertion that the Negus of Abyssinia is preparing to strike Great Britain a blow in the Soudan. A dispatch from London informs us that the news has caused much uneasiness there. All this might have been expected. It is even to be wondered at that the announcement is so tardy in its arrival. Its sequel, too, is easy to guess. Before long we shall doubtless hear from the same source that French officers are rushing to enroll themselves in MENELEK'S army and that Prince HENRI D'ORLEANS has been made chief of staff. But all this need alarm nobody. The simple truth is that certain Italian officers, who have the entry to the houses of the English colony in Rome, have been talking again.

These officers, who assisted the ill-fated BARATIERI in his campaign against the Abyssinians, together with certain officials that were thrown out of employment when the Crispi Government fell, form an alarmist clique, which hates France as bitterly as it does the Negus. Their one aim in life seems to be to endeavor to play off the English against one or the other, or against both. At the time of the Fashoda incident they filled the heads of the British correspondents full of the most extraordinary tales: The Negus was on the march to aid poor MARCHAND; the Negus was preparing to assert his claim to the right bank of the Nile. The harmless boasts of that poseur-explorer, Prince HENRI D'ORLEANS, and his ridiculous mission to MENELEK were turned into prophecies of the most direful import for Great Britain. Then came the Anglo-French convention, by which France secured practical sway over the Tripoli hinterland, and the alarmists retired in humiliation and disgust. They refused to give any more exclusive Abyssinian news to their perfidious English friends. Now, apparently, all has been forgiven. Their long silence has rather improved their mischief-making propensities.

The history of the British operations in East Africa has almost removed the idea of an attack by the Negus to the realms of the impossible. For more than twenty years, together and separately, the Abyssinians and the British have been fighting a common foe—the dervishes. So anxious was MENELEK to have the dervish power exterminated and so positive was he that the Anglo-Egyptian army alone could do it that he paid no more attention to the solicitations of Prince HENRI D'ORLEANS than he did to the official messages from the French Government. He knows now that it is only a question of a few years, possibly a few months, before the Nile railway system will extend through Kassala, thus placing his country in direct communication with the civilization and commerce for which he has waited and longed with so much patience and wisdom. The fact that the British-Abyssinian treaty of May 14, 1897, is about, and for the first time, to render mutual benefits to Egypt and to the empire of the Negus, should alone banish any idea that MENELEK is "preparing to strike Great Britain's power in the Soudan."

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—That bodies nominally representative are more than occasionally composed of persons quite lacking in both ability and inclination to express any except their own private and inconsequential opinions is a phenomenon lamentably familiar to us all. It is still an interesting one, however, and sometimes the examples of misrepresentation are amusing enough or irritating enough to deserve special attention. Notable for both these reasons was the action taken this week by the New Rochelle Board of Aldermen with respect to the war in South Africa. Of course a vast majority of the inhabitants of New Rochelle, like the vast majority of average Americans everywhere, feel a theoretical sympathy for the Boers as a weak people making a brave struggle for independence against a strong one, but there is not the slightest excuse for believing that there is a general failure in the little city to see that the success of the British is not less desirable than inevitable. Yet the Aldermen, neglecting their legitimate and sufficient business, devoted a lot of time not their own to the presentation, eulogizing and adoption of a resolution to the effect that Great Britain's course is "an attack on the lives, liberties, and property of the Transvaal Republics," and "an outrage on civilization." It is to be hoped that distant observers—in London, say—will not ascribe any undue importance to this silly incident. It means nothing except that there is in New Rochelle a little group of men who, so far as they are not professional politicians of the smallest sort, are professional haters of England, with a good supply of ready-made phrases always ready for use in the safest sort of warfare. Such folks are very much at home—more's the pity!—in the aldermanic boards of this country, and the chances are that if the members of all these curious assemblages were to be polled on the question whether or not the United States ought to declare war against England before 10 o'clock this morning, the vote would be overwhelmingly in the affirmative. But the chances are, too, that the United States would pay as little regard to the advice of all its Aldermen as it will to that offered by the queer City Fathers of our northern suburb.

—Mingled with nearly all of the innumerable expressions of sorrow for the death of Gen. LAWTON, one hears references to his recklessness in exposing himself to danger, and often these references are critical almost or quite to the point of condemnation. This view of conduct like that for which LAWTON was famous is natural enough, and there would be no trouble whatever in defending an officer of high rank who guarded himself more carefully from the bullets of the enemy, but that is not really proof that the heroic leader whose loss we are all mourning was in any true sense of the word "reckless." It is all a question of the point of view. One man might justly decide that he could be of more use to his country by keeping out of range in a position comparatively distant from the movements of his troops. Another as reasonably may see his greatest value in the influence he can exert by personal example and actual leadership. Consciously or unconsciously—doubtless temperament has much to do with such things—LAWTON long ago settled this ever-recurring problem as regards his own case, and ever since it had been habitual for him to ignore the possibility of death—for himself. It has never been charged that he needlessly imperiled the lives of his soldiers. And, after all, it can hardly have been by mere luck that he emerged from so many battles untouched by steel or lead. Obviously, he took risks that he might have avoided, but just how many more it would be difficult to tell. In an actual engagement what is called cover gives little security, and men are killed, no matter what posture they assume. Beyond any doubt, LAWTON attained direct, practical results by his "recklessness." He inspired others with his own courage, with his own willingness to do and die, and on many and many an occasion with his own ability to do and die. It is cruelly unfair even to hint that what accomplished so much was either unnecessary or useless. Bravado will stand no such tests as can be applied to the lifelong self-forgetfulness of Gen. HENRY W. LAWTON.

—Anxiety fills the mind of The London Saturday Review. In this country and its own it sees a tendency toward deluding sentimentalism—toward a misinterpretation of facts and the substitution therefor of pretty fancies. "We may repeat for the hundredth time," it says, "that the United States will be friendly to us just so long as it suits her material interests to do so. Hard-headed Yankees believe that our friendship for them will be of the same duration." That is undoubtedly true, in a way, but it is not quite necessary to repeat it a hundred times, for not everybody likes to admit that between nations interested friendships are the only ones possible. Truths are not all or necessarily pleasant. The Saturday Review, however, always did have a hankering to make itself disagreeable, and apparently just to show that it hasn't changed in the new era of good feeling, it runs on after this fashion in the effort to prove its axiom: "The unsettled Alaskan boundary is proof enough that our view is correct. We are not going to throw over our Canadian 'clients' to please the United States, nor will that Government offend its 'clients' of the Pacific States, all vaporings notwithstanding. A good understanding with America will grow up as we recognize the identity of our commercial interests in many parts of the world. We value American good-will, and precisely because we do value it we hope our enthusiasts will moderate a zeal which is rapidly making their country as well as themselves a laughing stock." And yet people wonder that sound sense is not more popular!

WHAT BOER GOVERNMENT IS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On Dec. 10 you published a few questions which I addressed to the advocates of the Boers. Several gentlemen have written to you, saying that they wanted permission to answer these questions; but not one of them has answered them. Instead of doing so, they ask questions of a different kind themselves, or else indulge in mere declamation. It therefore remains for me to answer the questions myself.

In doing so, I shall state only unquestionable facts. Those who desire to find chapter and verse, as authority for these statements, can do so by reading two books: Fitzpatrick's "Transvaal," written by an Irishman, on the anti-Boer side, and "Oom Paul's People," written by Howard C. Hillegas, exclusively in favor of the Boers and avowedly suppressing all statement of any wrongful acts done by the Boers. Nevertheless, the worst points against the Boers will be found in Mr. Hillegas's book.

1. In 1884 Paul Krüger was in London. He was so poor that he could not pay his hotel bill; and it was paid for him by a generous Englishman. He then expressly and publicly invited Englishmen and Americans to settle in the Transvaal and to conduct mining there.

2. Mr. Krüger afterward sold one of his own farms to Englishmen for $500,000, paid in gold. His friends and neighbors sold other farms at even greater prices, receiving, altogether, from foreign settlers, (principally English, although including a considerable number of Germans, Frenchmen, and Americans,) many millions of dollars.

3. These foreign settlers produce every dollar's worth of wealth which can be exported from the Transvaal, and every dollar in excess of what will suffice for a very bare and dirty existence to the old residents. Every dollar of the wealth now possessed by Mr. Krüger, his sons-in-law, his officials, and indeed any part of the Transvaal population, has been produced by these settlers.

4. The taxes levied annually in the Transvaal have exceeded $20,000,000. Nine-tenths of this amount have been collected from the foreign settlers, whom Mr. Krüger invited into the country.

5. No appreciable part of these taxes is expended for the benefit of the foreign settlers. If this sum were equally divided among all the Boers, it would furnish an annual income of about $2,000 for each family, which would pay three times over all their living expenses.

6. No such equal division is made, but half these taxes have been spent in making preparation for war, and the other half devoted to the payment of enormous salaries to and jobs for Mr. Krüger, his sons-in-law, friends, and political supporters. Mr. Krüger himself has avowedly received $35,000 a year salary, while, on repeated occasions, sums of $15,000 and $25,000 have been paid out of taxes for his direct and exclusive benefit, as appears by public records. How much more has been spent without public record can only be guessed. His son-in-law and private secretary possesses (so says Mr. Hillegas) a single house costing $250,000, and rolls in wealth besides, as he must, to support such a house.

7. The official records in a Transvaal lawsuit, arising upon a quarrel between two sets of Boer plunderers, show that every Boer official worth bribing, including Krüger's son-in-law, received bribes from a Boer railroad company. The amount of each bribe was set forth in a bill of particulars filed in open court. Not one of these men ever denied the receipt of these bribes.

8. The foreign settlers, exclusively, built Johannesburg; a fine town, with (formerly) 50,000 inhabitants. They were not merely denied any right to govern that city; they were denied any municipal government whatever. This is proved, not only by the explicit statements of Mr. Hillegas, the American representative of the Boers, but also by a proclamation of Paul Krüger himself, dated in January, 1896, a copy of which I have. Mr. Hillegas states that not $5 could be expended in repairing a road or a bridge without first receiving express authority from Pretoria.

9. As a consequence of this total lack of good government, the death rate in Johannesburg has been constantly three or four times as great as even in our own badly governed city of New York. There is no use in comparing it with ordinary mining camps, because Johannesburg is a fine city, built by intelligent and educated men.

10. The foreign settlers in the Transvaal were denied the right to bear any arms, while every male Boer, from sixteen years old upward, is heavily armed and drilled, at the expense of the foreigners.

11. By a press law, passed for the avowed object of crushing the foreign settlers, all newspapers were placed at the mercy of President Krüger, who can suppress them at his pleasure.

12. By another law, passed for the same purpose, all meetings of more than seven persons in the open air are absolutely prohibited, while all other meetings can be dissolved in an instant, at the discretion of any policeman.

13. Another law was passed, absolutely prohibiting the presentation by any foreigner of even so much as a petition for redress.

14. When Mr. Krüger invited foreigners to settle in the Transvaal, full naturalization could be obtained within two years. After foreigners had accepted his invitation, he repealed all naturalization laws, absolutely. Then, under pressure, he restored the laws, but made the term fourteen years; but any foreigner desiring naturalization must renounce all protection, even from his own government or the Boer Government, for fourteen years, during which Boer would be bound to respect. During these fourteen years he must be ready to serve in the Boer army on twelve hours' notice, and he would be frequently called upon to serve, without pay, clothing, or even food, which he must provide for himself. At the end of these fourteen years of degrading humiliation he would not be allowed to vote for any office worth voting for, unless his humble petition was approved by two-thirds of his Boer neighbors, by the military chief of his district, and finally by Mr. Krüger himself. Neither would he be allowed to vote, even then, unless he were forty years of age.

15. While nearly two-thirds of all persons residing in the Transvaal spoke only the English language, and less than one-third either spoke or could understand the barbarous Boer Dutch, the Boers insisted that all English-speaking children must take their education exclusively in Dutch.

16. President Krüger resisted the introduction of railroads for years in order to compel the miners to hire his private ox teams at enormous prices. When finally he did permit railways to be built, he granted the privilege exclusively to persons who would agree to give to his relatives a big share of the profits. He granted monopolies of several indispensable articles of supply to the mines, with the result of doubling the price at which they could otherwise have been obtained.

17. The whole Transvaal Government was corrupt and rotten from top to bottom. No business could be done with them without bribing the President's sons-in-law and hangers-on.

18. Having remonstrated against these things for many years in vain, and having received frequent promises of reform, which were never kept and were never meant to be, a number of foreign residents, including more Americans, in proportion to their total number, than of any other nationality, conspired together to compel these reforms to be granted, by force of arms. They collected rifles, gunpowder, &c., but never made any use of them and never committed any overt act. Their offenses were such as could not have been punished in the United States by more than a short term of imprisonment or fines not exceeding $1,000. They neither planned nor desired to become a British colony.

19. The conspiracy being discovered before the conspirators carried it out, sixty of them, including six Americans, were arrested, cast into an indescribably filthy jail, and informed that unless they pleaded guilty they would all be hanged, but that if they did plead guilty they would be let off with fines.

20. Being brought into court, they were charged with an offense, which, by the express statute law of Boerdom, was punishable with nothing more than a short term of imprisonment. Being assured by the Boer prosecuting officers that they would receive no greater sentence than this, and would be allowed to escape with fines, if they pleaded guilty, they did so plead; although, as to many of them, the offense could never have been legally proved.

21. No Judge then on the bench being quite unscrupulous enough to serve Mr. Krüger's turn, he imported an utterly unscrupulous Judge named Gregorowiski. This Judge publicly stated that he came for the express purpose of making it hot for the Outlanders. After the prisoners had all pleaded guilty, this Judge announced that, as to the four leaders, he should not sentence them under the statute law, but would resort to the unwritten law of the Transvaal, which prescribed death for such an offense. Accordingly, he sentenced these four (one of whom was a distinguished American, and probably the ablest mining engineer in the world,) to death, and all the others to various terms of imprisonment and heavy fines.

22. Even the Dutch settlers of South Africa, being horrified at this sentence, and pouring by hundreds into Pretoria to remonstrate against it, Mr. Krüger graciously took the matter into consideration, but announced that his religious scruples forbade that he should commute the death sentence into fines, because such fines would be "the price of blood," and his reverence for his dear Lord Jesus forbade that he should be less scrupulous than the priests of Jerusalem.

23. The pious Boers, therefore informed the prisoners that they could not be released on the payment of any fines, but that if the prisoners would, of their own accord, offer to "subscribe for charities," sums varying from $25,000 to $100,000 each, for the leading men, and not less than $10,000 for anybody, the merciful President might be induced to pardon them, without any fines or imprisonment.

24. Both the British and the American Governments being at that time too chicken-hearted to intervene in these proceedings, this offer had to be accepted. The American citizens all made heavy contributions to "charity," Mr. John Hays Hammond paying $100,000. No such penalties were ever exacted in the whole history of the United States, nor, during the last century, in any other civilized country.

25. These "charitable contributions," amounting to about $1,000,000 in all, were duly paid over to his Highness Paul Krüger or his son-in-law. It is needless to say that the "charities" have never turned up, although four years have now elapsed since the $1,000,000 was safely deposited under the control of the pious Paul Krüger.

26. Both the British and the American Governments meekly submitted to these outrages upon their citizens; more shame for them both! No wonder that Krüger described both Englishmen and Americans as "dogs, who, if they were good, would lick his boots."

The advocates of the Boers in this country assert that these acts have occurred only since the Jameson raid of December, 1895. In this there is not one word of truth, except, of course, as to the trial and sentences of the Outlanders. All the other acts of oppression above narrated, and many, many more, were committed and persisted in before the Jameson raid occurred or was ever thought of. In fact, the condition of the Outlanders has been distinctly better since the Jameson raid occurred. Although the raiders were defeated and captured, Mr. Krüger was not thereafter quite so confident that the Outlanders would never fight as he had been before. After that raid, and not before, he permitted Johannesburg to have some kind of local government, insisting, of course, that this government should be absoltuely under the control of his own creatures. Still, it was much better to have a local government of his nomination than to have none at all.

BIDE YOUR TIME.

From The Denver News.

When fortune treats you slightingly
And everything goes wrong,
Remember that you still are free
To labor and be strong.
To him who bravely does his part
Misfortune is no crime.
Just hold your grip and keep up heart
And learn to bide your time.

The surest road to greatness lies
Through hard and patient work.
The glorious name that never dies
Comes not unto the shirk.
Fame sits upon an eminence,
A pinnacle sublime.
He who would win must seek her thence,
Strive on and bide his time.

The man of hope and energy,
Who keeps one goal in sight,
Who goes his way with constancy,
Will some time win the fight.
The man whose life a glory lends
To every age and clime
Is he whose purpose never bends,
Who works and bides his time.

Go onward. O'er the future's hills
The dawn falls cool and sweet.
Go onward. He can win who wills
And bows not to defeat.
Go onward, though your path may lie
Through calumny and slime.
The way will brighten by and by.
Go on and bide your time.

The toil at last is done;
When standing on life's farther shore,
Beneath her setting sun;
Beyond the future's unbarred gate,
The bells of heaven chime;
And justice, love, and glory wait
For him who bides his time.

PARIS, Dec. 20.—A bill submitting the Franco-American reciprocity treaty to the approval of the French Parliament was introduced to-day in the Chamber of Deputies. The Government, in an elaborate preamble, makes a point of setting forth the "kindly disposition of the American Government which has enabled the negotiations to be brought to a successful conclusion," and expatiates upon the great stimulus the treaty will give to commerce between the two countries.

The preamble goes on to explain that the treaty is the result of two years' work. It says that, while pressed to retaliate against the restrictions of the Dingley tariff, the Government deemed a resort to diplomacy preferable, in view of "our traditional sympathies for the Republic of the United States and due consideration for our true economic interests."

It then recapitulates the main points of the provisional arrangement of May 5, 1898, which opened the way for further negotiations, as French imports into the United States, relieved from the tariff, increased 30 per cent.

Such American productions as cast iron, leather articles, and machine tools, "in which American manufacturers possess a distinct superiority and which constitute a danger to French industry," are, the preamble points out, still excluded from the minimum tariff. Moreover, agricultural and cattle products are similarly excluded "in order to protect the French from formidable American competition."

"This result," says the preamble, "is all the more important because Mr. Kasson made pressing demands on behalf of American agriculture. The French Ambassador was not only able to resist them, but even obtained useful reductions in favor of French agricultural products exported to the United States, such as olive oil and preserved vegetables."

After pointing out that France, under the treaty, obtains the unique concession of favored-nation treatment and describing this as "a peculiarly gracious concession," the preamble compares the respective advantages gained by the contracting parties, saying:

"Only 4 per cent. of American products, value 25,000,000f., benefit, the American gain being 1,077,450f. annually, while over 53 per cent. of French products, value 156,940,000f., benefit, the French gain being 5,219,294f. annually."

After particularly calling attention to the important fact that the concessions obtained by France are exclusive, and should tremendously increase French exports, while, at the same time, the treaty is so arranged as to prevent an American invasion of French markets, the preamble concludes as follows:

"The Government at the White House, in signing with us this treaty, has shown its desire to reserve to French commerce the first fruits of the tariff concessions which the Dingley bill authorized to be granted to foreign powers. This action gives the treaty a value it would be impossible to misunderstand, and makes this document a work which should draw closer at the same time the economic relations of the two peoples and the political affinities of the two republics."

DEROULEDE GETS TWO YEARS.

Alleged Conspirator Calls the Senate High Court an Infamous Assemblage and Is Punished.

PARIS, Dec. 20.—In the Senate, sitting as a High Court of Justice, to-day, counsel urged that the charges against M. Marcel-Habert be joined to the present proceedings, but the Prosecutor General declared this would be illegal. M. Déroulède, who, though ill, was present, virulently denounced the Senators and law officers for being "subservient to the Government's orders." Amidst immense uproar, M. Déroulède added:

"I wish to be condemned. I will say what I think of these scoundrels! This assemblage is infamous and dishonors France and the Republic!"

"I include in my denunciation both the Senate and the President of the Republic."

The Procurator, with difficulty, made himself heard in the tumult which ensued and demanded the prompt punishment of M. Déroulède, who continued to hurl insults at the High Court, coupled with the assertion that he desired punishment.

The session was eventually suspended and the court retired to consider the situation.

Upon the resumption of the proceedings the President of the Senate, M. Fallières, read its judgment, condemning M. Déroulède to two years' imprisonment on the charge of libeling Senators, and his exclusion from the court until the arguments of counsel had commenced; also refusing to include the charges against M. Marcel-Habert in the present trial.

On Nov. 18 Déroulède was sentenced to three months' imprisonment for insulting the President of the Republic.

CHINA HONORS A JAPANESE.

M. Yano Fumio Receives the Order of the Double Dragon.

SHANGHAI, Nov. 25.—An additional indication of the secret understanding which has recently been arrived at between China and Japan is seen in the honors lately conferred on M. Yano Fumio, who has resigned his post as Japanese Minister at Peking in order, it is said, to take the post of Foreign Adviser to the Imperial Chinese Government.

The Empress Dowager has just conferred on M. Yano Fumio the Order of the Double Dragon of the First Class. This gives him a Chinese rank equal to that of the highest Viceroy or the President of the greatest of the six governing boards or departments at Peking. He has left for Tokio, it is added, for special instructions from the Japanese Government.

BERLIN'S UNDERGROUND LINES.

A GERMAN COMEDIAN HERE

AT THE IRVING PLACE THEATRE

Charmed with New York Girls and Amazed at Tall Buildings—His Career.

Felix Schweighofer, a German comedian, who next week is expected to excite the risibilities of the German population at the Irving Place Theatre, arrived yesterday by the steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse. He was met at the dock by Manager Conried. A trip to the theatre, luncheon, a visit to a Broadway shop to see the exhibition of Christmas goods, a drive up Fifth Avenue to Central Park, and a call at Mr. Conried's house, in West Thirty-ninth Street, occupied the comedian's time during the rest of the day.

Herr Schweighofer is tall, well built, and fifty-seven years old, but looks younger. His features are pronounced and his eyes beam with good humor. In conversation he gesticulates mildly, and his facial expression changes in quick response to the sentiments that he utters. When asked the usual question how he liked what he had seen of New York he replied:

"I tried to look at some of your twenty-five story buildings, and as I strained my head looking upward I had to keep my mouth closed so as not to lose my teeth. We have some beautiful buildings in Europe—that is, the exteriors are very handsome, but the interior fittings of American houses are very luxurious, and many of the exteriors are quite handsome, too. At the same time I kept a sharp lookout for your American ladies, and I must say that I saw some of the prettiest girls that can be found anywhere in the world. Then I offered to pay Mr. Conried all the damages he would ask if he would only release me from my contract and let me spend my time here in looking about."

Herr Schweighofer has worked his way up from the lowest rung of the dramatic ladder. Born in Brünn, Austria, he was put behind a store counter at an early age, but soon became "stage struck," and joined one of the indescribable little provincial companies that are found in out-of-the-way corners in Germany. His manager allowed him to play all sorts of parts. He suffered many privations in his early days, and gradually became known as a promising young comedian. While playing in Odessa years ago the character comedian on one occasion was unable to appear, and the manager ordered Schweighofer to take his place. The young actor at first was bewildered. Then he decided to give an imitation of the celebrated Knaack, who appeared in New York in 1881. He played his part very successfully and was rewarded with much applause.

Some time later the genuine Knaack also appeared in Odessa, and every seat in the theatre was sold at a high price. After the performance some of his auditors asked: "Is this Knaack? Huh! He has been imitating Schweighofer."

This incident gave Schweighofer immense prestige, and his advancement and progress thenceforward were rapid. Other well-known German actors in turn imitated his originalities. It is said that he can melt an audience to tears in one scene and excite them to irresistible risibility in the next.

Herr Schweighofer will be in this city three weeks. On Monday evening he will begin in the farce, "Ein Blitzmädel," ("A Telegraph Girl,") in which he will appear in four different characters, as a German chorus singer, a French abbé, an Italian ballet master, and a Heidelberg student. This play will be repeated on Tuesday and Wednesday, and on Thursday evening he will appear in "Nullerl," translated as "The Nonentity." Here he will also assume several characters. This is regarded as one of his strongest plays, and he said yesterday that he had made half a million of thalers from this play alone. Other plays in his repertoire are "Pension Schoeller," ("The Beggar Student;") "Gipsfigur," ("The Plaster of Paris Cast;"), "Othello's Erfolg," ("Othello's Success;") "Scheu vor dem Minister," ("Bashfulness before the Minister,") and "Wiener Erlebnisse," (Vienna genre pictures.)

NOTED SINGERS HERE AGAIN.

Anton van Rooy and Mme. Saville's Operatic and Concert Plans.

Anton Van Rooy, a German baritone, arrived here yesterday by the steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse. He is to fill his second engagement with the Maurice Grau Opera Company. Herr Van Rooy last night said that his unexpected arrival was due to the fact that he found it impossible to obtain accommodations on any other first-class steamer which would have brought him to New York in time for his first appearance, which will occur Jan. 3 in "Die Walküre," when he will again be heard in the rôle of Wotan.

He came direct from his home, at Frankfort, Germany, after concluding an engagement of three weeks, during which he appeared in opera fourteen times.

The only new rôle he will be heard in here this year will be that of Hans Sachs, in "Die Meistersinger," in which he appeared with success at Baireuth last Summer. Herr Van Rooy said that he was thoroughly familiar with this rôle last season, when he was here, but did not assume it owing to a promise made to Mme. Wagner that he would not sing the part until he was heard at Baireuth.

Mlle. Frances Saville, a prima donna, also arrived on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse. She comes to America for a brief concert tour under the direction of Victor Thrane.

ACTRESS SUES FOR JEWELS LOST.

Josephine Hall, an actress, who is at present in Philadelphia playing in "The Girl from Maxim's," is bringing suit through her counsel, Maurice Meyer of this city, against Charles Frohman and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to recover $8,800, the value of a quantity of jewelry which she says was stolen from her trunk during transit from this city to Philadelphia, five weeks ago.

In one act in the "The Girl from Maxim's" Miss Hall was accustomed to wear the jewels, among which were a diamond necklace and pendants, a sunburst, brooch, and rings, and to keep them, with the costume for this particular act, in her trunk. When the company went from this city to Philadelphia, the trunk, with the baggage of other members, was placed in a special car. On arrival at Philadelphia it was found, Miss Hall claims, that the trunk had been broken open and the jewelry stolen. The police were informed, and detectives of a private agency were also set to work upon the case.

"A WONDERFUL WOMAN."

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Dec. 20.—To-night at the Collingwood Opera House, Fannie Rice gave the first performance of her new play, "A Wonderful Woman." The name of the author is a guarded secret.

The new comedy is in three acts, with the scenes laid in New York City. Polly Perkins acted by Miss Rice, is an up-to-date woman, who is engaged in stock brokerage and speculation in Wall Street. She has a leaning toward Theosophy, and to gratify that fad imports a Hindu, who is supposed to be a master of the occult science, and claims to possess the power to separate the soul from the body and send it on a visit to the heavenly planets. He attempts to exercise this power on Polly Perkins and a female friend, with the most confusing and humorous results.

Miss Rice's acting was rewarded with five or six curtain calls by the large audience, which seemed to greatly enjoy the performance. Several newspaper men and managers who were present are of the opinion that in "A Wonderful Woman" Miss Rice has a valuable piece of theatrical property. The new play will be seen in New York shortly after the holidays.

JOHN BLAIR'S EXPERIMENT.

In Carnegie Lyceum last evening John Blair presented the second of his subscription plays, a translation of an exceedingly dull and needless French piece in three acts called "Les Tenailles." Paul Hervieu wrote the original, which was one of the series of prolonged conversations about marital relations and adultery with which Jules Claretie has all but wrecked the fortunes of the Comédie Française in his directorship.

Granted a fairly fluent pen and some reading of modern fiction, and it is a very easy task to turn out such a piece as this. The building of a conventional farce or melodrama for the entertainment of men and women of average intelligence requires perhaps, more brains. The world is full of humbug.

"Ties" is the brief title chosen for the translation of Hervieu's conversations. It serves well enough in the circumstances, though an ordinary theatrical audience would not be allured by the word.

John Blair acted an ugly, selfish, narrow-minded, and opinionated man, without any striking authority, but so as to make the personage sufficiently disagreeable. Florence Kahn, seemingly imitating some of Mrs. Fiske's tricks of manner, was effective in a larger way as the equally selfish and intolerant woman who, unable to destroy her home, defies it. The situation in which this woman is placed in the last act might be made pathetic by an actress of larger experience than Miss Kahn, who, however, made it intelligible—which was something. In these scenes alone she made Hervieu's otherwise exceedingly uninteresting and objectionable heroine comprehensible.

The other rôles were filled by the veteran P. A. Anderson, Frederick Lewis, and Alice Harrington. It seems to be impossible to set a play well in the crypt of Carnegie Hall, but surely the gap in the back scene last night can be remedied.

The aesthetic value of such plays as "Ties" is very small. The moral of this particular play is not new or well illustrated. But Mr. Blair is sticking to his creed of presenting only such plays as the commercial theatre ignores.

"CARMEN" AT THE OPERA.

If on Monday night the illusion of continuity was strong at the Metropolitan Opera House, it was startling last night. It was the second subscription night of the series, and any one entering the house after the curtain rose on the second act, and previous to the appearance of Don José at the inn of Lillias Pastia, might have supposed that performances had been going on without interruption ever since 1897. Then Emma Calvé went away from us, and last night she came before us again as Carmen in Bizet's beautiful opera. She was apparently somewhat slenderer than of old, but in no way had the body or the spirit of her art diminished. She was welcomed right royally, and was applauded as a singer of her vocal and dramatic power deserves to be and always is by the metropolitn public of the Western Hemisphere.

It is much too late in the history of the world to lay the tribute of laudation at the feet of Bizet. "Carmen" is accepted as a masterpiece, and explanations of the nature of its greatness may be left to those who think that what they witness for the first time is new to all the world. Essays upon "Romeo et Juliette," "Carmen" and "La Traviata" will not find much space in this paper. A more fruitful subject at present is the familiar impersonations of Mme. Calvé and the unfamiliar ones of M. Alvarez and M. Plançon, who were associated with her last night, the former as Don José and the latter as Escamillo.

Mme. Calvé's Carmen has changed in none of its fundamental ideas. Before such changes can take place the leopard must change his spots, and the wonderful woman who sang and acted last night must get a new nature. It seems superfluous to lay stress on the beauty of Mme. Calvé's personation of the gypsy heroine of Prosper Merimee's tale, yet when the interpretation comes before us anew we are perforce driven to voice our admiration. This is one of the truly notable operatic embodiments of our time.

Mme. Calvé not only looks the part, but she lives it for the hours during which the opera lasts. Every action is charged with a subtle eloquence, and throws light upon the emotions of the woman. Every look is a speech, every gesture a revelation. And how beautifully she uses her voice! She makes it a medium for the expression of every side of a passionate and changeful nature. Last night she sang the music with uncommonly good intonation, with ravishing beauty of tone, and with so many significant nuances that even those unacquainted with the text must have known what she meant. Her singing was a little less vigorous than it sometimes was of yore, and this gave a new aspect to her performance. But the conception of the character was the same as it used to be, and it was set forth in a convincing and masterfully dramatic manner.

M. Plancon had the most trying task of the evening—to seek for success in a part in which so many have failed. It is a mystery to most operagoers why so many baritones fail to convey to their auditors the grace, the dash, and the gallantry of Escamillo. But M. Plancon seemed to have solved the mystery. He certainly avoided the bottomless pit of non-success. He was a fine, commanding figure. His action was full of splendid freedom and vigor, and he sang the deceptive Toreador song superbly. In the last act he dazzled the audience with a brilliant costume. M. Plancon has added another to his long list of happy and fascinating achievements.

M. Alvarez was an excellent Don José. The part was to have been sung by M. Saleza, but he was indisposed, and the principal tenor became his substitute. In the first act M. Alvarez sang well, but his flower song in the second was deficient in depth of feeling. However, he had his opportunity in the great scene at the close of the third act. There his robust and impassioned style was suited to the dramatic content of the scene, and he let himself loose in a perfect torrent of fury at Carmen. Again, in the last act, he had an opportunity for vigorous and declamatory song, and he made the most of it. His Don José was much more successful than his Romeo, and it is a pity that he did not make his début in this part.

Mme. Emma Eames was the same lovely Micaela as of old. She was in good voice and sang beautifully. Her delivery of the romance in the third act won her unfailing applause. The small parts were in satisfactory hands, and the subsidiary scenes moved with smoothness and celerity. The chorus was acceptable, and the orchestra did its work most efficiently. Signor Mancinelli conducted with his usual skill. Tomorrow night "Tannhäuser" will be sung.

SOCIETY AT THE OPERA.

Many New Faces and a Few of the More Familiar Ones Seen.

There were many new faces in the boxes last evening and a few of the more familiar ones. Mrs. John Jacob Astor, who wore a gown of black lace, décolleté, and a sunburst of diamonds on her corsage, had as her guest her mother, Mrs. Willing, who was in gray. John Jacob Astor and Harry Lehr were also in the box, and a visitor was Senator Depew.

Mrs. A. Bierstadt, in Box 24, was in black velvet, with superb diamonds. Mrs. Edward Reeve Merritt and Mrs. W. Emlen Roosevelt were in Box 3. This was Mrs. Merritt's first appearance since the death of her father, Mr. Roosevelt. She was in black and Mrs. Roosevelt was in lavender.

Mrs. Frederic Benedict was in Box 22 in white. Mrs. Trenor L. Park, in Box 2, was in lavender satin and diamonds. Mrs. James Hude Beekman was the guest of Miss Corola de Forest.

Lady Colebrook and Mrs. Dodge were in the Whitney box. Lady Colebrook was in white with her famous pearls. Mrs. Joseph Stickney, in white and diamonds, was in Box 33.

Among others were Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, the Misses Stokes, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. Harry McVickar, the Misses Gurnee, Mrs. Frederic Pierson, Miss Leary, Mrs. H. F. Dimock, the Misses Bowers, Mr. and Mrs. William Rockefeller, Sr., Miss Eloise Breese, Mrs. John H. Hall, the Misses Hall, William R. Grace, the Misses Grace, Miss Susan de Forest Day, Gen. Roe, and Miss Josephine Roe.

"Belle of New York" to Tour Here.

Arrangements have been concluded for the tour of this country of "The Belle of New York" Company, which will arrive here from England Jan. 6. The first engagement will be at the Casino the latter part of January and will last two weeks, after which a tour embracing all the principal cities will be made, the season terminating in Boston early in May. The company, which is now appearing at the Shaftesbury Theatre, London, is headed by Miss Edna May. There will be some changes in the principal rôles for the American tour.

Company to Push "The Great Ruby."

A company, consisting of J. Wesley Rosenquest, Arthur Rehan, and George H. Brennan, has been incorporated to exploit "The Great Ruby" after March 1, when Jacob Litt's control of the rights of the melodrama will pass to the company for a period of three years.

Casino to Have a Souvenir Night.

It will be souvenir night at the Casino to-morrow evening. The occasion will be the one hundredth performance of "The Singing Girl." The souvenirs consist of handsome powder puff boxes with silver tops, on which in sepia print the portrait of Miss Alice Neilsen will be found.

A New Theatre for Boston.

BOSTON, Dec. 20.—A new theatre is to be built in this city near the corner of Washington and Boylston Streets. New York parties are said to be the promoters, and the manager will be a New York theatrical man.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

Yesterday was not one of many social diversions. There were two weddings in town, several receptions, and dinners, but the principal event was the opera in the evening, at which appeared in the parterre many new faces. To-day's programme is fuller and much more varied. A number of well-known people will go to Lakewood to the private theatricals to be given there by Mrs. George Gould at Georgian Court. Mrs. Astor will give her first large dinner of the season this evening, and the first meeting of Les Cendrillons will take place at Sherry's.

***

At Les Cendrillons this evening the debutantes of the season will be well represented. It will be an early affair, and in accordance with its name will end at midnight, when supper will be served. There will be a short cotillion. The patronesses are Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Mrs. Frederic de Peyster, Mrs. Brayton Ives, Mrs. Stanford White, Mrs. Jacob W. Miller, Mrs. John S. Barnes, Mrs. Henry E. Howland, Mrs. Walter Gurnee, Jr., Mrs. George C. Clark, and Mrs. Robert G. Huntington.

***

Receptions were given yesterday afternoon by Mrs. Pierpont Edwards of 12 East Forty-sixth Street to introduce Miss Edwards, and Mrs. Ernest La Montagne of 114 East Thirtieth Street; by Mrs. Allan D. Loney of 421 Madison Avenue, and the Misses Bonner of 334 Madison Avenue. In the afternoon there was held the second meeting at Sherry's of Mrs. Dallas H. Pratt's dancing class for the younger set.

***

The Teutonic, which arrived yesterday, had among her passengers Mr. Marshall Field, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Pullman of Chicago, Mr. A. R. Manice, Mr. J. W. A. Pearson, Mr. and Mrs. G. A. McKinstry, Miss Middleton, Thomas Oliver, Frank Perkins, Miss Clara Perkins, Mrs Henry Sedley, Miss Barbara Sedley, and Capt. L. Thompson and Mrs. Thompson. The Fuerst Bismarck, which arrived on Tuesday, brought among passengers whose names have not already been published, Mrs. Frank L. Stevens, Miss Emily F. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Weston, Mrs. Austin Mitchell, son, and daughter, Miss N. Carow, and Miss Amelie Denegre of New Orleans. The Southwark, which sailed yesterday for Southampton and Antwerp, had booked among other passengers Mr. and Mrs. William A. Hallock, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Rawson, and Miss Alice Wright.

On L'Aquitaine, which sails to-day for Havre, there are booked among others Mrs. F. H. Barclay, Col. Charles Page Bryan, Sydney Jones Colford, and M. Robert. The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, which arrived yesterday from Bremen and Southampton, brought among other passengers Douglas Alexander, Miss Frances A. Armstrong, Mrs. William A. Abbé, Mrs. William T. Bull, Mrs. S. Barrowe and Miss Barrowe, Miss Elizabeth Curtis, William T. Cox, Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Crawford, Miss Du Bois, Mr. and Mrs. De Forest, Mrs. John L. Gardner, Miss E. C. Humphrey, Count Albert Lichtervelde, Mrs. H. Victor Newcomb, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Perkins, Miss Dorothy Perkins, George Perkins, Dr. Patton, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Slater, Jr., Miss Eleanor Slater, Dr. Charles D. Smith and Mrs. Smith, Mrs. W. B. Thompson and the Misses Thompson, Irving E. Walker, Mrs. White De Lancey Ward, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Wheeler, and Mr. and Mrs. John White.

There were a number of "at homes" yesterday, and these informal receptions, which have become such a feature of New York Winter seasons, will after the new year increase in number and fill the afternoons of every week day until the coming of Lent. In fact, some hostesses now defer the holding of their "at homes" until Lent. The Social Register Association, which has been endeavoring to induce society women living in the same section of the city to select the same visiting days, reports satisfactory progress in this praiseworthy attempt, and there will certainly be a good beginning made this year along these lines. The association's proposed arrangement is that hostesses on the side streets above Fiftieth Street should receive on Mondays, those living on Fifth Avenue on Tuesdays, those living on Lexington and Park Avenues and the side streets from Twenty-third to Fiftieth Street on Wednesdays, the dwellers on Madison Avenue, Gramercy Park, and Irving Place up to Twenty-third Street on Thursdays, while those living on Washington Square and the side streets below Twenty-third Street could receive on Fridays. If this plan could be carried out it would save an immense amount of time and trouble to all those men and women who are going out this season, and who must necessarily in consequence appear at the "at homes" of their friends.

Mrs. William Barclay Parsons of 505 Fifth Avenue will give a cotillion on the afternoon of Dec. 28 for her granddaughter, Miss Sylvia Parsons. The favors will be silver trinkets and other small articles.

***

Mrs. Albert Barnes Boardman of 40 West Fifty-third Street will give after New Year's a large luncheon to the débutantes of this season. Mrs. Boardman's daughter, Miss Cecil Boardman, is one of this year's buds.

***

The chief event of social interest to-night will be the housewarming or opening of the new casino which Mr. George J. Gould has built at Lakewood, N. J., near his beautiful residence, Georgian Court, of which it may be called in a sense an annex. This casino is the most completely furnished and appointed and the largest of its kind anywhere. It has been erected in a pine grove about a thousand feet distant from Georgian Court proper, is a square building with four large entrances, one at each corner, and with a main entrance in addition. A square hall opens from this main entrance, from which three openings lead to the bowling alley, the tanbark or driving ring, and the billiard room. Up stairs and reached by a private hall are the forty guest rooms. The baths and swimming pool and the gymnasium are on the ground floor. There is a large handball court and tennis and racquet courts. The natatorium has a swimming pool 60 feet long by 25 feet wide. The floor surrounding this pool is of mosaic, while the skylight roof rests on pillars of gray marble.

***

For the opening of this unique and beautiful structure to-night Mrs. Gould has arranged some elaborate private theatricals, which are to follow a large dinner, and which in turn will be followed by a cotillion. As was announced first in this column some time ago, these theatricals will be produced in a newly built theatre, which is to be a permanent feature of the Gould residence. The stage is as large as that of several of the New York theatres, and the seating capacity of the room is 125. The general color scheme of the auditorium is dark red relieved by gold. The theatre was built from suggestions made by both Mr. and Mrs. Gould. Handsome stage properties and necessary stage adjuncts have been provided.

***

As already told in this column the plays to be produced will be the romantic comedy "The Twilight of the Gods," written by Mrs. Edward R. Wharton, (Miss Pussie Jones,) in which Mrs. Gould will take the leading part, her first appearance on the stage since she gave up her professional career, and she will be supported by Boyd Putnam, the only professional to appear, and Philip Clark of Philadelphia. Following "The Twilight of the Gods" will come the skits "A Pair of Lunatics" and "The Marble Arch," to be presented by Evert Jansen Wendell, Philip Clark, Sydney J. Smith, Miss Greta Pomeroy, and Miss Emily Hoffman, who won such fame at the Strollers' week's performance by her dancing.

Mr. and Mrs. Gould have invited as their guests for this evening's entertainment some 200 New York fashionable people, who will go to Lakewood on special cars attached to the afternoon train to-day. These guests will either stay at Georgian Court or at the Lakewood hotels, and those apportioned to the hotels will be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Gould as if they were at the house. A large dinner will precede the theatricals, and these will be followed by a supper and a cotillion. The affair will be the most elaborate and the largest house party ever given by private hosts in America.

Mr. and Mrs. James Brown Lord invited a number of people, through the courtesy of the Judges of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, to attend a private view of the new Court House at Madison Avenue and Miss Mason Buys Newport Land.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Dec. 20.—The Countess de Robiglio of Nice and her sister, Mrs. Margaret King Bentley of Newport, have sold to Miss Ella F. Mason of Boston, a Newport cottager, 10,000 feet of land on Hunter Avenue, on which Miss Mason will erect a cottage.

A DAY'S WEDDINGS.

Lusk—Tiffany.

Miss Mary Woodbridge Tiffany, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis C. Tiffany, and Mr. Graham Lusk, son of the late Dr. Lusk, were married yesterday afternoon in the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church by the Rev. Dr. Charles F. Parkhurst. The bride, who entered the church on her father's arm, wore a clinging gown of white silk draped with chiffon, and carried a bouquet of white roses. Of the four bridesmaids three were sisters of the bride. All wore yellow gowns and carried baskets of white roses and lilies. The two little girl bridesmaids wore wreaths of holly on their short hair, and preceded the other attendants up the aisle. The church was very handsomely decorated; masses of white roses and lilies formed a background for the pulpit, and on either side of these were red roses and carnations. On the head of each pew down the centre aisle was laid a large bunch of red roses and carnations, and there was also a profusion of palms and other greens. A reception at the residence of the bride's parents, 27 East Seventy-second Street, followed the ceremony.

Shropshire—Steele.

Miss Sophronisba Preston Breckinbridge Steele, daughter of Dr. Theophilus Steele of 209 West Eighty-first Street, and Mr. Ralph Freeman Shropshire, were married at noon yesterday in All Angels' Protestant Episcopal Church, West End Avenue and Eighty-first Street. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Huske of St. Thomas's, assisted by the Rev. S. De Lancey Townsend, rector of All Angels'. The church was beautifully decorated with palms. The bride wore a gray crêpe de chine gown, embroidered in steel, with a picture hat and plumes of the same shade. She carried pink roses. The best man was Mr. J. Preston Carson of Richmond, Va., and the ushers were Harry C. Bryan, T. Foster Gaines, Joshua Brown, and Edward F. Shropshire. There were neither bridesmaids nor maid of honor. After the ceremony a breakfast was served at Sherry's for the bridal party and several other guests. The tables were decorated with pink and white flowers and the favors were white satin hand-painted bows.

Benet—Cox.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The marriage of Miss Margaret Cox to Laurence Vincent Benet, which took place to-day at 1 o'clock at St. Paul's Church, was largely attended. The Rev. Dr. Alfred Harding, the rector, officiated. The bride's only attendant was her sister, Miss Sally S. Cox, and the best man was Edward Pierce Casey of New York, formerly of this city. The ushers were John Sidney Webb, Alexander B. Legare, Montgomery Blair, and Caspar Crowninshield.

The ceremony was followed by a breakfast at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Thomas Campbell Cox, which was attended by relatives and a few personal friends. The Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Long were among those present at the ceremony and breakfast.

Late this afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Benet left for New York, where they will remain until Dec. 27, when they will sail for Europe to make their future home in Paris. The bride is popular in society. Her father was the late Thomas Campbell Cox, and she is the niece of Justice Cox. Mr. Benet has had a position at the French capital for several years, where his mother, Mrs. Stephen V. Benet, widow of the late Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, has resided with him. The wedding gown was a white satin trimmed with duchesse lace and chiffon.

The bride was escorted into church by her brother, William Robinson Cox of New York. Among the out of town guests present were Otis Glazebrook of New York, Mrs. John Calvert of Philadelphia, Mrs. Hobson, Mr. and Mrs. Townsend Scott, Mr. McEldery, and Ed. Robinson of Baltimore, Capt. Walker Benet, Watervliet Arsenal, Troy, N. Y.; Miss Dyer and J. L. Taylor, Roth resident and army circles were represented in the gathering at the church. The bride's presents were not only numerous, but valuable. Mrs. Benet sent her a bracelet watch, set with diamonds and sapphires. Other gifts were rugs, gold and silver table furnishings, and many articles of jewelry.

Wertz—Jennings.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Dec. 20.—At the Chapel of Our Holy Saviour this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock Miss Flora May Jennings, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James O. Jennings of South Norwalk, became the bride of David Stout Wertz of Norwalk. The edifice was elaborately decorated with evergreens and laurel, as well as ferns and potted plants. There were many guests present from New York, Brooklyn, and other places. Prof. Edward Sims presided at the organ, while the ceremony was performed by the Rev. F. W. Norris, rector of Trinity Church, South Norwalk. The bride was given away by her father. The bride was unattended, with the exception of the ushers, Walter Hoyt Jennings and Victor W. Ferris. The bride was gowned in a traveling costume of brown castor broadcloth and carried a white Prayer Book.

Sultan's Son-in-Law Not Arrested.

MARSEILLES, Dec. 20.—Mahmoud Pasha, the Sultan's son-in-law, who recently fled from Constantinople with his wife's jewels and all the money he could collect, has arrived here. The Turkish Government had telegraphed to the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, M. Delcassé, asking for the arrest of the fugitive on his reaching French territory, but the authorities here have thus far not interfered.

Zola's Trial Adjourned.

PARIS, Dec. 20.—The trial of M. Emile Zola on charge of having libeled M. Judet, Director of the Petit Journal, in accusing him of using forged documents in an attack upon M. François Zola, the novelist's father, was adjourned to-day for a month on the request of the defendant's counsel, Maître Labori, who appeared in court with his client.

Mrs. Kendal as Well as Ever.

Mrs. Kendal's indisposition after the second act of "The Elder Miss Blossom" at the Knickerbocker Theatre Tuesday night was not as serious as it was said to be. She was as vigorous as ever during the third act that night and at the matinée yesterday she exhibited no indication of illness. Mrs. Kendal yesterday said that the incident was greatly exaggerated.

Scottish Associations Vote Confidence in Campbell-Bannerman.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—A meeting of the Scottish Liberal Associations to-day voted confidence in Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the Liberal leader in the House of Commons, after some unpleasant remarks from delegates who pointed out that the resolution emanated from the local association, instead of from the Executive Committee, who were influenced by the threat that Lord Rosebery would resign his membership if the Executive Committee introduced the resolution.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman was elected at the beginning of last February the leader of the Liberal Party in the House of Commons, in succession to Sir William Vernon-Harcourt. Since that time, and especially since the war with the South African Republics broke out, there have been many rumors to the effect that Lord Rosebery would be chosen as head of the party. The present leader's opinions regarding the war are known to be at variance with those of a large number of Liberals, Lord Rosebery included. Sir Henry has represented the Stirling (Scotland) District in the House of Commons since 1868.

Lieut. Peary Planning Another Trip.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Dec. 20.—The Peary Arctic Club has decided to repair the steamer Windward for next season's northern cruise. She is now lying at Brigus, on Conception Bay, but will be brought to St. John's, docked, thoroughly repaired and strengthened, receiving new engines and boilers. When refitted she will be in first-class condition for a three-year cruise projected by Lieut. Peary, who is hopeful of reaching the north pole with her.

Prussia Offers a Rat Bounty.

BERLIN, Dec. 20.—The Prussian authorities, by proclamation, ask residents of ports on the North Sea and the Baltic to destroy rats in their various towns. A premium is offered. The local authorities at Flensburg, at the west end of Flensburg-Fiord, are paying a bounty of 5 pfennigs per rat.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

NEW COURT HOUSE OPENED

WORK OF THE MURAL ARTISTS

A private view of the new Court House, at Madison Avenue and Twenty-fifth Street, for the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, was given yesterday afternoon. Invitations to this view were issued by James Brown Lord, the architect of the building, through the courtesy of the Appellate Court Justices, and several of the Justices were present with Mr. and Mrs. Lord to receive their friends and point out to them the beauties and comforts of their new legal home.

The opening of this new Court House, which has been for the last three years in process of building, is of interest and importance not only to the legal profession of New York City and State, but is an art event of unusual moment and significance, for to this new building has been applied not only the skill of the architect and the hand of the sculptor, but also the brush of the artist.

It therefore emphasizes the growing understanding in this country of the fact that "the house" to be truly "beautiful" requires and demands the co-operation of the allied arts.

A beginning had been made in the direction of expressing this understanding in the intrusting of the painting of the ceilings in the Court of General Sessions to our best mural artists, but in the Appellate Court Building these artists have been allowed a freedom that makes their work almost as important as that of the architect. Too much credit cannot be given to Mr. Lord, not only for his intelligent plans and for the calling in of the painter and sculptor to his aid, but also for his judicious selection of the painters who by their previous work in decoration had proved themselves worthy of being employed upon the present building.

The architectural appearance and features of the new Court House have already been described in THE NEW YORK TIMES. The style is Corinthian and the material is white marble. As seen from Madison Square the new Court House presents a graceful and beautiful effect. The scaffolding had not been removed yesterday from the outside of the upper floor, so that the general effect when seen near by was, of course, marred. When this is finally taken away, as it will be within a few days, the building in its glistening white dress will stand out as one of the most chaste monuments of art in the metropolis. It not only enhances Mr. Lord's already high reputation, but will be for years to come a study for the country's architects.

INTERIOR OF THE BUILDING.

The interior decorations, furnishings, and appointments, which were inspected by the large number of prominent people who yesterday attended the private view, are the most elaborate and effective of those of any public building in the country, and possibly in the world. In fact, the impression that the interior of this building gave to the visitors yesterday was that of a handsome modern clubhouse, perhaps more dignified in treatment, as befits its uses, but still suggestive in its richness of tone, warmth of color, and in its furnishings of a clubhouse.

In the matter of decoration, however, it has on its ground floor, and particularly in its main hall and main courtroom, a number of mural paintings which give these apartments distinction, and are in themselves the most important art works that have been shown for many a day in New York. The mural artists who for months past have labored on the walls of the new building, and whose finished work was shown for the first time publicly yesterday, are H. Siddons Mowbray, Robert Reid, Willard Metcalf, C. Y. Turner, H. O. Walker, Edward Simmons, Edwin H. Blashfield, George W. Maynard Kenyon Cox, and Joseph W. Lauber.

These names will be recognized by the student and art lover, as well as by the reader who has not all followed the progress of art in America during the past few years, as those of men who have achieved deserved eminence in their profession and whose work is to some extent familiar to the frequenters of the year's art exhibitions, and to that portion of the general public which visits the larger and newer hotels and restaurants of the city.

Messrs. Blashfield, Simmons, and Turner have given us work in the Astoria Hotel, and Mr. Mowbray, Mr. Reid, Mr. Metcalf, Mr. Lauber, and Mr. Maynard in other public and private buildings, which has been of such a standard of merit as to make their selection for the present task an appropriate one. They have approached their work with evident sympathy and with a full appreciation of the dignity and soberness of the treatment it required, so that in a word they have from the beginning been "in touch" with it.

It is not possible, even were it advisable in this first review, to select any one of these artists as having performed work better than that of his fellows. Each has his admirers, who will see the same points of superiority in the work of their favorite painter in color, composition, and drawing, here as elsewhere. The reviewer must judge the work of each man as a whole and with reference to the fitness for its place and to its relations to the entire scheme of decoration.

MOST IMPORTANT PAINTINGS.

The most important paintings are the three large panels opposite the dais of the Justices on the east wall of the main courtroom. These have been painted respectively by Mr. Walker, Mr. Simmons, and Mr. Blashfield. The central panel by Mr. Walker represents Wisdom, attended on one side by Learning, Experience, Humility, and Love, and on the other by Faith, Patience, Doubt, and Inspiration. The composition and grouping of this panel are excellent; the color key is low, and the scheme one of cool grays and browns. The painting is in flat tints and suggests Puvis de Chavannes.

Mr. Blashfield's panel, on the right, represents the Power of the Law. The law draws her sword in behalf of Appeal. On either side stand magistrates in black gowns, and also figures of a Roman magistrate, representing Roman Law; of an early Anglo-Saxon, typifying Common Law, and of a Bishop, typifying Canon Law. Above fly two female figures, about to place upon the head of the Law a crown, as a symbol of power, and two children support shields in the lower corners of the picture bearing the seal of the Court of Appeals. Mr. Blashfield has treated this composition with much thought, and has brought to it all his strength of draughtsmanship and his rich and subdued color. The composition is especially noticeable for its dignity.

The two panels which occupy the frieze on the right and left of the three large central panels represent the seals of the city and State, and are by Mr. Maynard. The crescent-shaped dark wood dais of the Justices, with its tall back and hood, destroys a little of the effect of Kenyon Cox's long frieze on the westerly wall of the main courtroom. The subject of this is the Reign of Law. In the centre the figure of the State stands, delivering the statutes, supported by boys bearing the ballot box and the sword. Beyond them are Liberty, releasing birds from a cage, and Force, armed and bearing the oak bough.

PEACE AND COMMERCE.

Peace and Commerce occupy the panels to the right of the centre and Plenty Rewarding Industry to the left. This frieze has been a labor of love for Mr. Cox, who has produced in it the best piece of decoration that has yet come from his brush. He has long been noted for his good drawing of the female nude and his warm color, and both these characteristics are prominent in this frieze.

The numerous small frieze panels between the pilasters and windows are the work of Mr. Lauber. They represent almost every conceivable allegorical subject, are on the whole well thought out, with an immense amount of detail, and are harmonious and rich in color. This main courtroom is lighted by a large dome light of grayish-yellow glass, which gives a soft illumination to the dark woodwork and the paintings and furnishings. The room is extremely harmonious and happy in tone, grave without being gloomy, and invested with what might be called an atmosphere of dignified cheerfulness.

The lofty-ceilinged main hall, with its abundant light, has permitted a lighter and more joyous treatment in furnishing and decoration, and the friezes and panels of this apartment have judiciously been given to the colorists, Mr. Mowbray, Mr. Metcalf, Mr. Reid, and Mr. Turner.

Mr. Mowbray's frieze, which extends all along the north wall, facing the entrance, and returning around the elevator shaft, has for its subject the Transmission of the Law, illustrated by eight groups, Mosaic, Egyptian, Greek, Roman, Byzantine, Norman, Common, and Modern Law, united in each case by an allegorical winged figure to represent their transmission from one age to another. The artist has painted his always graceful figures on a background of dark brown and gilt. His work is charmingly decorative, and his well-known delicate color sense is shown in every group.

Mr. Reid's frieze, representing Justice, which fills the easterly wall of the entrance hall, and the panel on the south wall, was fully described in this newspaper when shown last Spring in Mr. Reid's studio. In loftiness of conception, breadth of treatment, virile draughtsmanship, and fine grouping, it shows that Mr. Reid is possessed of more strength than he had hitherto been credited with. The figure of Justice, seated, supported by two male figures, and holding the symbols of the law, is particularly fine.

Mr. Metcalf's frieze occupies the westerly wall of the main hall. This also represents Justice, with Equity on one side, and at her feet Sorrow, and Mercy kneeling near by. Mr. Metcalf has also painted the panel on the south wall representing the Banishment of Discord. Careful grouping, fine expression, and good color are the chief characteristics of Mr. Metcalf's work. It is a pleasure to see Mr. Turner represented in the two effective and appropriate lunettes representing Law and Equity between the entrance doors on the southerly wall.

Space fails in which to describe the Justices' rooms, the library on the second floor, the robing rooms at the north end of the building on the main floor, and the club and recreation rooms on the basement floor. These handsomely furnished and appointed apartments are reminiscent of those at some leading clubhouse. The decoration and furnishing of the Court House, on the whole, is harmonious and attractive, and the building is an appropriate and beautiful home for the Appellate Justices, reflecting credit on the city, its architect, his assistant artists, and the builders.

CONCOURSE AND BOULEVARD.

The Board of Public Improvements yesterday took up the long-pending matter of the Grand Concourse and Boulevard. The Concourse was authorized by the Legislature of 1892, and the city acquired title to the land in 1897. The amount expended under condemnation proceedings was about $3,000,000. The line of the Concourse is from One Hundred and Sixty-first Street to Mosholu Parkway four and a half miles, tapping the district in which lie Van Cortlandt Park, the Zoölogical Gardens, and the Botanical Gardens.

The first resolution presented to the Board yesterday was a request to the Board of Estimate to appropriate $1,000,000 bonds to grade the Boulevard and Concourse. An estimate by the Commissioner of Highways said that the work can be completed for that amount. Col. J. A. Goulden of the Taxpayers' Alliance of the Bronx James L. Wells of the North Side Board of Trade, Councilman A. C. Hottenroth, and President Haffen spoke in favor of the resolution.

President Grout of the Borough of Brooklyn asked that it be referred to the Corporation Counsel to see what the area of assessment would be. The Deputy Controller offered as an amendment that the whole matter be referred to the President of the board and the Commissioner of Highways, with a request that they submit a resolution providing for the work to be done out of the street improvement funds, the city to bear 75 and the property owners benefited 25 per cent. of the cost. Mr. Levy's amendment prevailed.

GETS A TROLLEY FRANCHISE.

Traction Company May Be Opposed by New Rochelle Citizens.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Dec. 20.—The Common Council of this city last night granted a franchise to the New York, Westchester and Connecticut Traction Company. This action was a surprise, and the company will probably be fought by the citizens before it succeeds in getting possession of the five miles of streets granted it, as they have contended the city's needs for street railways were well supplied.

The lines it may build under the franchise will largely compete with the Union Railway lines in the city. The citizens who will fight will probably be aided by the Union Company, which will also make an independent fight.

THE PRESIDENT PARDONS BACON

The Bank President, It Is Said, Should Not Have Been Convicted.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The President has granted a full pardon to James H. Bacon, who was convicted in 1896 and sentenced to imprisonment for seven years in the Utah Penitentiary for making a false report to the Controller of the Currency of the condition of the National Bank of Salt Lake, Utah, of which he was President.

The method of making the report, it is asserted by the Controller of the Currency and Mr. Dawes, his predecessor, was well-nigh universal among banks, and was well understood by the department, and until this time had not been the subject of official complaint. They both state that in their judgment Bacon was innocent of any moral wrong, and that he ought not to have been convicted. Attorney General Griggs, in reviewing the case, says that the evidence did not warrant a finding of guilty.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

The Colonial Fire Insurance Company of Washington, D. C., has been admitted to West Virginia.

B. M. Well & Co. have been appointed Milwaukee agents of the Manchester Fire Assurance Company of England.

Lewis F. Runck has been appointed Cincinnati agent of the Manhattan Fire Insurance Company.

J. Albert Vanden Burg has been appointed St. Louis special agent of the Provident Savings Life Assurance Society.

Chicago advices state that the Illinois business of the Teutonia Insurance Company has been reinsured in the Greenwich Fire Insurance Company.

Justice Smith, in the Richmand County Supreme Court, has ordered judgment in the sum of $16,586.65 for the plaintiff in the action brought by George W. Miller, counsel for Savage, against the Atlanta Home Insurance Company for the recovery of a fire loss claim on the steamer H. E. Bishop. Motion for a new trial was denied.

The insurance on the tenement house at the southeast corner of Third Avenue and One Hundred and Second Street, which was considerably damaged by fire Tuesday, was distributed as follows: North British and Mercantile, $12,000; Lancashire, $10,000. The loss to the building was estimated by underwriters yesterday as not likely to exceed 25 per cent. of the insurance.

The insurance on the property at 76 Fulton Street, which was damaged by fire Tuesday night, was distributed as follows: On Bell Manufacturing Company—Phoenix of London, $1,500; North America, $1,500; Western of Toronto, $1,250; Agricultural, $1,250; British America, $1,250; Lancashire, $1,250; Franklin, $1,000; Home Mutual, $1,000; Atlanta Home, $1,000; Imperial, $1,000; London Assurance, $1,000; Traders' of Chicago, $1,000; County of Philadelphia, $1,000; Thuringia American, $1,000; Kings County, $1,000; Queen, $500; Stuyvesant, $500; Providence-Washington, $500; Williamsburg City, $500; American of New York, $500. On Stirrup—Hartford, $2,500; Home, $2,000; Eagle, $1,000. On Charles E. Fink—American of Philadelphia, $1,500; Western of Pittsburg, $1,000; Agricultural, $1,000. Miller & Maltbie will adjust the loss.

The insurance on the property of the Metal Stamping Company at 386 West Broadway, which was considerably damaged by fire yesterday, was distributed as follows: Caledonian, $4,000; Phoenix of Hartford, $3,750; North British and Mercantile, $2,500; Western of Toronto, $2,500; New York Underwriters', $2,500; Fire Association, $2,500; British America, $2,500; Greenwich, $1,500; Pennsylvania, $1,500; Springfield, $1,500; Providence-Washington, $1,500; Fireman's Fund, $1,500; State of Pennsylvania, $1,250; Hartford, $1,000; Mechanics', $1,000; United Fire, $1,000; Union of Philadelphia, $1,000; Reliance, $500; Agricultural, $500. The building, the loss on which will be adjusted by C. R. Young & Co., was insured as follows: Aetna, $10,000; Lancashire, $7,500; Agricultural, $7,500.

The Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Company was licensed yesterday by Superintendent Payn of the State Insurance Department to do business in this State. This is the second Prussian company to be admitted to New York, because of the admission of the New York Life Insurance Company to Prussia. The Aachen and Munich was organized in 1825, and has been admitted to twenty-eight States of the Union. Its American assets last January aggregated $808,825, and its United States trustees are Charles A. Schieren, Henry E. Owen, and Ernst Thalmann.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

CHANGE IN THE ST. PAUL RAILROAD.

Reported that J. H. Hiland Will Succeed Mr. Bond as Vice President.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Dec. 20.—A report is current in railroad circles and generally credited that J. H. Hiland, General Freight Agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, will be made Vice President of the company about Jan. 1. Mr. Hiland, according to the report, will succeed Frank S. Bond of New York City.

Mr. Bond retires because of old age and feeble health. It is understood that Roswell Miller, Chairman of the board, will remove to New York City, and Mr. Hiland, as Vice President, will continue his residence in Chicago, in close touch with President Earling.

Mr. Hiland has been at the head of the freight department of the St. Paul Railroad for the past ten years.

A KOSMOS-SANTA FE DEAL.

Traffic Agreement Reported for Mexican and Southern Trade.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Dec. 20.—The Examiner says that the Santa Fé Railroad officials have a traffic arrangement with the Kosmos Steamship Company, a German organization, with San Diego as the point of transfer between car and ship.

The steamship company is to deliver to the Santa Fé at San Diego products of Mexico, Central America, and South America, destined to places in this country. In turn the Santa Fé will deliver to it under an agreed through rate the American products destined to the Pacific ports of the various countries affected.

This arrangement strengthens the Kosmos Company as a competitor of the Pacific Mail. It also means the entrance of the Santa Fé into Mexican, Central American, and South American fields of trade as a competitor of the Southern Pacific and Pacific Mail Companies.

NEW HAVEN'S NEW TERMINUS.

Freight Yards to be Established at Stamford, Conn.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., Dec. 20.—Agents of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company have recently been in Stamford, looking for dock property, to establish a large freight yard here. The facilities for handling perishable freight in the Harlem yards have been inadequate for the past three or four years.

After carefully examining the available shore front between Harlem River and Norwalk, the agents of the company found land best adapted for the proposed new freight terminus in Stamford. Freight from the West and from Eastern points will be brought to Stamford on transports, if the plans are carried out, and trains will be made up here for cities in the East.

In connection with the new freight terminal it is the intention of the company to establish a passenger service, which, in all probability, will include a day and a night boat.

BALTIMORE'S RAILWAY TROUBLES.

City and County May Clash in Western Maryland Foreclosure.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 20.—What may be the initial step looking to the foreclosure of the Western Maryland Railroad was taken today. Mayor Hayes sent the following concise note to each member of the City Council:

"I have called you in special session for the purpose of receiving from me nominations for city Directors of the Western Maryland Railway. I respectfully call your attention to the necessity of acting promptly upon these nominations, as the Board of Directors of the company meets in a few days."

At 5 o'clock a quorum of both branches met in joint convention and confirmed the eight names submitted by the City Executive as follows: William T. Dixon, ex-Mayor Robert C. Davidson, H. Irving Keyser, Thomas R. Clendenin, Frank A. Furst, John A. Tompkins, Attorney General George R. Gaither, and Mendes Cohen. These men will qualify to-morrow and look out for the city's interest on the board.

Mayor Hayes was notified to-day that a delegation from Washington County, Md., would arrive in Baltimore to-morrow to protest against the foreclosure of the property unless the county's interest is protected. The county owns a block of the stock of considerable proportions, and it will undoubtedly figure in the proceedings when the matter reaches the courts.

BUCHTEL COLLEGE BURNED.

Main Building of Ohio Institution Destroyed with Loss of $100,000.

AKRON, Ohio, Dec. 20.—The main building of Buchtel College, including all the laboratories, library, and men and women's dormitories, was burned to the ground tonight. The fire started in the men's dormitory about 5 o'clock and spread to the other portions of the building rapidly. Much of the personal property of the students and a large number of valuable books from the library were saved. The loss is fully $100,000, with $65,000 insurance.

A meeting of the students and friends of the college will be held Thursday morning, and it is probable that the college will be rebuilt at once.

While the college was burning a fire broke out in the residence of John J. Cook. It was destroyed, the loss being $15,000.

BETTER PACIFIC MAIL SERVICE.

Bids Asked for Faster Trips to Australian and Other Ports.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The Postmaster General to-day signed a call for bids for furnishing improved mail service between San Francisco and Sydney, Australia, for an optional term of either five or ten years, beginning Nov. 1, 1900, under the subsidy act of 1891.

The chief significance of the action is the substitution of vessels of American register in the Pacific mail service, the enlargement of the service of seventeen outward trips per year instead of thirteen, and an expected saving of four days in the passage. Bids are to be received until March 31 next. They must provide for steamers of the second class, of not less than 5,000 tons nor less than 16 knots' speed, and stops are to be made at Honolulu, Hawaii, Apia, Samoa, and such other points as the Postmaster General may select.

NOTABLE SURGICAL OPERATION.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 20.—After an operation resulting in the loss of his left arm, shoulder blade, collar bone, and a portion of his ribs, Alfred Taylor is able to perform the duties of orderly in the Pennsylvania Hospital. From the point of the jaw to the hip bone the line of Taylor's body on the left side is almost straight.

Taylor is a victim of disease of the bone known as osteosarcoma. He was a sailor on a British schooner, and arrived here with his arm and side terribly enlarged and suffering intense pain. Little hope was given the man when he presented himself at the hospital, but the operation was resorted to as a possible means of saving his life.

Dr. Robert Le Conte performed the operation, assisted by Drs. Hart and Stewart. Within a week Taylor had improved sufficiently to walk about, and his recovery was rapid.

Judgment Against New Yorkers.

WHITE PLAINS N. Y., Dec. 20.—Judgment was entered to-day in the Westchester County Clerk's office for $224.86, in favor of Eldridge V. S. Besson against Joel B. Erhardt, H. G. Armour, Andrew D. Baird, Levi P. Morton, Horace Russell, Cornelius N. Bliss, John R. Voorhis, C. Dunham, J. Jennings McComb, George H. Sharpe, William Lamb, A. S. Kenny, C. C. Waite, Frank Sperry, James B. Butler, Frank Walter, C. N. Taintor, Ellis B. Edwards, George H. Lawrence, and J. Adriance Bush. This was the result of a suit against the "Erhardt, Edwards and Lawrence Syndicate," composed of the men named above, for materials for buildings furnished the syndicate in the development of the residential section of Chauncey, a little station on the New York and Putnam Railroad, in Westchester County. The suit was entered in the courts in 1891.

Silk Industry in New Jersey.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 20.—Chief of the Bureau of Labor and Statistics William Stainsby has prepared a special report on the silk industry in New Jersey. Over $20,000,000 was invested in the manufacture of silk goods in New Jersey in 1898. The value of the manufactured product was nearly double that of ten years ago and more than three and one-half times as much as in 1880. The value of manufactured silk last year was one-half as much again as the total value of the farm products in the State in the year 1880.

GARBAGE CREMATORY WANTED.

ALBANY, Dec. 20.—The Legislature at its coming session will undoubtedly be called upon to pass legislation to give New York City power to establish and maintain a crematory for the disposal of garbage and ashes.

Dr. Alvah H. Doty, Health Officer of the Port of New York, was in the city to-day and conferred with Gov. Roosevelt on this matter. He told the Governor that he had come to the conclusion after a careful investigation that the proper method of abating the Barren Island nuisance, caused by the existence of the establishments of the private contractors who now dispose of the garbage of New York City, was by the establishment of a crematory plant by the city. Dr. Doty has just returned from a trip through Europe, during which he inspected the crematories used in the disposal of garbage and ashes in large European cities, and had concluded that the crematory in operation at Hamburg, Germany, was the most perfect and best suited for adoption by the New York City authorities in disposing of the garbage in that city.

When the Barren Island bill passed by the last Legislature was pending before the Governor he informed the parties interested that while he would not sign that measure he desired an abatement of the Barren Island nuisance, and warned them that the problem must be solved before the adjournment of the Legislature of 1900. He then stated that the interval would afford sufficient time to work out a solution of the situation, and with this end in view Dr. Doty, under instructions from the Governor, has been giving the matter his consideration.

He was not prepared to-day to submit to the Governor details of the plan for the establishment of a public crematory, but told the Governor that he would have them ready within the next four weeks. Dr. Doty has concluded that while the disposal of the garbage of New York City remains in the hands of private contractors the existing nuisance will continue, because a complete rendering of the garbage would cause expense such as the contractors would not care to incur. He also told the Governor that a more frequent collection of garbage and ashes in New York City would have to be conducted in order to secure perfect abatement of the nuisance. He said that while the system of disposal by private contractors in Syracuse was in some degree satisfactory, it was not by any means perfect, and this condition he believed would exist in the case of garbage disposal of that method in any city.

IOWA INSANE ASYLUM SCANDALS

Strong Effort to be Made to Abolish County Establishments.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Dec. 20.—The State Board of Control is creating a sensation by the publication of detailed reports on the condition of the insane asylums of nearly thirty counties in Iowa. The board is required by law to investigate these establishments.

Its reports indicate a deplorable condition of affairs; men and women are in some counties being herded together indiscriminately and no expert care or regular medical attendance is afforded. The exposé of these conditions has determined legislators to make a strong effort to pass a law abolishing county asylums and compelling the maintenance of insane persons in State institutions.

COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN.

Second Triennial Meeting to be Held in Cleveland March 4 to 11.

CHICAGO, Dec. 20.—The Council of Jewish Women will hold its second triennial meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, March 4 to 11. The programme will include these features: A model Sabbath school lesson, a model circle lesson, a paper by Miss Addams of Hull House on "Contemporary Social Ethics," symposium on woman's place in public life, Jewish women in the professions, the condition of the Jew in various countries.

The indications point to a large representation of delegates and visiting members. Jewish women not affiliated with the council are invited to attend. The officers of the council are: President—Mrs. Henry Solomon, Chicago; First Vice President—Mrs. Julius Beer, New York; Second Vice President—Mrs. Emanuel Mendel, Chicago; Treasurer—Mrs. W. Wolf, Chicago; Corresponding Secretary—Sadie American, Chicago; Recording Secretary—Gertrude Berg, Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA MUSEUM OPENED

Mrs. Pepper Gives $50,000 and John Wanamaker Two Collections.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 20.—The University of Pennsylvania's free Museum of Science and Art, one of the late Dr. William Pepper's cherished hopes, was formally opened to-day in the presence of several thousands of interested people. Immediately following the presentation to the Board of Trustees of the Museum, Carl Bitter's bronze statue of the late Dr. Pepper, the gift of friends, was unveiled. The presentation speech was made by ex-United States Senator George F. Edmunds, in behalf of the Dr. Pepper Testimonial Committee.

In connection with his address, Mr. Edmunds was delegated by Mrs. Frances Sergeant Pepper, the widow of Dr. Pepper, to present to the university trustees, as a memorial of her husband, the deed of a gift of $50,000 as a fund to carry on the work started by Dr. Pepper. Mrs. Pepper is a lineal descendant of Benjamin Franklin, and, like her distinguished husband, she has always manifested a deep interest in everything appertaining to the welfare of the university.

Another interesting gift to the new institution was made by John Wanamaker. It comprises a valuable Eskimo collection gathered at Point Barrow, Alaska, by Mr. MacIlhenny. Mr. Wanamaker also presented to the Museum an interesting collection of Etruscan jewelry.

Yale's Annual Catalogue Issued.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 20.—The annual Yale catalogue of Yale University was issued to-day. It shows that there are 2,517 students in the university, against 2,511 a year ago. This is exclusive of 167 special students taking the courses for Connecticut teachers.

DIAMONDS

Have advanced over 30 per cent. within the last few months. ITALIANS RESENT RESCUE.

Attack Railroad Men Who Prevent Them from Being Run Over.

CHICAGO, Dec. 20.—John Nicholson, a special policeman employed by the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad, and James Henderson, employed by the same company as a switchman, saved six Italians from being run down by a switch engine at the Polk Street crossing last night. In return for their kindness they were attacked by the Italians, all of whom carried knives. The special policeman and switchman ran to a freight house near by, pursued by the Italians. Later the Italians departed, and the police could find no trace of them.

It appears that the Italians were standing upon a track which a switch engine was approaching, and when they were pushed on in time to save their lives, resented the act and turned upon their rescuers. Nicholson is seriously wounded.

Actress to be Tried for Murder.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Dec. 20.—The trial of Julia Morrison, the actress, who killed Stage Manager Frank Leyden at a local theatre here, has been set for Thursday, Jan. 4.

EXPANSION IN TENNESSEE.

Judge Snodgrass to Fight for the Senate on That Issue.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Dec. 20.—Chief Justice David L. Snodgrass of the Tennessee Supreme Court last night formally announced his candidacy for the United States Senate. Judge Snodgrass is for expansion, favors retaining the country's new possessions, and declares emphatically against trusts.

In his announcement he says that he is not for further expansion under existing conditions, but the time is coming when the Government will have to expand on account of growing population.

Don't Want to Leave the City.

There was a mass meeting of the taxpayers and citizens of the Fifth Ward, Queens Borough, Tuesday evening, for the purpose of discussing the question as to whether the residents of the ward wanted to be cut off from the city and attached to Nassau County. A resolution was passed that it was the sense of the majority of the property owners of the ward to remain in Greater New York.

PARK BOARD AND ELEVATED

Mr. Skitt Offers Plans for Changes in the Battery Loop.

CONFERENCE FOR NEXT WEEK

The much-discussed question of the removal of the Battery Park loop of the elevated railroad structure ordered by the Department of Parks was officially revived yesterday when Vice President and General Manager Alfred Skitt of the Manhattan Railway Company wrote to President Clausen of the Park Department, offering several plans for consideration for changes of route and structure to meet the objections of the department and asking for a further extension of time for discussion and consideration of the plans.

Mr. Skitt's letter, which was dated Dec. 18, was as follows: "In accordance with our communication of Nov. 20, I beg to herewith send a number of plans as per following list, showing the comparative practicability of various routes for the elevated railroads in reaching the South Ferry terminus from Greenwich Street and Battery Place. Also, herewith are suggestions and plans by John Y. Culyer, landscape architect, with respect to the treatment of Battery Park in the neighborhood of the elevated railroads.

"These plans have been ready for some days, but the absence from New York on professional duties of our counsel has prevented consultation and has led to delay. Upon their return, which will probably not be before the close of this week, I trust you will appoint a time and place convenient to yourself, when a full conference can be had with respect to all the questions involved. Inasmuch as the entire matter is now before you for consideration, I would ask an extension of thirty days in the form before adopted, and I now see no reason why the subject cannot finally be disposed of in that time."

The plans accompanying the letter are numbered 1 to 12 as follows:

No. 2—Details of the present structure.

No. 3—Details of proposed skeleton structure.

No. 4. Three spans of proposed skeleton structure.

No. 5. Present plan of parks, showing structure and trees.

No. 6. Location of line on margin of park, first study.

No. 7. Location of line on margin of park, second study.

No. 8. Location of line in State Street, first study.

No. 9. Location of line in State Street, second study.

No. 10. Location of line via Bowling Green and Whitehall Street.

No. 11. Suggestions for park treatment with line in present location in conjunction with skeleton, with explanatory memoranda.

No. 12. Suggestions for park treatment with location of structure on park border.

Mr. Clausen replied to the letter as follows:

"In acknowledging the receipt of yours of the 18th, I have to say that I was unable to reach it for the purpose of examining the plans, until to-day. I find that for any proper consideration of them a conference or meeting, which you suggest, is absolutely necessary, as only two of the plans are accompanied by any explanatory memoranda.

"I will be pleased to talk the whole subject over with you here on Wednesday, the 27th, at 11 A. M.

"The extension of Nov. 21, which you request to have further extended, seems to me to be sufficient to cover the necessary time for the full consideration of the entire matter without any formal action. You will note that it reads to the effect that no action will be taken upon the notice of the intended revocal until after the 21st day of December, 1899, pending the consideration of the matter in the spirit of your communication of the 18th inst., there would naturally be no action by this department under the notice."

The plans submitted may be reduced to four. One provides for replacing the present structure as now located by a skeleton truss-girder construction, more open and less darkening than the present box-girder and stringer method of construction. Accompanying it is a plan, referred to in Mr. Skitt's letter, made by Mr. Culyer, for the placing of trees and shrubbery about the structure.

Another plan provides for a similarly designed structure along the margin of the park from Greenwich Street around the line of State Street, but slightly overlapping the park lawns and entirely covering the marginal path. A similar treatment of trees and shrubbery is proposed as part of this plan. At the lower end the plan also takes in a strip of the park not now encroached upon.

The third general plan is for the building of the road along Battery Place and down State and Whitehall Streets, touching the park only at the turn into Whitehall Street. Here, however, it takes off a corner of the park.

The fourth general plan calls for a structure through Battery Place, across Bowling Green, in front of the site of the new Custom House, and down Whitehall Street along the front of the Produce Exchange and past the Army Building. It is not believed, however, that this plan is seriously considered by the railroad officials.

In the first and second studies of the State Street and marginal plans the differences are mainly in the terminals.

In the traffic diagram it is shown that the business of the South Ferry terminal is the largest on the road, the passenger traffic being 7,799,985. The City Hall station is next, with 7,674,707. There are several more large ones, but they do not amount to more than 50 per cent. of the South Ferry business. Neither President Clausen nor the railroad officials would say anything yesterday supplementary to what was contained in the letters. Should the plan for replacing the present structure in the same place be adopted, the change is to be made when the company changes its power to electricity.

The Board of Health yesterday also took up its elevated railway cases, in the matter of structural weakness, at a special hearing. The company was represented by Gorge H. Pegram, chief engineer, and F. D. Smith, Superintendent of Transportation. Watts Gardiner, civil engineer and examiner for the board, testified as to weak places found in the Ninth Avenue structure between South Ferry and Fourteenth Street, and photographs were produced showing cracks in the foundations of the columns. After a two hours' session the board adjourned the hearing until Thursday next.

LIVES LOST IN THE KLONDIKE.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Dec. 20.—A dispatch from Dawson dated Dec. 14 recounts a terrible tragedy which took place near Ogilvie. Mrs. J. Rumball, Mrs. Dumbottom, Henry Kelly, and two MacNamara brothers, who had been passengers on the wrecked steamer Stratton, hailing from Minneapolis, were caught in an ice jam. Their boat, being small, was crushed and all perished.

Another tragedy is reported from White Horse, where three men, named T. Smith, Fred Batty, and John McIntosh, were engaged in salvaging the cargo of the steam scow Linderman. Being unexpectedly struck by a heavy swell, their boat filled and sank. The men were not seen after the boat disappeared, and it is supposed they were carried under the ice.

OLD MAN SHOOTS YOUNG WIFE.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Dec. 20.—John Gardiner, aged sixty, residing on the western outskirts of this city, to-night shot his wife, aged twenty-nine, in the right breast and left arm. He then retired to his house, where he awaited the coming of the officers at a window. On catching sight of the brass buttons of the policemen he raised the revolver to his head and sent a bullet crashing through his brain, death being instantaneous. His wife will recover.

The trouble grew out of Gardiner's drinking habits. His wife claims that he had been intoxicated most of the time for some weeks past, and that he had beaten and abused her often when in this condition.

A MYSTERIOUS PRISONER.

A mysterious prisoner was taken to Police Headquarters late last night by Detective Manion. The Sergeant in charge declined to say anything save that the prisoner is twenty-one years old. He is well dressed. He is held as a suspicious person.

The prisoner who was arrested in the Waldorf-Astoria had been "shadowing" a prominent guest, who complained to the clerk. Detective West of the hotel called in Capt. McClusky and explained the situation. Capt. McClusky arrested the disturber forthwith.

Manager Boldt denied at first that any such arrest had been made, but afterward admitted it, but declined to give any names or say more of it.

Witnesses in a Damage Suit Against a Street Car Company's Agent.

A suit for $50,000 damages brought by Hugh Gibben against the Metropolitan Street Railway Company for injuries alleged to have been received in 1894 by being thrown from a Second Avenue horse car, was given to the jury yesterday in the Supreme Court.

During the evidence Louis J. Grant, attorney for the plaintiff, endeavored to prove that David J. Lynch, a subpoena server for the railway company, approached several of the witnesses and offered them money to testify for the defense.

Norman Licock and his wife, living at 693 Second Avenue, and Thomas Kilgallon, a saloon keeper at 740 Third Avenue, declared that David J. Lynch had offered them money to testify for the company. Lawyer Scribner objected that it had not been shown that Lynch was an employe of the company, and the answers were ordered stricken from the record.

Lawyer Grant for the plaintiff claimed that money had been offered to a man named Sullivan to testify for the company and that he was being held in court by a detective. The attorney subsequently proved by one of the witnesses for the defense that Mr. Lynch is a server for the company and he then recalled Mr. Kilgallon and Livock and his wife, and they repeated their former testimony.

Mr. Lynch denied the statements of these witnesses. He said that he had visited them for the purpose of finding out if they could testify, but he did not offer them money, as he had no authority to do so.

The jury remained out two hours, and then reported that they could not agree. The court ordered them to bring in a sealed verdict this morning.

MR. LAUTERBACH'S TUNNEL.

Will Be Located After Completion of Rapid Transit Plans.

It was learned yesterday that the New York and Brooklyn Tunnel Company, which owns a franchise for a tunnel under the East River, was organized under the direction of Edward Lauterbach, who now appears as counsel for the company. Mr. Lauterbach said last night that the company is seriously in the tunnel business, and that while it has not as yet located its tunnel, it will do so after the completion of the plans of the Rapid Transit Commission.

The preliminary surveys and borings have been made, he said, and considerable money has been expended. Mr. Lauterbach declared that he did not regard the franchise as an exclusive one, and he could not see that it would preclude the city from constructing a tunnel at any place, so long as it did not conflict with the location selected by his company.

ROBINSON SUIT DISMISSED.

Special to The New York Times.

ELMIRA, Dec. 20.—Justice Mattice to-day granted a non-suit in the Robinson-Mutual Life damage case.

Justice Mattice's decision in substance was as follows: "I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to establish a cause of action against the remaining defendant. Assuming that the plaintiff is innocent and that no crime was committed, yet the facts lead irresistibly to the conclusion that the defendant had probable cause to institute a criminal prosecution. Looking at the evidence in the most favorable light to the plaintiff and deriving first inference from the undisputed facts, I am forced to the conviction that the defendant had the right to believe, or at least to entertain a strong suspicion, that the plaintiff had committed the wrong charged against him.

"It is difficult for me to understand how it can be contended that the circumstances would not excite in the mind of a prudent and discreet person a strong suspicion of wrong-doing. Entertaining these views I can do nothing but hold that the plaintiff has failed to establish a want of probable cause, and, therefore, direct that an order be entered dismissing the complaint."

The damage suit was brought as a result of ten cases involving $1,500,000, in five of which the Mutual Life Insurance Company was plaintiff and Col. David C. Robinson was charged with being an embezzler and defaulter, and in the other five Col. Robinson sued to recover money claimed to have been fraudulently taken from him and his family, and charged that the insurance company wrecked the Elmira National Bank and the Elmira Municipal Improvement Company.

David C. Robinson inherited from his father a fortune estimated at nearly $1,000,000, and was President or Director in many important enterprises. He was his father's private secretary when the latter was Governor, and was Mayor of Elmira in 1892. When the crash came in 1893 Mr. Robinson made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors. While the subsequent suits were pending in the lower courts the insurance company had Robinson indicted by a New York Grand Jury for alleged embezzlement of $30,000 in 1892.

This afternoon in the Supreme Court, the injunction which for some time has prevented the sale of the Elmira Municipal Improvement Company property, formerly owned by Col. Robinson and now controlled by the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, was vacated, and now all the street-car and other property in this city covered by the famous one-million-eight-hundred-thousand-dollar mortgage will be once more advertised for sale.

DISPUTE OVER A PAINTING.

A landscape said to be from the brush of George Inness, and now in the art gallery of a Fifth Avenue store, is the cause of a dispute between the present possessor and another man as to who really has the right to it and of the indictment of two men who were instrumental in getting it in the store.

This painting, which is entitled "Sunset," and is 18 by 24 inches in size, is said by William Miller of Montclair, N. J., who claims it, to be worth $2,000, though he says he bought it three years ago for $900. It was sold on Sept. 16 for $250 to Thomas Kirkpatrick, who keeps a jewelry and art store at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-third Street, by William Wild and Richard Oppenheimer, the latter of whom had been at one time authorized to sell it. Both these men were indicted by the Grand Jury on Tuesday on the charge of having stolen the picture. Oppenheimer had been arrested before the indictment and is now out on bail, but Wild has not yet been apprehended. The Kirkpatricks think he may be innocent of all wrongdoing in the matter.

Mr. Miller, who claims to own the painting, is editor and publisher of an insurance monthly, and has an office at 220 Broadway. He says that in August William R. Leonard, a picture dealer, living at Montclair, (which was also the home of George Inness,) told him that he could sell the painting to good advantage for him, and Mr. Miller put it into Leonard's hands. The latter was soon afterward approached by Richard Oppenheimer, who said he had a customer for the picture, and was allowed to take it, according to Mr. Miller, on the understanding that he was to return it the next day if he couldn't sell it.

The next day he came back and had the picture framed to make it show to better advantage, and went away with it again. Mr. Miller says he hasn't heard of Oppenheimer since or got any money for his painting. He declares, however, that he knows that since the painting was taken away it has been pawned with a Sixth Avenue broker for $40.

Mr. Miller employed a private detective to help him get his picture, and in the guise of customers the two visited various shop galleries. They discovered the picture of Kirkpatrick's and claimed it, but Mr. Kirkpatrick, acting on the advice of his attorney, Assistant Corporation Counsel James Flynn, insisted on holding it until he got back the $250 he paid for it.

RYAN LOSES IN COURT.

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 20.—In the United States Circuit Court here this evening a bill was filed by Thomas F. Ryan against John Skelton Williams, J. W. Middendorf, and others. Application was made before Judge Waddill, sitting as a Circuit Judge, for a preliminary injunction to restrain the defendants from taking any steps toward consummating the consolidation of the railroads of the Seaboard Air Line system with the Florida Central and Georgia and Alabama Roads.

After argument by counsel lasting until after midnight, Judge Waddill held that there was no case for preliminary injunction to restrain the defendants as sought, especially to restrain the voting of the stock of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Company at its meeting of stockholders of the 21st inst. at Raleigh, especially as it is a corporation of the State of North Carolina.

The Judge suggested that a speedy hearing take place, and it was arranged that an application for injunction would be heard on Dec. 28, in Richmond, at which time all the questions in the case will be considered with leave of parties to file affidavits. The result is that there can be no interference with the stockholders of the Raleigh and Gaston at the meeting to be held to-morrow.

Good Pictures Secured of Specimens in Aquaria at Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Some interesting experiments in the photography of live fishes have been made by Capt. R. W. Shufeldt, the results of whose work have just been published by the Fish Commission. Heretofore success in or even attempts at this sort of photography have been rare, as compared with the photography of other living forms, and few such photographs have been published. Capt. Shufeldt calls attention to the fact that the characteristics of some of the specimens are shown in the photographs to be different from their usual representation in pictures. "In time," he says, "with suitable subjects taken under the most favorable conditions, pictures of fish produced by half-toning processes from faultless photographs will surely supersede in biological literature the often inaccurate figures that now illustrate it."

Capt. Shufeldt's experiments were made at the aquaria of the Fish Commission Building. Most of them were made in the Marine Grotto. Fifteen photographs are reproduced in his report, one of which is of an aquarium in which were 450 young rainbow trout. Most of them are pictures of single specimens. Reflections proved especially troublesome, as the glass fronts of the aquaria receive them from all directions.

The object of the experiments was to show the fish in their natural element, amid natural surroundings. The first successful experiment was made with a large pike, which remained motionless during the two seconds of exposure. The photograph shows several errors in the common pictures of the pike. Another picture taken the same day is of twenty sunfish. A white perch was caught swimming slowly over the bottom in search of food, as it does in freedom.

A tautog was taken resting upon the side of a little mound of sand and close to the surface of the glass. "These fish in confinement," says Capt. Shufeldt, "exhibit all their natural traits, and in their aquarium will be seen swimming about not far from the bottom; others will be lying upon their sides, and still others attempting to secrete themselves beneath the rocks, while occasionally exhibiting a peculiar method of combating each other. This consists in two fish (males) coming at each other face to face, opening their mouths, and, the one bringing his teeth in contact with those of his antagonist, each attempts to force his adversary backward, or, if he or the opponent be taken off guard for the instant, the more watchful fish of the two will make the attempt to bite the other.

"Sometimes there seems to be a certain playfulness about the grotesque maneuvres, while at others an earnest combative nature is quite apparent. Whether the opposite sexes ever engage in this procedure I am unable to say at this writing. At the best the tautog is a peculiar fish in its habits, and their behavior together often reminds me of that of a litter of little pigs, with some of the movements characterized by a certain kind of cat-like fawning."

FAIR PRICES AT HORSE SALE.

Thomas Welsh the Heaviest Buyer of the Thoroughbreds Offered.

Twenty-eight head of thoroughbred horses were sold at Madison Square Garden last night for a total of $22,735 by the Easton Company of this city. Twenty-three of the horses sold were consigned by the Oneonta Stud, Pasadena, Cal., and were the property of the estate of Simeon G. Reed.

In the large crowd present at the sale were nearly all of the turfmen of this city and many from other places. The bidding was lively upon the choicest offerings, and the prices realized were fairly good, the average being slightly higher than was anticipated by those conducting the sale.

Thomas Welsh of this city was the heaviest buyer. Mr. Welsh's purchases were said to be for Fleischmann & Son. The imported stallion Duncombe, by Speculum-Fair Helen, which was at the head of the Oneonta Stud, was offered, but as no bid was made for him he was not sold. Following were the best sales:

LIEDERKRANZ CUE EXPERT WON.

Poggenburg Took Slosson-Daly Emblem from Frank A. Keeney.

Ferdinand Poggenburg of the Liederkranz won the Slosson-Daly Emblem last night at Slosson's Billiard Academy by defeating Frank A. Keeney of the Crescent Athletic Club in the final half of their six-hundred-point match. When the game adjourned on Tuesday night at Daly's Academy the score was 300 to 198 in Poggenburg's favor. He increased his lead last night by steady play. Keeney was in poor form during the first twenty innings, making but 34 points. His playing improved during the rest of the game, and he placed several fair runs to his credit. Poggenburg finished the game in the forty-sixth inning with a run of 7. Poggenburg's average for the 600 points was 6 72-88, while Keeney made an average of 5 2-87. The score last night:

Poggenburg—10 13 0 3 1 1 2 0 12 40 42 1 0 3 2 15 0 7 12 11 0 0 1 3 4 0 10 3 19 2 0 2 11 3 2 17 5 0 2 5 21 1 0 2 5 7. Total, 300. Average, 6 24-46. High runs, 40 42 and 21.

AQUEDUCT GUN CLUB SHOOT.

Dr. Bryant, with a Handicap of Nine, Won the Trophy.

W. Hopkins and A. Lauey retired from the firing point with clean scores of twenty-five breaks each in the Aqueduct Gun Club's monthly shoot yesterday. The trophy was a silver cup and the more expert gunners were handicapped. Hopkins, seeing that he had no opportunity to win, withdrew, and after shooting off three ties, Dr. Bryant, with a handicap of nine, captured the trophy. The scores:

Club shoot; 25 targets; unknown angles; handicap.—W. Hopkins, 25; A. Tristan, 18; W. Mills, 19; A. Lauey, 23; Dr. Bryant, 18; J. Hopkins, 15; E. Smith, 23; H. Van Sycklen, 18; W. Glaseborough, 18; H. Allen, 18; A. Van Sycklen, 14.

Shot-off for Cup.—A. Lauey, 21-25; Dr. Bryant, 16-18; E. Smith, 21-25; Glaseborough, 12-18; H. Allen, 12.

Second Shoot-off.—A. Lauey, 8-10; Dr. Bryant, 8-10; E. Smith, 8-10; Glaseborough, 5-10; H. Allen, 5, (withdrew.)

Reiff Boys Welcomed Home.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Dec. 20.—Lester Reiff and his brother John, whose performances on the English turf last Summer attracted the attention of the racing world, returned to their home at Cygnet, an oil town south of here. The entire town turned out to welcome them. The Reiff home is a small cottage, but the jockeys will build a more pretentious residence before they return to England.

The Equitable team scored a double victory in the Life Insurance League at Starr's Tournament Hall last night and are now in third place. In the first game the Germanias made a creditable showing. They rolled up a score of 830, defeating the Mutual Life team. The latter were again beaten in the second game by the Equitable team. In the final the Germanias fell off in their bowling and were beaten by the Equitables in a close contest. Scores:

FIRST GAME.

PLANS FOR PARIS ATHLETICS.

Princeton, Cornell, and Pennsylvania Will Send Teams.

Special to The New York Times.

SCHENECTADY, Dec. 20.—In an interview to-day regarding the trip to Paris next year of the Princeton track team, Capt. John F. Cracken, who is spending the holidays in this city, said:

"Princeton's track team will be composed of both graduates and undergraduates. All Princeton men are eligible for the team. Among the graduates will be such men as Capt. Robert Garret of the '97 team, Capt. Potter of the '98 team, Colfelt, who defeated Wefers, and many others.

"The undergraduate members of the team will be chosen from those men who win first and second places in the intercollegiate meet, to be held in New York City next May.

"The team will leave for Europe about June 20, 1900, by which time it is certain that the proper men will be available. The members of the team will go directly to one of the suburbs of the French capital, where quarters have been arranged for by the Princeton representative there. The team will also go into active training, under competent direction, and will continue to train hard for six weeks.

"The athletic events will probably be held about the middle of July at Vincennes, near Paris. Representative teams from every nation on earth will be on hand to compete in every known athletic diversion, and the leading event of the meet is expected to be the twenty-five-mile Marathon meet. Cornell and the University of Pennsylvania will also send teams to the meet.

"Princeton will take over every man who is reasonably sure to win something."

Princeton will have representatives at the Boston Athletic Association games on Feb. 3, 1900, and also at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club games in New York, Feb. 10. It is probable that she will meet Yale in a relay race shortly. A one-mile relay race will be "pulled off" with Columbia shortly, the date of which has not yet been settled upon. The teams will be composed of four men each, one man running a quarter of a mile.

VIENNA CHESS TOURNAMENT.

Four Players Tied for First Place at End of Third Round.

VIENNA, Dec. 20.—At the local chess club, in this city, the third round of the Memorial Kolisch National Chess Masters' tournament was begun in the following order:

Schlechter vs. Wolf, Popiel vs. Albin, Prock vs. Alapin, Brody vs. Korte, Maroczy vs. Schwarz, and Zinkl vs. Marco.

At the conclusion of the day's play the following results had been arrived at: Schlechter beat Wolf, Popiel lost to Albin, Brody and Korte adjourned their game in an even position, as did Maroczy and Schwarz, while Zinkl and Marco drew. The scores of all the players up to date follow:

Players.	Won.	Lost.	Players.	Won.	Lost.
Alapin	1½	½	Popiel	1	1
Albin	1½	½	Prock	0	2
Brody	1½	½	Schlechter	1½	½
Korte	1	1	Schwarz	0	1
Maroczy	½	1½	Zinkl	1½	½

The fourth round will be played on Friday, when the order of play will be as follows: Korte vs. Maroczy, Alapin vs. Brody, Albin vs. Prock, Wolf vs. Popiel, Zinkl vs. Schlechter, and Marco vs. Schwarz.

Pillsbury Plays Chess Blindfolded.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Dec. 20.—To-night before the Lexington Chess Club the champion, H. N. Pillsbury of Wheeling, West Va., played a blindfolded exhibition game, carrying twelve boards at one time. The noted player Showalter of Georgetown was present. Pillsbury plays in a tournament in Louisville, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday.

N. Y. YACHT CLUB'S OFFICERS.

Commodore J. Pierpont Morgan May Be Succeeded by L. C. Ledyard.

Although the rumor that Commodore J. Pierpont Morgan would retire from the position of chief flag officer of the New York Yacht Club could not be verified from official sources yesterday, enough was learned from prominent members of that organization to show that he had declined a renomination. Whether or not this determination will be altered is a question that is of much interest to members of the club.

It is known that Mr. Morgan is unwilling to assume the responsibilities of the position for another year owing to his business engagements and to the fact that he expects to spend the greater part of the year in Europe. His reply to all arguments is that the club is in excellent condition and only requires the guiding hand of a man who will be present at all times to keep it so. This attention Commodore Morgan will be unable to give during the coming year.

Vice Commodore Lewis Cass Ledyard, owner of the schooner Montauk, is the logical successor of Commodore Morgan, and August Belmont, the present Rear Commodore, owner of the cutter Mineola, who is building one of the

"FLOUR TRUSTS"

One of them caused the wreck of a Trust Company to the tune of $11,000,000.

There are other "Flour Trusts." Trust not in them. They sell stocks to their friends. The only thing to recommend the stocks is their price. So they put the price up. Their friends bought; and the friends of their friends; and yet their friends; until the entire population was loaded. And the higher the stocks the more the public bought.

BEWARE OF SUCH STOCKS.

Yesterday they sold at 135 and higher. Tomorrow they will sell at 20 and lower.

They will need reorganization very soon. Then a committee will be appointed and an assessment called. Soon the members of the committee will add to their fleet of steam yachts and other sundry luxuries. And the stockholders will watch for quotations on their stock.

The quotations will appear. That's part of the committee's business. And the stockholders will rejoice that their markets are active.

more gullible than the public, lend out their depositors' money, merely because they see a quotation for the stock on the tape and in their morning paper.

Some fine day an owner of a few hundred shares tries to sell. The stock breaks. The Bank Examiner steps in. Another bank wreck. What's the odds? The country is rich and can stand the game.

Put Not Your Trust in Trusts.

When Brooklyn Rapid Transit sold at 130 and 120 I publicly advised its sale for 60 and made millions for my followers.

I now tell you

B. R. T.
WILL FALL TO 20.

An expert analysis of the Company's finances shows it is EARNING A DEFICIT, with prospects of increasing its earnings IN THIS DIRECTION, as it goes along.

MARKET CONDITIONS.

Yesterday's security market was irregular in its movement. A better sentiment seemed prevailing, and commission house purchases were on substantial scale; but toward the end of the day selling of a number of specialties upset a large part of the list.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit was much the most conspicuous stock of the day, well on to 200,000 shares being traded in, the lowest figure of the day representing a recession of about 15 points and final figures showing a loss of over 9. Many sensational reports were current by way of explanation, not one of which could be verified, however. Receivership rumors were heard and there were crowding reports that an important inside speculator had of a sudden been induced to throw overboard his entire holdings of the stock. Official interests entitled to credit denied that there was truth in any such tales. The entire break was attributed by them to attacks by bear speculators. One fact not much disputable was that scant support was accorded to the stock. The stock was selling around $70 per share when receivership stories were most in circulation—such stories stating explicitly that Mr. William F. Sheehan, of counsel for the company, was to be made the receiver. Mr. Sheehan, in comment upon this report, said that, could any circulator of such a tale be located, it would be seen to at once that the Grand Jury would indict him. Later the stock sold nearly 10 points lower, and circulators of the report seemed to have intruded upon almost every brokerage house in Wall Street. Thus it may be that something more than stock market recessions may grow out of yesterday's Brooklyn Rapid Transit incident; and certain it is that wholesome effects could be produced by a proper punishment of rumormongering which has come to deal unhesitatingly in falsehoods.

Much the most significant and important incident of the day came from Vanderbilt interests—in the announcement that New York Central goes upon a higher dividend basis. The warrant for this is clear to everybody who has kept watch of the extraordinary progress represented by increases, gross and net, in New York Central revenues. What is represented in this dividend increase, however, has bearing much beyond the New York Central property itself, beyond the Vanderbilt group, indeed. In the action is reflected a policy which is inspired by most conservative counsels.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—On the Stock Exchange to-day the general tone was decidedly firmer. Business opened better, and there was a more confident feeling. After a temporary relapse prices rallied again, and there was a distinct recovery in almost all departments.

The market for American securities opened steady, with prices above parity level, but soon eased off. Later prices moved up on a better feeling and closed buoyant. The demand was active.

Consols for money, 98⅛; consols for the account, 98⅜; Canadian, 91¼; Erie, 11¼; Erie first preferred, 31⅝; Illinois Central, 112; Union Pacific preferred, 72½; St. Paul, 119½; New York Central, 120; Pennsylvania, 66¼; Reading, 8⅝; Northern Pacific preferred, 72¾; Atchison, 19; Louisville, 78⅝; Grand Trunk, 6½; Anaconda, 7⅛.

Money, 4½@5 per cent. Rate of discount in the open market for short and three months' bills, 6¾ per cent.

Spanish fours, 64⅝.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £45,000. Gold premiums: Buenos Ayres, 129; Madrid, 27.25; Lisbon, 43; Rome, 7.22½.

Bar silver quiet at 27⅛d per ounce.

The Stock Exchange will be closed Dec. 25 and 26 and Jan. 1.

The Grain Exchange will observe the Christmas holidays by closing Dec. 23, 25, and 26.

The Provisions Exchange will be closed Dec. 25 and 26.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Dec. 20.—Business opened cheerier on the Bourse to-day owing to easier money at New York, but the improved tone was dissipated quickly owing to rush sales on London account. Later, the tendency improved, as it came to be believed that neither London nor Paris will raise the bank rate to-morrow. South African securities were impressed favorably by a rumor that Gen. Clery had entered Ladysmith, and at the close they were well maintained. Three per cent. rentes, 99 francs 42½ centimes for the account. Exchange on London, 25 francs 35 centimes for checks. Spanish Fours 65.75.

BERLIN, Dec. 20.—On the Boerse to-day prices improved owing to the recovery in New York and the firmer prices in London. Transactions were limited, the uncertain position of the international money market causing speculators to hesitate. Exchange on London, 20 marks 54 pfennigs for checks.

FRANKFORT, Dec. 20.—Prices opened weak on the Boerse to-day, but subsequently improved on the receipt of reassuring reports from Berlin and the Western Bourses. Business, however, was small.

MADRID, Dec. 20.—Spanish fours closed to-day at 75.75. Gold was quoted at 27.75.

FINANCIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Board of Trustees of the Continental Trust Company have declared the usual quarterly dividend of 1½ per cent., payable to stockholders of record on Jan. 10, 1900. The books will close Jan. 2 and reopen Jan. 11.

Dividends have been declared by the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway Company, the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, the New York Air Brake Company, the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Company, the Otis Elevator Company, the Procter & Gamble Company, the State Bank, the Mercantile Trust Company, the National Broadway Bank, the Oriental Bank, the Garfield National Bank, the National Butchers and Drovers' Bank, the Mechanics' National Bank, the National Shoe and Leather Bank, the Merchants' Exchange National Bank, and the East River National Bank, details of which will be found in another column.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

After two days of exceptional weakness the outside market yesterday began to recover and the result of the day's transactions, as indicated by the closing quotations, seemed to show that for the moment heavy liquidation was over. Prices were irregular, but in several quarters of the market a distinctly firmer tone prevailed, and in a number of stocks final figures were considerably above those of the previous day. New Amsterdam Gas, Distilling of America, International Pump, and other issues advanced substantially, and though net changes included a number of losses, none of them was very large and they were probably outnumbered by the closing bids, showing improvement over Tuesday's prices. Except in a very few stocks transactions did not amount to as much as a thousand shares and many of the recoveries recorded were on sales of a few hundred shares. Total sales were probably much below the average of the two preceding days. At the opening selling that appeared to be urgent continued, but as the day advanced less desire to sell appeared and the demand for stocks became larger and stronger.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA was most prominent in the industrial group. Insiders were credited with being larger buyers of the stock and their purchases during the morning seemed to have absorbed most of the stock hanging over the market, and in the afternoon a steady advance was begun in the preferred stock, which carried it from 18⅝ to 20. It closed at 19⅝ bid, a net gain of 1½ points. Bids for the common stock advanced with those for the preferred, and after selling up to 7, it closed at 6½, a net gain of three-quarters of a point.

AMALGAMATED COPPER, transactions in which were below the recent average, was strong early in the day, but went off fractionally at the close, and ended the day with a loss of half a point, at 78 bid. Rumor in regard to the stock yesterday had to do with the probable action of the Directors in regard to the second quarterly dividend. The first dividend on Amalgamated Copper, paid in October last, was a quarterly dividend of 1¼ per cent. and an extra dividend of one-half of 1 per cent. Much interest will attach to the amount of the next dividend. Rumor had it yesterday that this dividend will amount to 3 per cent., the regular quarterly dividend and an extra disbursement of 1½ per cent. But such advance reports of the action to be taken by the Directors of the company seem nothing more than efforts to influence the market for the stock, and this influence yesterday amounted to nothing.

INTERNATIONAL PUMP reacted from the previous day's low price and sold to the extent of several hundred shares at 60. It ended the day at 59 bid, a several-point net gain.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS was strong on the rumors in regard to gas-war settlement, which were to the effect that conditions are now more favorable for a settlement than at any time recently, and the intimation is that the warring companies will shortly come to some agreement that will permit of the restoration of the legal rate. The common stock got up to 22¼ and made a net gain of 2¼ points, and the preferred stock showed a net gain of 1 point. Very little improvement appeared in the bonds the best bid for which, at the close, was 87½. Sale of one bond was made at 87.

NEW ENGLAND GAS AND COKE bonds sold at 71. Little demand was had for these bonds.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 20.—The volume of Boston trading to-day was large and prices held well as a rule. There was some liquidation among the mining stocks. Chicago, Burlington and Quincy was active, and there was the usual good interest in Sugar, Union Pacific, and Federal Steel. United States Oil rose 2, to 27½, reacting to 26¼. Montana was up 3, at 275, later 270. Butte touched 44½, a gain of 2½, later selling at 43. Osceola rose 3, to 70, later to 68¼. Utah gained 1½, to 25. Tamarack, 5, to 180. Parrot fell 1½ to 35½. Gold declined 2, to 2, later to 2½. Mohawk gained 1, to 16; Franklin, 1, to 14. Dominion Coal lost 2, to 42½. Boston Elevated hardened 1¼, to 96¼. New Haven and Hartford gained 1, to 209½.

At the close, Mercedes Mining was 1 lower for the day, at 8; Atchison preferred, 1⅝, at 57⅞; Sugar, 1⅛, at 126; Federal Steel unchanged, at 45½; Utah up ⅛, at 24; Union Land off ⅛, at 2½; Gold off 1, at 3; United States Oil unchanged, at 26; Amalgamated off ½, at 79; Montana off 6, at 261; New England Gas and Coke up ⅛, at 19½. Boston Elevated touched 100 for odd lots, against closing at 97 yesterday. Old Dominion was off 1, at 20. Calumet was up 10, at 730. Arcadian ¼ lower, at 23⅜; Tamarack up 4½, at 179½; Old Colony Mining up ⅛, at 4⅜; Osceola up 1, at 68; Wolverine up ⅛, at 37½; American Zinc off 1, at 16; Centennial off 1, at 16; Dominion Coal off 2½, at 42.

At the Clearing House the rate between banks was 6 per cent. and New York funds sold at 20c discount.

Money locally is very plentiful, and strong borrowers have no trouble in getting what accommodation is required. Rates are nominal, though 6 per cent. is everywhere the minimum. There is very little doing in time money. On the very highest grade of dividend securities 6 per cent. is the general quotation for all dates. The market for commercial paper is exceedingly quiet. Banks are taking good care of their customers at 6 per cent. and upward.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 20.—Biscuit opened at 34¾, and after selling to 36, broke to 35 and closed at 35⅛. The preferred closed at 90, a gain of 2 points. Linseed was active on a narrow range. It opened at 51¾, dropped the fraction, advanced to 52, and, after some vicissitudes, closed there. The common closed at 11½, having opened at 12¼ and sold to 12¼. Metropolitan Elevated preferred was sold heavily. It opened at 75, and, after improving half a point, closed at 74. The certificates lost half a point in closing at 25½. The tendency of Match was lower. It opened at 119½, lost the fraction, and then sold to 120, but dropped to 118¾, and closed at 118¾.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 20.—The local stocks opened strong and generally higher, some substantial advances being scored in the early trading. Lehigh Valley rose 1¼, to 24¾; Cambria Steel, ⅞, to 18⅞; Electric Company of America, ⅞, to 12; Tidewater Steel, ¾, to 12¾; Susquehanna Steel, ¾, to 5; Marsden, 1, to 11¼; Union Traction, ¾, to 37; United Gas, 2½, to 140; American Cement, ¾, to 8; Welsbach Light, 4, to 40; Consolidated Traction of Pittsburg, 1½, to 27; Electric Storage Battery, 5, to 80; Bethlehem Steel, 1, to 17½. The improvement, however, was not maintained. The development of weakness in New York started liquidation afresh, and a general recession in prices followed.

The close was steady, at these bid and asked prices:

The Alhambra at Syracuse Burned.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Dec. 20.—The Alhambra, the famous convention hall of Syracuse, where the Democrats of the State have held their conventions during recent years, was destroyed by fire at 3:30 o'clock this morning. The flames threatened also to destroy St. John's Roman Catholic Cathedral, which was saved only after heroic efforts by the firemen. The loss amounts to $60,000.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

John T. Williams said yesterday afternoon that the report that he had sold his ten-story building, at the southwest corner of Broadway and White Street, 50 by 100, was without foundation.

The O. H. P. Archer estate has sold to Joseph Frank the plot at the northeast corner of Manhattan Avenue and One Hundred and Seventh Street, 100.11 by 170, formerly a part of Lion Park.

It is learned on good authority that the seven-story apartment house at the northeast corner of Broadway and Ninety-sixth Street, 100 by 86, has been sold. The owner of record of the property is C. J. La Grassa.

Homer J. Beaudet filed plans yesterday for a seven-story apartment house to be erected at the northeast corner of Riverside Drive and One Hundred and Fifteenth Street on a plot 103.7 by 110.6 by 100.11 by 87, which he has recently bought from Jacob D. Butler. According to the estimate of Architect George Keister, the improvement will cost $225,000.

George R. Read has sold for Louisa Bergman the four-story brick and stone dwelling at the northwest corner of St. Nicholas Avenue and One Hundred and Forty-sixth Street, on a plot 49.11 by 100.

Duff & Conger and G. Tuoti & Co. have sold for Mary E. McCoun and Emilie R. Keogh, 90, 92, and 94 Baxter Street, five-story front and rear double tenements, with stores, 75 by 100. The same brokers have also sold for the same owners, 93 Baxter Street, a lot, 25 by 100, with old buildings, and 101 Bayard Street, 25 by 100, a five-story front and rear tenement, with stores.

Levinson & Lippmann have bought from Adelson & Slone the lot, 474 Grand Street, already excavated. The same builders have also bought for improvement, with a six-story tenement, the northeast corner of Grand and Goerck Streets, 40 by 81.3.

Charles E. Schuyler & Co. have sold for Robert Sherwood the three-and-a-half story dwelling, 352 West End Avenue, 19 by 100.

Lowenfeld & Prager have sold to B. Hamburger, 143 Avenue B, northeast corner of Ninth Street, also, to Catharine Block, 386 East Eighth Street, a four-story tenement; also, to Bernard Klingenstein, the new six-story tenement, 325 and 327 Stanton Street; also, to Joseph Kassewitz, for improvement, 314 East Twenty-fifth Street, 25 by 98.9.

The same operators have also bought the five-story flat, 144 East Fifty-eighth Street, 20 by 80.5; also the plot on the north side of Seventy-sixth Street, 202 feet east of First Avenue, 44 by 102.2.

J. P. & E. J. Murray have sold for the estate of M. Kelly to A. Levy the three-story frame dwelling 225 East One Hundred and Eleventh Street, 15 by 100.

G. Touti & Co. have leased for Michael J. Bergen the five-story brick double tenement, 181 Mott Street, for five years for $14,250.

Maclay & Davies have sold for Charles Ward Hall to Marx E. Harby the 80¼ acres of land known as the Marten tract on the east side of North Broadway and Odell Avenue, Yonkers, just north of Greystone.

ULTIMATUM TO LIBRARIES

Sunday Closing May Be Followed by Withdrawal of Funds.

CONTROLLER COLER INDIGNANT

The Corporation Counsel Declares the Trustees' Decision Is in the Nature of a Threat.

The closing of the free libraries on Sunday, which began this week, has drawn forth an ultimatum from Controller Coler and Corporation Counsel Whalen, who yesterday declared that if the managers of the libraries persist in their determination, the city would intervene by cutting off the appropriations altogether.

Under the State library law, such institutions as are organized in conformity with the plan adopted by the Board of Regents receive not more than 10 cents per volume of circulation. The funds thus derived are supposed to defray the expenses of circulation, including the salaries of attendants. When the New York Free Circulating Library sent in its estimate for 1900 it asked for $120,000, based on its sworn statement of 1,200,000 books circulated in the fiscal year ending June 30 last. Instead of granting this amount, the Board of Estimate allowed $61,500, in conformity with the sliding scale adopted at the suggestion of the Controller. This amount, the Trustees claim, is insufficient.

Controller Coler, after studying the situation, yesterday announced that he would favor the administration making the payment of the money contingent upon the libraries being opened daily. "The reduced appropriation is sufficient," Mr. Coler said, "to insure a wholesome growth of the libraries and adequate service for the people. It pays all salaries, and that is as much as the city ought to do for any private corporation.

"The present situation shows better than anything else could the necessity for the consolidation of all libraries receiving municipal aid with the New York Public Library. Only when that is accomplished and the city owns and conducts the circulating libraries will there be anything like what we ought to have."

Corporation Counsel Whalen had this to say:

"If those in charge of the free public libraries insist on closing on Sundays I believe that the proper course for the city is to decline to contribute a cent to their support. The people in charge of these libraries blame the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, I believe, and say that because the appropriations made to them were reduced they cannot keep open on Sundays. Their appropriations were reduced, but what was given to them is adequate. Their Sunday closing I consider a bluff, a threat, an attempt, in fact, to hold up the city to get more money.

"New York pays plenty of money to these people, and it pays that money in order that citizens may have the free use of those libraries. The citizens who contribute the money, the taxpayers, have, by virtue of their contributions, a right to say something through their officials as to what the library people shall do. Sunday is the day when most people can use the libraries, and if they are closed to them on that day, the city's financial support should be withdrawn, because it is sufficient to keep them open."

Francis C. Huntington, Secretary of the New York Free Circulating Library, intimated yesterday that further cuts in the service might follow the Sunday closing of the libraries.

"We will do all we can with the city's appropriation," he said, "even though it is insufficient. Retrenchment became necessary and we were forced to close on Sundays. It is possible that we will have to close during the mornings in Summer. This action has been proposed and discussed, but has not been decided upon."

Examination for Chief Croker.

The Municipal Civil Service Commission is preparing a series of examination questions for applicants for the position of Chief of the Fire Department, which Chief Croker must pass before he can draw the pay of his rank. A recent decision of the Appellate Division has, it is said, changed the opinion of Fire Commissioner Scannell, who has heretofore maintained that he had the right to appoint the Chief without examination. Chief Croker has a suit pending to compel the payment of his salary, a counterpart of the case recently decided, and this latter suit was considered by all parties as a test case.

ELEVATOR FELL, THREE HURT.

A freight elevator, with three men and a large safe in it, fell from the fifth story to the basement of the business building at 250 Mercer Street, soon after noon yesterday. The men were badly injured. They are Owen Plunkett of 302 East Thirty-first Street, the elevator attendant; Charles Haggerty of 31 Hamilton Street, and Peter Daly of 3 Sullivan Street, who were in charge of the safe.

The building in which the accident happened is owned by Joseph T. Tower of 542 Fifth Avenue. It extends from Mercer Street to Broadway, on which thoroughfare it fronts. From the second and fifth floors Ivan Frank & Co., clothiers, were moving, and Haggerty and Daly, who are employed by Coulsen & Co., truckmen, of 3 Sullivan Street, were helping to remove the safe. They had just got it on the elevator, and Plunkett was about to start the car, when one of the wire ropes snapped and the car fell to the basement. The crash startled everybody in the building, and was heard by many persons in the street, which was crowded with heavily laden trucks. The shouts and shrieks that followed soon attracted a crowd of spectators.

Sergt. Edward S. Walling, in the police station across the street, hastened to the door. A man ran up to him shouting that an elevator had fallen, and that several persons had been killed.

The Sergeant hastily telephoned to the New York and St. Vincent's Hospitals for ambulances, and then turned out every available policeman. Roundsman Alcorn, Patrolmen Cortright, Ruth, Chambers, and others were already rendering assistance. Excited employes were swarming down the stairs of the building. An equally excited crowd was surging about the elevator door. The police drove them back, and then extricated the groaning men from the elevator and carried them to the station house.

Dr. Fitch, from St. Vincent's, and Dr. Clark, from the New York Hospital, examined the men. Plunkett had his left ankle fractured, his right ankle dislocated, and his head cut; Haggerty's right arm was broken and his back badly hurt; Daly had his right ankle dislocated and received internal injuries. Plunkett and Haggerty were taken to St. Vincent's, and Daly to the New York Hospital.

The police say the carrying capacity of the elevator was from 1,800 to 2,000 pounds, and they estimated that the safe weighed from 2,800 to 3,000 pounds. The elevator, according to Engineer Charles Mott, was inspected a week ago. At the time of the accident an Inspector from the Building Department was looking over the engines of the elevator on the Broadway side of the building.

Helen D. Ward Gets No Verdict.

The jury which has been listening to the testimony in the suit brought by Helen D. Ward against St. Vincent's Hospital to recover $30,000 damages yesterday reported to Justice Leventritt, in the Supreme Court, that they could not agree. The plaintiff is a sister-in-law of Henry E. Howland. She was a patient in St. Vincent's Hospital some years ago. She claimed that owing to the incompetency of a nurse, she sustained permanent injuries. This was the second trial of the action.

Joseph Moss's Brother Dead.

Thomas H. Moss, who for the past eleven years had been the battery man in the telegraph department at Police Headquarters, died at his home, 200 East Twenty-first Street, yesterday. He had been ill for two weeks with a complication of ailments. He was a brother of Joseph Moss of the firm of Howe & Hummel. He was fifty years of age. He was a Democrat and a member of Tammany Hall.

LEGAL NOTES.

DISTRIBUTION OF REAL ESTATE AMONG "NEXT OF KIN."—A trust for the benefit of Julia A. Livingston, during the joint lives of herself and Lewis Livingston, her husband, and to cease at the death of either, was created under the will of James Boggs, of which, in June, 1873, the New York Life Insurance and Trust Company became the trustee. If the husband died first, the trustee was to transfer the entire trust to Mrs. Livingston, but if she died first the trustee was to transfer it all to her children. In December, 1876, the children—James B. and Lewis H. Livingston—whose parents were still living, executed to the same trustee a trust deed, directing it, in a certain contingency, to distribute "the sums hereby conveyed in trust among the next of kin of the parties of the first part, according to the statute of distribution of the State of New York." Mrs. Livingston died in November, 1884, and her husband two years later. James B. Livingston, who died in 1887, gave all his property to his brother, Lewis, who was his only heir at law and next of kin. Lewis, who died in 1893, unmarried, and who left no ancestor, descendant, brother, or sister, gave his residuary estate to Margaret L. Lee. His sole heir-at-law, in respect to real estate coming from his mother, was Mary Ray de Courval, the only child of a maternal aunt, who died in 1874. In an action by the trustee against Henry S. Hoyt and others to construe the trust instruments, the Court of Appeals, affirming the First Appellate Division, held, in an opinion by Judge Vann, that, as there was nothing in other parts of the deed executed by the brothers to control the intention which the literal force of the phrase "next of kin" necessarily imputed to the settlers of the trust, distribution of the property covered by the trust, and by the direction, even though it consisted of real as well as personal property, was to be made exclusively among the class of next of kin as ascertained by the statute of distribution; and the proceeds of the real estate were not to be distributed among another class of persons, who, under another statute, would take as heirs-at-law.

DOMESTIC WILL, EXECUTED IN FOREIGN COUNTRY.—Mary Griffin, who died at Dresden, Germany, in 1888, by her will, made there ten years previously, gave her residuary estate in trust for the benefit of her children and grandchildren. The trustee by the third clause of the will was directed to apply the income of one-third of it to the use of her married daughter, Emily, a resident of Saxony, during her life, and after her death to pay the principal "to her then living lawful issue." If she left no such issue, it was to be added in equal parts to the several shares of the testatrix's ten grandchildren, whom, by a later clause, she carefully enumerated by name. If Emily should die before her, the testatrix directed that the share held for her should go directly to the grandchildren. The property was in this State, and the will was executed according to the laws of this State. Emily, who survived the testatrix, had, before the will was made, adopted in Saxony a niece of her husband. The civil code of that country provided that "the reciprocal legal relationship between an adopted child and the adopting party is the same as that between a child of the marriage and its parents, in so far as it is not otherwise provided in the contract of adoption." This child, Olga Felicitas Lengnick, claimed a third of the trust estate, as one of the "then living issue" of Emily. In a suit by the New York Life Insurance and Trust Company, as trustee under Mrs. Griffin's will, against Terese Viele and others, the Court of Appeals has decided against Miss Lengnick, the claimant, holding (opinion by Judge O'Brien) that the words "lawful issue," when used in a domestic will, primarily and generally mean descendants, and where there was nothing to the contrary in the context, or in extraneous facts, proper to be considered, that was the sense in which they were to be presumed to be used in this will. The intention of the testatrix controlled the construction, and the conventional status of the adopted child under the laws of the country of its adoption, or under the civil law, was not pertinent, and it was immaterial whether, under those laws, the child would be considered to be the lawful issue of the testatrix's daughter.

A MINING ENTERPRISE IN SPAIN.—William D. Marvel, in the Spring of 1886, was engaged in an effort to float an enterprise for the opening and working of iron mines in the Alhamilla Mountains, near Almeria, Spain, and by representations that he was the absolute owner of the mines, which he said were very productive and rich, and that he had a concession from the Government of Spain to build a railway from the mines to the coast, he interested a number of capitalists in the project. Among them were George F. Stone, Robert L. S. Hall, and John C. McKenzie, the first named contributing $100,000, and the others $25,000 each. A corporation, known as the Marvel Iron Company, was organized, and a "commercial contract" was made between the corporation and Marvel, whereby he was to have the sole charge for it of the sale and shipment of ores. Under Marvel's management, the enterprise failed, and a partnership formed to furnish Marvel with money to build the railroad became financially embarrassed. A trust agreement was then entered into between all the parties in interest, whereby Stone was intrusted with the management of the property. A few days before this, Marvel gave certain shares of his stock to his wife, Sarah E. Marvel, which she held for three years without attempting to transfer them on the company's books. Andros B. Stone, to whom Mrs. Marvel transferred some of these shares, but who paid nothing for them, brought an action to set aside the trust agreement and the acts done under it, which action was continued by Isabella S. Marbury as Stone's administratrix, against Georgianna C. Stone and another, as executors of George F. Stone and others. The Court of Appeals recently upheld, on the opinion of Justice Williams, in the First Appellate Division, a judgment on the report of a referee dismissing the complaint. The Court holds that the trust agreement with George F. Stone was not void, such contracts, executed in good faith between a private business corporation and its trustees, where no public interest was involved or private interest injured, being held to be voidable merely, at the election of those who are injured by them. The plaintiff, the Court said, had no greater rights than Mrs. Marvel, who had paid nothing for her stock, and her failure to attack the trust agreement during these three years, in view of her knowledge of the acts done under it, was held to constitute laches, which prevented her, as well as her assignee, from having the trust agreement set aside.

STEALING AT A FUNERAL.

Professional Mourner Interrupts Service and Is Accused of Theft.

"Oyster Jim," who figures in the Rogues' Gallery under that alias, and the name of Patrick Stewart, and is a confidence man, the police say, of great ability, whose special line is that of a professional mourner, was held for trial in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday on a charge of larceny. He attended a funeral at the home of Robert Trunkle, at 459 West Twenty-sixth Street, on Tuesday, to which he was not invited. He picked up an overcoat valued at $20 while in the house and ran out. He was observed, and the funeral service was interrupted long enough to enable some of the regular mourners to follow him. He was captured by Mr. Trunkle, who turned him over to Policeman Livingston of the West Twentieth Street Station.

The funeral services were resumed, but Mr. Trunkle had to borrow another coat to go to the cemetery. The one which the man had taken was offered in evidence.

HURT IN CRASH ON BROADWAY.

Mrs. A. A. Drake and Daughter Tossed from a Brougham.

There was a general mix-up of cabs, carriages, carts, wagons, and street cars yesterday afternoon at Twenty-third Street and Broadway, during which a Hotel Majestic brougham was overturned and wrecked. Its occupants, Mrs. A. A. Drake and her daughter, who live at the Hotel Majestic, were thrown from the vehicle and injured, but not seriously. They were carried into the Fifth Avenue Hotel, where they were attended by a physician and afterward taken home. Mrs. Drake was cut and bruised about the face and head and, with her daughter, suffered much from shock.

Vehicles of all kinds were in a big jam at this busy locality. The motorman of a westbound Twenty-third Street Cross-Town trolley car, in an effort to get clear of the mass, suddenly started his car forward. Just as he did so a hansom was driven directly in front of the car. In the collision that followed the hansom was hurled against the brougham containing Mrs. and Miss Drake. It was then that the latter vehicle was broken and overturned. The horses attached to the brougham tried to run away, but were soon caught.

Neither the hansom nor the car was damaged, except for a few scratches. Among the passengers in the car there was a little excitement. No arrests were made.

Here's a Christmas grab-bag. A very little of any one thing, not much all told, a mix-up of coats that don't match trousers and trousers that don't match anything. Other odds and ends.

TO FIGHT SCHOOL BILLS

Board Committee to Report Amendments to the Charter.

SALARY INCREASES ABANDONED

Teachers to Receive Only Such Additions as Are Mandatory—Serious Outlook for 1900.

At its final meeting for 1899, held yesterday afternoon, the School Board for Manhattan and the Bronx Boroughs determined to unite with the other school boards of the city in fighting objectionable legislation at Albany, and decided, owing to want of sufficient funds, to abandon with the new year its schedule of May 17 equalizing salaries, and to go back to the salaries in force previous to the adoption of that schedule.

Fourteen of the eighteen members who now comprise the board were present. Its next meeting will be on Jan. 3, 1900. It is expected that the Mayor meanwhile will appoint successors to the following Commissioners, who have resigned or whose terms of office expire Jan. 1, 1900: Richard H. Adams, John G. Agar, John E. Eustis, William Greenough, John M. Linck, Joseph J. Little, and Abraham Stern. Unless Mr. Little is reappointed both the Central and the School Boards will have to elect a temporary officer, as he is President of both bodies. The organization for 1900 of the Central Board and the various School Boards does not take place until February.

Ex-Judge Van Hoesen moved at yesterday's meeting for the appointment of a special committee of five on legislation, to report needed amendments to the educational chapter of the charter, and to prevent the passage at Albany this Winter of bills detrimental to the best interests of the schools. This committee is authorized to confer with similar committees appointed by the other School Boards, so as to agree upon joint action. The resolution was unanimously adopted, and Commissioners Van Hoesen, Harrison, Eustis, Lee, and Abraham Stern were appointed on the committee.

Commissioner Moriarty moved that, as Acting Secretary Bussey had done extra work for the past six months, and in connection with the troubles over the teachers' salaries, his pay for December be fixed at $708.33, instead of $208.33, his regular monthly wages.

"I am sorry I can't vote for that resolution," said Commissioner Burlingham. "I know that Mr. Bussey deserves well, and I should have been glad to have seen him made Secretary long ago. But this practically gives him back pay, and this board has no right to do that. At this rate, his salary would be $8,500 a year."

Commissioner Stern said that Mr. Burlingham was inconsistent. He had voted to give the teachers back pay; now he objected to doing as much for the Acting Secretary. The board, Mr. Stern said, had a right to increase Mr. Bussey's pay. Commissioner O'Brien declared that Mr. Burlingham was splitting hairs over this question. If the board had elected a Secretary, as it ought to have done six months ago, Mr. Bussey would not have been asked to do the Secretary's work for that length of time. The extra work was forced on Mr. Bussey as the result of the board's inaction.

"What we ought to do to-day," said Commissioner Eustis, "is to elect Mr. Bussey Secretary of the board. Instead of $500, he is entitled to $2,000, the difference between his present salary and the Secretary's salary for six months. We ought to have the manhood to take this step. I'll vote for the resolution, but I doubt its legality."

Commissioner Burlingham moved to amend by fixing Mr. Bussey's salary at $250 per month instead of $208. Ex-Judge Van Hoesen moved to lay the matter on the table. This motion and Commissioner Burlingham's amendment were both lost. Then Commissioner Moriarty's original motion was passed by a vote of 12 to 2, Commissioners Van Hoesen and Burlingham voting in the negative.

The joint Committee on Finance and Teachers, to which was referred the preparation of a new salary schedule for 1900 so as to bring the teachers' salaries within the amount allowed by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment made a statement to the effect that the amount allowed is $596,715.18 less than the estimated amount required. In the amount allowed there appears the sum of $250,000 "for additions to and equalization of salaries of teachers other than supervisors of special branches and high school teachers," but this amount is not available for increases during 1900. The report goes on to say:

"The pay rolls of high schools at present are at the rate of $247,800 per annum. The estimated cost of the high schools during 1900 is $313,200, of which $47,000 is for additional teachers and increases. In our estimate for 1900 the sum of $324,180 was insisted for additional Principals and teachers for the elementary schools to take care of the increased attendance in old schools and in new buildings. For additional teachers the Board of Estimate and Apportionment has allowed the sum of $180,000. Another element of uncertainty has been introduced by the decision of the Board of Superintendents to allow service of teachers, while substituting and while serving as additional teachers, to count in their claims for the minimum salaries of the Ahearn act.

"When the estimate was prepared the date of the regular appointment of the teacher was taken as the date from which to reckon the time when the teacher would become entitled to increase under the Ahearn act, and provision was made accordingly, and this method was pursued by the Board of Superintendents in determining who were entitled to advances when the present schedule went into effect. Under this latest decision of the Superintendents there will be a large number of teachers who will become entitled to increases during 1900 for whom no provision was made in the budget.

"Your committee hopes to be able to save money in certain directions, but there is no hope of effecting a sufficient saving to carry the present schedule through 1900; in fact, as the situation looks at present, a return to the salaries paid in May last is imperative.

"Your committee will give the most careful consideration to this whole subject, and, if it is found that by economizing in certain directions some increases may be allowed other than the mandatory increases of the Ahearn law, a schedule will be prepared and presented to the board for its consideration."

The committee then offers resolutions repealing the schedule of May 17, after Dec. 31, 1899; paying the teachers not affected by the Ahearn law the same rates of salary after Jan. 1, 1900, that they received previous to the passage of the May schedule, no woman teacher, however, to receive less than $600 and no man teacher less than $900, and to pay all the minimum mandatory salaries of the Ahearn law. The resolutions were unanimously adopted, as was also a resolution compelling each eligible list of teachers to be exhausted before a new list is taken up. This, it is said, will end the present system of keeping certain persons on eligible lists for several years waiting for positions while those more favored secure them.

MAXWELL ANSWERS SKINNER.

Some time ago City Superintendent Maxwell licensed ten graduates of St. Francis Xavier College to teach in the public schools of this city. Only one of these ten—William T. Smith—has so far been appointed a teacher. He is now employed in School No. 27, Brooklyn.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction Skinner holds that Dr. Maxwell had no right to license these ten men until they had received from the State Superintendent certificates to the effect that they had completed satisfactorily an approved course of training. Dr. Maxwell maintains, however, that he was justified in granting the licenses because the men had completed satisfactorily an approved course. A few days ago Superintendent Skinner entered a protest with the Brooklyn School Board against the payment of Mr. Smith's salary. The matter was referred to Controller Coler, but it is understood that the salary will be paid. The only thing left for Mr. Skinner to do is to refuse $100 State money for this one teacher.

Dr. Maxwell says that Mr. Smith did the work required by the charter in order to make him eligible, and is in every way in good standing as a teacher. Smith's license will undoubtedly be made permanent, Dr. Maxwell says, if he continues to do good work. The validity of the license issued by the Board of Examiners to these graduates has been determined and sustained by the Board of Education acting on the advice of its Law Committee.

AGNEW HELD FOR TRIAL.

Testimony Against the Manager of the Washington Syndicate.

Magistrate Kramer yesterday in the Lee Avenue Police Court, Brooklyn, held John G. Agnew, the manager of the Washington Syndicate, at 81 Greenpoint Avenue, in $1,000 bail for trial at Special Sessions on the charge of carrying on a business contrary to the banking laws of the State. Agnew was arrested last month, soon after the collapse of the Franklin Syndicate, at 144 Floyd Street, and the flight of its manager, Miller. Agnew's concern had barely started business when the police began an investigation, and the arrest of Agnew followed.

At the hearing yesterday, John B. Moriarity, chief clerk of the Banking Department of the State, who had been requested by District Attorney Steele of Kings County to look up the syndicate, testified that he had examined the records, books, and lists of the department and had failed to find the name of John G. Agnew or a concern known as the Washington Syndicate.

Agnew's bookkeeper, F. W. Noehmer, testified next. He said that he went into Agnew's employ on Nov. 10, taking charge of four books, and that four days later the first depositor, Armand Vold, appeared. Vold deposited $20, and afterward it was repaid to him in sums of $2, $2, and $16. Noehmer added that Agnew handled all the syndicate's funds and he (Noehmer) only received credit and debit slips to enter in the books.

While Noehmer was testifying the attorney for the prosecution demanded the production of the syndicate's books. A protest was made by Agnew's attorney, John P. Donnelly, but the Magistrate ruled against the protest and the books and a stack of receipts were placed in evidence.

Detectives Bahlen and Donlon of the Greenpoint Avenue Station both testified to going to the syndicate's office and questioning Agnew, who told them he was simply managing the concern for a man named Lamont, who lived somewhere in Macon Street.

After the detectives had given their evidence Lawyer Donnelly moved for a dismissal of the complaint on the ground that no offense had been proved, and also that it had not been proved that Agnew was in the banking business. Magistrate Kramer declined to accede to the request. In holding Agnew for trial at Special Sessions he reduced the bail bond from $5,000 to $1,000.

Madden and Sutphen at Peace.

The fight in the Democratic Party in Queens Borough is at an end, and it is understood that Leader John P. Madden and County Clerk John Sutphen, who aspired to lead the party in the borough, have settled their differences and will work in harmony.

At the meeting of the Central Committee Tuesday night Mr. Madden was nominated for Chairman and Mr. Sutphen seconded the nomination. His election was unanimous.

GEN. ANDREWS'S SUCCESSOR.

Putnam Bradlee Strong Named as a Possible Appointee—The Question of Politics.

In military circles yesterday two new officers were added to the list of those already prominently mentioned for the Adjutant Generalship which, by the resignation of Gen. A. D. Andrews, will become vacant on Dec. 31 inst. The latest officers who are named as standing a good chance to receive the position are Capt. W. Francis Carey, Quartermaster of the Twenty-second Regiment, and an ex-volunteer officer, and Major Putnam Bradlee Strong, son of ex-Mayor Strong, who served at Manila as a volunteer staff officer.

At Gen. Roe's headquarters it was stated that nothing was known regarding the matter. Gen. George Moore Smith of the Fifth Brigade denied the rumor that he had been offered the place.

ALBANY, N. Y., Dec. 20.—Apropos of the many reports in circulation as to the Governor's choice to succeed Adjt. Gen. Andrews, the Governor, besides the name of Capt. Landon of Company I, Seventh Regiment, which has been prominently mentioned in connection with the office, has about twenty names under consideration. Col. Edward M. Hoffman, Assistant Inspector General of Small Arms Practice, has, it is understood, declined to relinquish his present life position to accept another which at its best is a political uncertainty. Besides, Col. Hoffman is peculiarly fitted to the position he now occupies, and the Governor now realizes this fact, and does not think it would be a wise move to promote him to an entirely different sphere of the military service.

In making the appointment the Governor will not select a man who is not agreeable to Major Gen. Roe. Neither will he allow Adjt. Gen. Andrews to name his successor, as some of the newspapers have already intimated.

It has also been reported that politics will enter into the appointment more or less. On this point Adjt. Gen. Andrews said today:

"Politics have not in any shape or fashion, directly or indirectly, entered into National Guard matters during my term of office."

MUSICIAN AND COMPOSER DEAD.

Prof. J. W. Glover Passes Away in Dublin, Ireland.

Cable advices received in this city yesterday announce the death in Dublin on Tuesday of Prof. J. W. Glover, a noted musician. He was born in Dublin eighty-nine years ago, and gained prominence for the edition of Moore's "Melodies" which he harmonized and edited. Among his numerous compositions were an oratorio, "St. Patrick at Tara," "The Deserted Village," an opera founded on Oliver Goldsmith's poem, and an ode to Parnell. He was for many years organist of the cathedral in Dublin. He leaves three children, Mrs. D. Glover-O'Sullivan, an organist of this city; William F. Glover, musical director of Chicago, and Mme. Gray, a harpist of London. He was the grandfather of the singer, Miss Marie Glover.

WOMAN TOOK ANOTHER'S BOY.

Found After a Seventeen-Hour Hunt and Held for Kidnapping—Child Returned to His Parents.

Mrs. Marie Symonds, a childless old scrubwoman, on the verge of delirium tremens, is now in the Tombs on a charge of having kidnapped four-year-old Joseph McAvoy, whose seventeen-hour disappearance set his parents and the police searching for him. Mrs. Symonds and her husband, Hiram, of 78 St. Mark's Place, both say that she could have had no intention of kidnapping the child, and must have been temporarily insane, but "Joe's" mother, Mrs. Patrick McAvoy, thinks another Marion Clark case has been nipped in the bud. "Joe's" father is a porter, while his mother is janitress of the house at 99 Walker Street, where "Joe" lives with his sister and two brothers.

Mrs. McAvoy at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning took the boy down to the second floor, which she intended to clean. She found some plumbers at work there, however, and went up stairs again. When she reached the head of the stairs she missed "Joe." She called for him, searched all through the building, and finally went out on the street, but could find no trace of him. All the tenants of the house and the neighbors turned out, and finally Mr. McAvoy was called to join in the search, but "Joe" was not to be found.

Mrs. McAvoy spent that evening in repeated visits to the Church Street, Elizabeth Street, Leonard Street, Oak Street, and Old Slip Station inquiring for the missing child. The police at first told her that "Joe" would turn up in a few hours, but she was so persistent that Sergt. Tappen of the Elizabeth Street Station sent out a general alarm, with a description of the missing boy.

Patrolman Frederick J. Weidmeyer of the Oak Street Station at 2 o'clock yesterday morning saw a shabby old woman with spectacles and a satchel leading a little boy along Park Row. The boy had yellow hair and blue eyes, and answered the description of the missing Joseph McAvoy. The policeman stopped the woman and asked her where she was going with the child.

"I'm taking it home," she said. "You let me alone. It belongs to a fireman." Weidmeyer held the woman, who struggled to get away, and questioned her further. She then said she was the boy's mother, but the boy spoke up and said that she was not.

"Well, I'm his aunt, anyway, if I'm not his mother," said the woman.

"Tell that to the Sergeant in the police station," said Weidmeyer, dragging her along.

In the police station Mrs. Symonds gave her name, and said she was a scrubwoman for Campbell, Metzger & Jacobson, in Broadway. "Mr. Campbell was married yesterday, and I was ordered to bring this child to the wedding. I couldn't help it. I found him standing in front of his door."

Mrs. McAvoy was notified, and hurried to the station house, where she identified Joe and carried him off amid great rejoicing. Joe said he had spent an enjoyable day and evening until he became tired. "We went to see a fire engine," said he, "and had rides on trolley cars, and went to a whole lot of other places where they drink."

Mrs. Symonds was taken to Police Headquarters, where she has been known as "Specsie" for some time. Capt. McClusky, after a long talk with her and her husband, said he thought she had not intended to kidnap the child, but was crazed with drink. She was arraigned in the Centre Street Court, and told Magistrate Hogan that she had not intended to kidnap the child, and did not know what she was doing.

Her husband pleaded for her, and said she had been drinking, but the Magistrate held her in $1,000 bail for trial.

Home for a Church College.

The Church of St. Ignatius Loyola will erect a five-story brick and stone building at the northwest corner of Park Avenue and Eighty-third Street, to be occupied by the college maintained under its auspices. The structure will cover a plot 35.5 by 94, and will cost $80,000. Schickel & Ditmars are the architects.

MR. GAGE ON THE SITUATION

PURCHASE OFFER STILL HOLDS

Only $20,000,000 Worth of Bonds Have Been Presented by Holders—Government Securities Advance.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—"It is generally a careful and calm analysis of the situation," said Secretary Gage to-day, referring to the leading editorial article in this morning's issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES on "Relief from the Treasury." "It is the business man's view and is helpful in not adding excitement to the situation. But I cannot quite follow it in its suggestion as to additional relief through an offer of the Treasury to take bonds from bidders up to the amount of twenty-five or thirty millions of dollars."

"The Treasury," continued the Secretary, "has endeavored to relieve a money stringency in the only way that it could do so legitimately. By offers to purchase bonds, to anticipate interest due without and with rebate, and to go without the income to be derived from internal revenue, so that the money could become available through the depositories, it has done what it seemed proper to do. Since it offered to take up $25,000,000 of bonds, the prices of bonds have advanced, and they hold their price, while many stocks have fallen many points on the market. Some of the bonds now quoted could be worth to purchasers less than 2 per cent. at the price made. Of the $25,000,000 of bonds the Treasury offered to buy, but $20,000,000 have been offered. The offer is still standing. We may get the other $5,000,000 or $6,000,000.

"Altogether there will be released from Treasury control and made available for immediate use, at various points, as the Treasury could not discriminate in favor of one city in increasing its deposits in banks, about $36,000,000. As I have said, the prices of bonds have advanced. They are now beyond the price at which the Treasury offered to buy them. How much should the Treasury offer to pay? And when it has offered to pay a price, will that price be advanced again? That seems to be a matter worthy of consideration when the plan proposed is looked at carefully."

The impression at the Treasury to-day was that the unrest in New York caused by the breaking down of the Produce Exchange Trust Company, was likely to be overcome by good management. There was no sort of importance given to the report that the breakdown of the stock market was the result of a conspiracy of two years' organization. There has been a great deal of concern expressed from time to time about the business of trust companies and their tendency to finance hazardous schemes, and a conviction among conservative men that an arrest of the speculative tendency would not be altogether unfortunate.

Some hastening of the troubles was foreseen when the British demand for gold began, and as it is known that Great Britain is bound to have all the gold it wants, and withdrawals are affecting a stringent market, the speculators who were most in need of money, were the first to feel this foreign demand. While the stock market has been paying all sorts of interest for money for speculative purposes, it is known that in ordinary business the usual rates have not been greatly advanced, but that money is still to be had at 5 and 6 per cent.

Secretary of the Treasury Gage will leave Washington to-morrow morning for East Orange, where he will be the guest of ex-Assistant Secretary Howell for a day or two.

To-morrow night he will be the guest of the New England Society of Orange at their annual dinner, and will speak to a toast assigned to him. He expects to visit New York on Saturday, and probably will call upon the Assistant Treasurer while in the city.

HANNA TALKS OF THE OUTLOOK.

Says the Stringency Is Not Serious and the Currency Bill Will Pass—He Is Not Naming Tickets.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 21.—Senator M. A. Hanna, arrived here this morning, leaving the city for Cleveland to-night. The Senator said:

"The country is in excellent shape and prosperity will continue. It is not possible to always arrange to meet a speculative scare, but there is money sufficient to accommodate the business world. The present trouble has nothing whatever to do with the actual conditions. It is simply a result of over speculation and will not be serious. It cannot be any way attributed to the Republican policy.

"The Senate will pass the Currency bill, and I do not think will require very much time. On our side there are not many speeches to be made, and I do not think the Democrats will undertake to delay action.

"I do not think the salient features of the financial bill as it left the House will be altered, but I regard the Senate bill as the better measure.

"The Philadelphia convention will be harmonious and the outlook for the next campaign is excellent. I will continue as National Chairman until the convention meets. Who will be selected I cannot say.

"I do not care to discuss the Quay case. There is no truth in the report that the Administration is anxious to intervene to end the fight. I do not believe the Administration is taking any interest in the matter. There is no truth that the delay in the action of the Senate Committee was secured by Quay's friends. The committee must have time to consider the case and the arguments made before it. Under no circumstances could it have reported until after the holiday recess."

When asked about the Vice Presidency, the Senator said.

"I see some of the newspapers say that I am making the whole ticket, and that the convention should just delegate that action to me and not meet. However, I guess the Republican Party can get along all right."

FORGED AN ORDER FOR PARDON.

Nephew of Stonewall Jackson Secured Release of a Texas Convict.

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Texas, Dec. 21.—W. J. Dent, the ex-convict who is under arrest at Tucson, Arizona, awaiting extradition to answer to the charge here of securing the release from the penitentiary of George Isaacs, is a nephew of United States District Judge John Jackson of West Virginia, and a cousin of the late Gen. Stonewall Jackson.

Dent came to Texas several years ago, and was engaged in business at Fort Worth, when he was committed for swindling, and was sentenced to a term in the penitentiary. During his imprisonment he met and became a close associate of Isaacs, who was a member of the Dalton gang, and was serving a life sentence for committing murder while attempting to rob the Wells-Fargo Express Company.

Through the influence of Judge Jackson, Dent secured a pardon last August. Before leaving prison he arranged with Isaacs to secure his release by means of a forged pardon. Wealthy relatives of Isaacs are alleged to have entered into the scheme, and it is known that Dent received $10,000 for the work.

Upon being released from prison, Dent came to Austin and called on Gov. Sayers. He introduced himself as John W. Murphy, and claimed to be representing the President of the Montana Cattle Company. On his visits to the Executive office he got possession of the necessary pardon number, stationery, &c. Before leaving here he cashed a forged draft for $200 on a local bank. Isaacs's whereabouts are unknown.

REMOVAL OF MAINE'S DEAD.

Placed in New Coffins, and Taken to Machina Wharf Through Unfrequented Streets of Havana.

HAVANA, Dec. 21.—The removal of the dead of the Maine was not accompanied by any ceremonies over the bodies. Newly coffined, they were placed in the mortuary chapel of the cemetery until all was completed. At 10 o'clock last night twenty wagons formed a mournful procession, carrying 151 coffins to the Machina Wharf, passing through unfrequented streets.

The bodies reached the wharf at 11:30 o'clock under a strong guard from the battleship Texas, were placed aboard two steam lighters before daylight, and were taken to the warship at 6 A. M. All the remains were thoroughly disinfected.

A difference of three was found between the number of coffins entered on Chaplain Chidwick's list, which was 154, and the actual number of coffins exhumed. Search was made through all the twenty-two graves in which the coffins were buried, but the missing three were not found. Father Chidwick said the difference could be explained by a clerical error at the time of burial, as he was very busy at the wharf, giving instructions and identifying the bodies, and could not superintend every detail. It was also quite possible, he said, that, after ordering portions of two different bodies to be placed in different coffins, they had carelessly been put into one coffin. It was also impossible for Father Chidwick to superintend the actual placing of all the coffins in the graves. He added that the list gives two bodies as unaccounted for.

The Superintendent of the cemetery, who buried the bodies, says that owing to all the remains not being buried the same day, it is quite possible that a mistake was made in the counting. He was certain no bodies were lost. Capt. Green also says he does not believe any bodies went astray.

Persons who were desirous of photographing the proceedings at the cemetery were not allowed to do so. The work was conducted quietly and decorously, under the direction of Father Chidwick. The old coffins were carried away and burned.

PRIEST CARRIED INJURED MAN.

Father Murphy Bore Negro on His Back Nine Blocks.

John Mayhood, colored, thirty-seven years old, a painter, fell from a scaffold yesterday while working on a building at 607 Elton Avenue and was seriously injured.

He lay unconscious upon the pavement for some time with a large crowd of persons gazing at him, and might have died without medical attention but for the Rev. Father W. Murphy of the Church of Sts. Peter and Paul, who carried him nine blocks on his back to a drug store on Third Avenue. Mayhood had several ribs and an arm broken. He was removed to the Fordham Hospital, where he is in a critical condition.

OYSTERMEN CHASE A PIRATE.

Long, Low, Rakish Craft Baffles Connecticut Fishermen.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Dec. 21.—Oystermen are watching with interest a mysterious sloop which has been hovering about the coast between Norwalk and Stamford in the lower harbor at Stamford. Efforts to communicate with the craft failed. It is supposed that the boat is an oyster pirate, and a strict watch is being kept for its return in these waters.

Several Greenwich oystermen noticed the craft on the grounds off the cove one night recently, and gave chase. They were unable to make up to her, and after going a considerable distance gave up the chase. It is not known how many oysters were taken, but it is said those on board were dredging when first seen.

STEAMER SARATOGA AGROUND.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Dec. 21.—The Ward Line steamer Saratoga, owing to the incompetency of her pilot, went aground this afternoon, near the wreck of the United States collier Merrimac, which was sunk by Lieut. Hobson just above Estrella Point.

She has suffered but little damage, although considerable difficulty is likely to be experienced in moving her. All the harbor tugs are employed, and it is believed that the liner will be hauled off to-morrow.

The Saratoga left New York Dec. 7 on her regular trip to Nassau, Havana, and South Cuban ports. She was last reported at Cienfuegos Dec. 17. The vessel is of iron, 298 feet long, 38 feet beam, and 23 feet depth, with a tonnage of 2,820. She was built in 1878 by John Roach & Son of Chester, Penn.

CONGRESSMAN BOUTELLE IS ILL.

Suddenly Stricken in Boston with Congestion of the Brain.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 21.—Congressman Charles A. Boutelle of Maine, Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who is stopping at Young's Hotel in this city, was taken ill there this afternoon and was carried to his room unconscious. Everything is being done for his comfort.

Mr. Boutelle was about the hotel yesterday, and appeared to be well, although he has not been in good health for some time.

Dr. Johnson, who was summoned, found his patient seriously but not critically ill, but declined to say definitely what the disease is until some member of the family should arrive.

The Congressman's brother, Mr. E. P. Boutelle of Bangor, reached the hotel to-night. He announced at a late hour that Mr. Boutelle was suffering from an acute attack of congestion of the brain caused by indigestion.

OPIUM VICTIM, DOCTORS SAY.

Plight of Lawrence and His Family—Claims Notable Ancestry.

Isaac A. Lawrence, sixty-seven years of age, living in a handsome flat on the first floor of a large apartment house, at 169 West Eighty-first Street, is in Bellevue Hospital suffering from a complication of diseases brought on by the use of opium, the physicians say, and it is alleged that his wife and three children are about to be ejected for non-payment of rent. Lawrence claims to be a descendant of the naval hero, Lawrence, and a relative of Supreme Court Justice Lawrence. The Justice denies any relationship with the man.

After Lawrence was removed to the hospital charity officers called at the flat and found Mrs. Lawrence, they say, in a stupor from taking opium. She told a story of wonderful adventure and wealth, and the officers left her. A friend of the family removed two of the children to the Home for the Friendless. William, a boy, eleven years of age, said to be an incessant smoker of cigarettes, was left with his mother.

"Osteopaths" Not Wanted in Georgia.

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 21.—Gov. Candler, after a conference with many physicians, to-day vetoed a bill passed recently by both houses of the General Assembly, providing for the practice in this State of osteopathy, treating of the structural development of the bone. The physicians contended that "osteopaths" knew nothing of materia medica, while they would be given the right to prescribe medicine the same as any regular licensed physician should the bill become operative.

DURYEA SUFFERS AFRESH.

Has Pneumonia, Undergoes Another Operation, and Astonishes the Doctors by Surviving the Shock.

The extraordinary vitality displayed by Walter Duryea, who has been for the last five months in Roosevelt Hospital, is causing renewed astonishment to the many physicians and surgeons who are watching his case. Mr. Duryea, who is a son of a well-known manufacturer, broke his neck last Summer at Glen Cove while diving into shallow water. On being taken to Roosevelt Hospital he underwent an operation which was widely discussed by medical men.

Some weeks ago Mr. Duryea developed symptoms of pneumonia. He passed through this crisis, and a fortnight ago the physicians determined that another operation was necessary. It was realized that there was only one chance in twenty that the operation would be successful and that it was more than probable that it would be fatal. Mr. Duryea and his father both, however, consented to it, and it was performed.

Whether the operation will prove to be successful, so far as bringing the young man back to health is concerned, cannot yet be told. But to the astonishment of the doctors, he has recovered from the shock and has been pronounced out of immediate danger. He is still completely paralyzed, and as helpless as an infant, but his brain has not been greatly affected. He is subject to occasional illusions, which are somewhat similar to those suffered by persons afflicted with delirium tremens.

The physicians at the hospital said yesterday that it was impossible to tell what the outcome of the treatment adopted in this case may be. There is a remote chance that Mr. Duryea may recover, but it is more likely that he will remain in his present condition until his death. That, it was said, may occur in thirty days or thirty years.

Inquiry late last night at the hospital elicited the information that the condition of Mr. Duryea was unchanged.

OCEANIC REACHES LIVERPOOL.

LIVERPOOL, Dec. 21.—The White Star liner Oceanic, from New York Dec. 13, arrived here at 2 o'clock this morning.

The Oceanic did not stop at Queenstown on account of a dense fog which prevailed when Daunt's Rock was reached.

KANSAS ZINC WORKS BURNED.

Two Men Killed by a Falling Smokestack—Loss About $50,000.

IOLA, Kan., Dec. 21.—At Lee Harpe, five miles east of Iola, to-day, fire destroyed two-thirds of the Lanyon Zinc Company's plant, causing a loss estimated at $50,000, fully insured.

Two workmen, Jesse Matthews and J. J. Schaub, both married, were crushed to death by a faling smokestack. The town is almost entirely without water supply.

The plant, which is one of the most extensive of its kind in the world, will be rebuilt at once.

BISHOP BARRED FROM SLEEPER.

Color Line Drawn in Case of the Rev. H. W. Turner of Georgia.

SAVANNAH, Dec. 21.—Bishop Henry W. Turner of Georgia was refused a berth on a sleeping car to-day by the officers of the Central Railroad in this city.

The Bishop, who is ill, having suffered a stroke of paralysis a few days ago, desired to return to Atlanta to-morrow. He tried to secure a berth in a sleeper, but was told that berths were not sold to colored persons.

The sleepers are owned by the Central Railroad, and the road has an arbitrary rule that no colored person shall ride in the sleeping cars between Atlanta and Savannah or on any branch lines of the company.

GRAIN CAR BLOCKADE ENDED.

Western Agents Can Now Contract for Shipments East of Chicago.

CHICAGO, Dec. 21.—Notices have been issued by a number of roads running west from Chicago to the effect that the grain blockade that has existed among the lines east-bound from this city during the past two or three months has been lifted, and that Western agents may make contracts for shipments east of here.

The dissipating of the jam in Chicago and at the Cook County belt line junctions will be agreeable news to thousands of shippers, particularly grain dealers, whose business has been embarrassed by the inability of the railroads to furnish cars or to haul them after they were loaded.

Old railroad men say that the blockade was the worst in local history. Though the blockade is lifted, business on all lines continue unusually heavy.

ROBERTS'S CASE NOT DECIDED.

Chairman Tayler Denies the Report of an Agreement.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—Chairman Tayler of the committee appointed to investigate the charges preferred against Representative-elect Brigham H. Roberts of Utah, said this morning that there was no truth in the story that the committee had reached a decision.

"The fact is," said Chairman Tayler, "the committee has not even informally discussed its report. I have reached no conclusion as to the facts in the case, and I have heard no member of the committee express an opinion. I cannot even say that a unanimous report will be made, but I hope for one."

While it is true that the committee has not discussed the merits of the case with any one, yet an impression prevails that a unanimous report against Roberts will be made to the House.

DAMAGES TO THE OLYMPIA.

Samples of Worm-Eaten Wood and Cellulose Sent to Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—Chief Naval Constructor Rear Admiral Hichborn has just received two large packages from the Boston Navy Yard. One is a section of a berth from an officer's stateroom on the Olympia. It is about a foot and a half long by about a foot wide. The front and varnished side is pierced with small holes, resembling shot holes. The back of this piece of wood has become almost white, and when pinched between the finger and thumb it is found to be as fragile as chalk, which it resembles.

The wood has been entirely changed in its character by the action of worms that penetrated it while the Olympia was in service in Asiatic waters, the worms having completely eaten up the fibres and left nothing but the digested rejecta in a solid mass. The wood so affected is what is called prima vera. The harwood molding at the edge was also attacked, but was not so much damaged.

The second package contained some of the cellulose packing taken from the ship. It is still wet, and is practically a mass of black mud, entirely useless for the purpose for which it was used, having lost its life and become offensive and a menace to the health of the ship's crew. This cellulose packing will have to be replaced in repairing the vessel.

THE GOULD HOUSE PARTY

New York and Philadelphia Guests Lavishly Entertained.

OPENING OF BACHELORS' HALL

New Amusement Casino at Georgian Court Dedicated—Dinner, Theatricals, and Ball.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., Dec. 21.—The house party given by Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould for the throwing open of the new casino, Bachelors' Hall, on their handsome country place here, which bears the name of Georgian Court, brought about a hundred fashionable people from New York and Philadelphia to this town to-day. It was one of the most elaborate and best arranged affairs of the kind which society people of those cities have ever enjoyed, and it will probably foreshadow many future social successes which will centre about the Goulds.

To-day's affair must certainly be classed as a success of no ordinary proportions. It had taken a great deal of planning, and the plans had been well laid. The host and hostess had the advantage of a magnificent estate to which to invite their friends, and the very magnitude of the place made a lavish style of entertainment appropriate. The arrangements were not only large enough in variety, but no detail had been left uncared for.

Most of Mr. Gould's guests reached here from New York on the first afternoon train, to which three special cars had been attached for their benefit. The train arrived about 3:45 o'clock. Others came from Philadelphia. All were met at the station by carriages and driven either to the Laurel in the Pines, the large hotel nearest the Gould place, where many of them will spend to-night, or to Georgian Court, where some will spend the night beneath the roof of the Gould residence, others being assigned to the sleeping rooms in "Bachelors' Hall," some 400 yards distant from the house, and within a short distance of the polo grounds on the estate.

The guests included Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney J. Smith, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Pendleton, Mr. and Mrs. William A. Duer, Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Dyer, Jr., Lispenard Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. J. Townsend Burden, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Snowden, Miss Greta Pomeroy, Evart J. Wendell, Miss Evelyn B. Burden, Mrs. Adolf Ladenberg, Mr. and Mrs. James Brown Lord, Senator Chauncey M. Depew, the Marquis de Tallyrand, Miss Mamie Field, Norman Whitehouse, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Post, Mrs. Duncan Elliott, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clews, Ralph N. Ellis, Peter Cooper Hewitt, Louis Fitzgerald, Jr., the Misses Cameron, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Sands, T. Sandford Beatty, Charles A. Munn, Major G. Creighton Webb, Miss Eleanor Hewitt, P. Deschamps, James D. W. Cutting, F. H. Allen, Benjamin F. Nicoll, Edward C. Porter, Miss Whelen of Philadelphia, W. A. Hazard, J. M. Waterbury, R. J. Collier, and R. E. F. Flinch.

MAGNIFICENT PRIVATE CASINO.

The day has been a perfect one, a balmy springlike morning hardening into a clear, cool, bracing afternoon, followed by a starlight evening. Not an obtrusive cloud or an uninvited blustering breeze has appeared to mar the festivities. "Bachelors' Hall" was seen at its best, and a magnificent private casino it is. It is built solidly of brick, stucco, and iron, with five entrances. The building is constructed around a tan-bark ring as large as that in Madison Square Garden. Three bowling alleys, a handsome, well-equipped gymnasium, an elaborate Turkish bath system, a billiard and lounging room, and one of the finest swimming pools in the country, holding 110,000 gallons, are combined in "Bachelors' Hall," which also contains twenty sleeping rooms and a small pony stable.

The afternoon was passed informally. The entertainments of the evening included dinner at the Laurel-in-the-Pines, private theatricals in the carriage house of the stable, where Mrs. Gould renewed the histrionic triumphs which she left when she deserted the stage to become the bride of the young millionaire, and a cotillion and supper in the house. The house interior had been elaborately decorated in red and green. Dancing took place in the large main hall, whose massive marble pillars were wreathed in green, as was the railing of the winding stairway, which led to the balcony above reserved for members of the Hungarian Band, led by Aladar Illes. Holly, mistletoe, and other evergreens were clustered behind pictures, and in the bosom of a knightly figure in full armor guarding the staircase, while a gilded cherub, suspended from the large chandelier, held one end of a wreath of mistletoe, the other end of which was attached to a wedding bell of red immortelles hung from the balcony.

DINNER AND THREE PLAYS.

At the hotel, where the guests were seated at dinner at two tables accommodating twelve each and at twenty tables accommodating four apiece, the decorations were fine clusters of American Beauty roses. Mr. Gould presided at one of the large tables. Mrs. Gould, who was to have presided at the other, was indisposed, and staid away from the dinner in order to save her strength for the theatricals. Rossini's overture to "The Barber of Seville" and Liszt's Rhapsodie No. 2 were played, among other pieces, by the Hungarian band while the dinner lasted. The guests arose about 8:30 and were driven to the theatre.

This theatre is only a temporary one in the carriage house, but is perfect in every detail of stage, electric appliances, scenery, and seating plan. Three plays were given, all the actors being amateurs except Boyd Putnam, who supported Mrs. Gould, and Miss Bijou Fernandez.

The entrance to the theatre was through a long, covered archway lit by electric bulbs and decorated on every hand by yacht flags, ensigns, and burgees, conspicuous among which was the host's private ensign. These showed brilliantly against a background of holly, mistletoe, and palms, in which red berries were interspersed, with bows of red ribbon.

The little theatre was a pretty sight when the scores of beautifully gowned women were seated. The guests were shown to their seats by some half-dozen ushers in scarlet satin-faced coats and black trousers, Mr. Gould himself being one of these.

The place was alive with chatter, humming through the music of the orchestra, for some minutes after the guests were seated, and then the velvet curtain parted and showed Sidney J. Smith as Capt. Fielding in "A Pair of Lunatics," entering a sequestered nook off a ball room which was supposed to be the scene of a festive occasion for the inmates of a lunatic asylum.

Mr. Smith, who was in evening dress and seemed very much at his ease, began to stroll up and down, while the chatter gave way to a hearty greeting of applause. He soliloquized aloud in regard to the various partners he had had that evening, three of whom had imagined themselves so many Empresses of China, and each invited him to share the imperial throne.

CLEVER BIT OF ACTING.

His soliloquy was interrupted by the entrance of Clara Monners, played by Miss Fernandez, who was, like Capt. Fielding, one of the few sane people at the ball. Each took the other for a lunatic and a remarkable scene followed. Mr. Smith, who had never appeared before the footlights till this evening, did a capital piece of acting. Capt. Fielding pretends to be crazy to humor his supposed insane vis-à-vis and she follows suit. The result was laughable, for the work was cleverly done.

Mr. Smith amused his hearers, especially when, speaking of a mysterious raffle which he was booming, he said: "And I know for a dead certainty that old Uncle Russell Sage has taken fifty chances." Miss Fernandez went through some wild dramatics in clever fashion, and the characters of course found out their mutual mistake at the proper time and went out to dinner together. Both actors had a hearty curtain call.

The next play, "The Marble Arch," introduces a lovesick bride, Marion Merewether, played by Miss Emily Key Hoffman, who is visited by her friend, Constance Cameron, a dashing widow, (Miss Greta Pomeroy's part,) and consents to let the widow write a note to her husband, Jack Merewether, played by Walter Hale, making an appointment at the Marble Arch with an unknown lady, as a test of his constancy. The note is left where the husband can find it, and he shows it to his friend, Capt. Trentham, an elderly British officer with an eyeglass, played in amusing style by Evert Jansen Wendell.

The Captain keeps the appointment at the arch himself and meets the widow, but the young wife becomes persuaded by an odd circumstance that her husband has gone to keep it, and in jealous rage decides to go back to her mother. The matter is finally straightened out, the husband and wife reconciled, and the Captain duly snared by the widow.

The complications bring on an amusing flirtation between the Captain and the widow, which was well presented, Miss Pomeroy captivating her audience by her coquettish airs. Miss Hoffman made a thoroughly devoted and properly tearful bride, and Mr. Hale creditably filled a comparatively minor part.

MRS. GOULD'S APPEARANCE.

The concluding play, "The Twilight of the God," which introduced Mrs. Gould, seems to have been written expressly for her. Her part, Isabel Warland, is really the entire play, and into Mrs. Warland's mouth the author has put a string of epigrams which gave Mrs. Gould an admirable opportunity.

She had lost none of the talent which won her an enviable name as Edith Kingdon in Daly's company. Her presence was characterized by grace, dignity, and perfect naturalness. She was enthusiastically encored, and received a splendid bouquet of American Beauty roses at the end.

The plot is that of a woman who meets a man she had loved ten years before, and has not seen since that time; and when he attempts to renew his suit, despite the fact that she has an attentive husband, finds him quite different from her idea of him. The "god" is plunged in the twilight and her former affection for him vanishes. She cleverly uses his devotion, however, to obtain from him—for the old lover is now a man of wealth and power—a political office for her husband.

Mr. Wendell played Lucius Warland, her husband, while Boyd Putnam appeared as John O'Berville, the rejected lover.

E. Emens had designed the scenery for all the plays for which Nanier Lothian, Jr., was stage manager. Lucius Hosmer had charge of the orchestra, which played the interludes stationed behind a nook of green in the corner.

THE SUPPER AND BALL.

The theatricals ended about 10:30 and the guests were driven to the house. Here Mrs. Gould's costume was changed for a handsome décolletée ball gown of white satin trimmed with old point lace. She wore a number of strings of magnificent pearls and a diamond spray head-dress. Elisha Dyer, Jr., led the cotillion with Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish. The favors included gold horseshoes, golf sticks, and pins for the men, bon-bon boxes for the women, and clever electrical devices of all sorts for both. The favors were brought into the room by Santa Claus in regulation furs. He pushed before him a huge snowball, and when he brought it to a stop a beautiful little fairy emerged, all tinsel and spangles, and began to distribute the gifts.

The music started with a Waldteufel waltz, followed by Sousa's two-step, "Hands Across the Sea," a lancier from Herbert's opera, "The Fortune Teller," and other selections. The dancing, which will last till 4 or 5 o'clock in the morning, was preceded by an elaborate supper which Delmonico served at sixteen round tables in the dining-room back of the hall. Each table was decorated with a wedding bell of red carnations, surmounted by a mistletoe spray. The menu was:

Tortue verte passée en tasses.
Consommé printanier.
Radis, celeri, pinlolas.
Grenouilles aux crabes d'huitres Newburg.
Ailes de volaille sauce Perigord.
Fonds d'artichauts florentine.
Bécasses, et canards canvas back.
Tomates farcies au celeri mayonnaise.
Petits aspics de foie gras.
Asperges nouvelles vinaigrette.
Glaces de fantaisies.
Bonbons devises, fleures, petits fours.
Café.

The guests will leave Lakewood to-morrow on special cars attached to various trains.

GAY CHRISTMAS RECEPTION.

Mrs. Howard Gould Entertains Young Folk at Her Home.

Mrs. Howard Gould gave a Christmas party at her residence, 824 Fifth Avenue, yesterday afternoon, in honor of her nieces, Dorothy and Marjorie Sells, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sells of 341 West Eighty-fourth Street. The reception and dining rooms were decorated with holly and evergreens. The table in the large dining room, at which the guests were entertained at luncheon, was covered with deep red roses and ferns.

The luncheon was just what young folks like—plenty of sweets and fruits, preceded by dainty dishes of a more substantial character. When the dessert had been served ornamented bonbon boxes were distributed, in which were hidden jeweled rings, tiny watches and long gold chains. When the children were tired of admiring each other's presents they were summoned into the reception room, where a magician entertained them. The afternoon wound up with a dance.

Among the guests were Noel Haskins, Dorothy Cooper, Marguerite and Alice Presbrey, Lila and Adelaide Fairchild, Ruth Thompson, Gertrude and Marie Murray, Francis and Isabel Randolph, Florence Van Cott, Abbie Bourne, Rose Scott, and Ruth Haskins.

"THE SUNKEN BELL" IN BOSTON.

Adaptation of Hauptmann's Play First Puzzles and Then Pleases.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 21.—E. H. Sothern and Virginia Harned presented at the Hollis Street Theatre to-night, for the first time on the English-speaking stage, a version of Hauptmann's play, "Der Versunkene Glocke." The adaptation of the drama was by Charles Henry Meltzer, and was called "The Sunken Bell."

When the curtain rose, and the audience found itself in the atmosphere of a Hans Andersen fairy tale, when it saw woodsprites, gnomes, fairies, and elfs, it appeared puzzled. For one act it did not know what to make of it all. But during the second a perception began to dawn that there was some meaning behind the fantasy. The third and fourth acts both made strong impressions, and the last act, too, would have been effective had the hour not been so late and had the ending of the play not been marred by an unfortunate blunder in lowering the final curtain too soon.

Special music, composed by Lauchaume, the Laureate of the Conservatoire of Paris, was played by an augmented orchestra. Large as the Hollis Street Theatre stage is, and although its electrical and other appointments

WAR AMONG REPUBLICANS

County Committee Adjourns Before the Time for Meeting.

GRUBER CHARGES COWARDICE

Says the Organization Ran Away from Discussion of His Plan to Curb Quigg.

There was a stormy ten minutes' session of the Republican County Committee at Murray Hill Lyceum last night, caused by the refusal of the Platt men to permit Abraham Gruber, the anti-Platt leader in the Twenty-first Assembly District, to introduce an amendment to the by-laws concerning the designation of Inspectors and Clerks of Election. At present the President of the County Committee has the power to make up the list of persons to be appointed by the Police Board. As Gruber and Lemuel E. Quigg, President of the Committee, are opposed to each other, Gruber wants to take this patronage away from Quigg and place it in the hands of the executive member, or the delegation to the committee from each assembly district.

Gruber's intention to present his resolution at last night's meeting was known to the leaders of the majority, and they prepared to shut him off. President Quigg had been expected to be present, but it was announced that he had been detained in Washington, and in his absence Secretary Manchester rapped for order a few minutes after 8 o'clock. The gavel had no sooner sounded than National Committeeman Fred S. Gibbs jumped to his feet with the remark: "There is no quorum; there can be no meeting."

Gruber walked down the aisle excitedly exclaiming: "I have a resolution to offer. Let us come to order, and we can soon find out if we have a quorum. I demand a roll call."

Secretary Manchester ruled that a quorum was present, and Gibbs immediately made a motion to adjourn. Before the motion could be put Gruber began talking again. "It is certainly against the interests of the Republican Party," said he, "to have the Republican County Committee adjourn at 8:15 o'clock, when it usually meets at 8:30 o'clock. Let us have a count. We will see whether or not a quorum is present. We are losing enough Assembly districts now to make dishonest performances like this bring the flush of shame to the face of every Republican."

"I renew my motion to adjourn," said Gibbs. "A motion to adjourn is not debatable. When I have to consult the gentleman from the Twenty-first Assembly District as to the best interests of the Republican Party, I will not come to this committee; I will quit political life."

During the excitement which attended the exchange of personalities Secretary Manchester declared the meeting adjourned. Gruber called to him as he was leaving the platform: "If you cannot be honest, why don't you say so? It seems to be the policy of the majority to prevent discussion of any subject by any member of the minority regarding the best interests of the Republican Party. My resolution is one drawn in the interests of the Republican Party and against the bosses. Before this committee was organized I said that this organization was an empty shell, and that it was servile and impudent under its present management. The incidents we have witnessed here to-night furnish proof of my charge."

Many members of the committee reached the hall after the adjournment, and expressed surprise that an adjournment had been taken at such an early hour. Gruber said to the reporters: "Political cowardice is always evidence of political wrongdoing. Running away from the discussion of a question pressed for the good of the party, is like making a Chairman from the top against the wishes of the committee. Gov. Roosevelt tells us all to be strenuous, and the Republican, County Committee is strenuous in doing wrong to the party."

Gibbs was much elated over his victory, and said: "Gruber cannot get five votes in this committee on any proposition."

MANIFESTO BY GOEBEL MEN.

Address Issued Giving the Grounds on Which Contests in Kentucky Are to be Made.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Dec. 21.—The address to the Democracy of the State, indorsing the contest instituted by Goebel and other candidates of the defeated Democratic ticket, and giving the reasons therefor, was issued to-night. It is signed by ex-Senator Blackburn, Chairman of the State Campaign Committee, Chairman Young of the State Central and Legislative Committees and all of the members of those committees. It says in part:

"The Democratic Party of Kentucky, through its several State committees, has unanimously declared that the best interests of the party, as well as of justice, demands that contests shall be made by all candidates on the Democratic ticket for the respective offices for which they were nominated.

"We feel that in the light of the action of the State Board of Election Commissioners, the Democratic Party cannot do less than to carry its contention to the tribunals created by law for its determination. The grounds upon which this contest is based consist of the protest against the use of tissue ballots in many of the overwhelmingly Republican counties of the State.

"Another ground of contest is because of the plain violation and defiance of law by the late Republican Governor of the State, who ordered out the military, and, in violation of both law and precedent, paraded the streets of Louisville on the day of the election with his soldiers and Gatling guns, invading the voting booths and forcing into them against the protest of the lawfully appointed election officials pretended Inspectors and challengers, who, the highest court of the State has decided, had no lawful right to be present.

"The issuance of the certificates of election to the Republican candidates is contested upon the ground that a Federal and also a State Judge interfered with the holding of the State election. Another ground is the use in the interest of the Republican Party of an immense corruption fund, contributed by the most powerful railroad corporation of the commonwealth, whereby many thousands of votes were bought against the Democratic Party and its candidates, because that party, in the platform adopted in its State convention, dared to advocate measures of relief demanded by the people of the commonwealth. Over 10,000 legally registered Democratic voters failed to vote in the City of Louisville alone.

REPUBLICANS FORCED TO PAY.

Deputy Sheriff Sent to Levy on the State Committee's Furniture.

Deputy Sheriff Rinn called at Republican State headquarters last night and informed Secretary Reuben L. Fox that he had received an order from the City Court to levy an execution on whatever property belonging to the committee he could find, in order to satisfy two judgments awarded to Edgar Franken, amounting to something over $800. Secretary Fox glanced longingly at the highly polished rolltop desks, comfortable leather upholstered chairs, and the many volumes of official papers, presented to the committee by State officials, and told the Deputy Sheriff that, while he did not concede that the claim was a just one, it would be paid, in view of the fact that the courts had passed on it, and that the committee would not appeal.

Franken claims that he was engaged by the Republican State Committee, through Lafayette B. Gleason, one of its clerks, to make speeches and organize clubs of German voters in the Roosevelt campaign of last year. He was to receive, he says, $25 a week for his speeches, $15 for each club he organized, and an allowance for personal expenses. He further claimed to have been ordered to write a pamphlet in German on the political questions then pending, for which he was to have been paid $50. This last work, he says, was ordered by William Barnes, Jr., Chairman of the Executive Committee. He performed his tasks, he says, and never received the compensation which had been promised to him. He then brought suit against Gen. Edwin A. McAlpin as Treasurer of the Republican State Committee, and has been successful, although Mr. Barnes, Mr. Gleason, and Luther B. Little, who were in charge of the speakers and the literary campaign last year, testified that Franken had been paid for all work which he had been authorized to do for the committee.

Secretary Fox was the only person connected with the committee who was at headquarters last night. He said that Franken had been engaged to make some speeches and had been paid for doing so. So far as the pamphlet was concerned, Mr. Fox said Franken had tried to sell it to the committee, and had been told that it could not be used. He had requested pay, according to Mr. Fox, for some of his friends whom he had engaged in various districts to work for the Republican candidates, but this had been refused because the work had never been authorized. Notwithstanding Mr. Fox's declaration that Franken does not deserve any more money, he will be paid without any further trouble.

TO PAY FOR CONDEMNED BEEF.

Decided that Fault Was Not That of the Contractors.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—Mr. Tracewell, the Controller of the Treasury, has passed upon the claim of Swift & Co. of Chicago for the price of 300,000 pounds of fresh beef, which, according to contract, was shipped from Newport News, Va., on Aug. 5, 1898, for use of the army in Puerto Rico, and was on Sept. 7 condemned at Montauk Point, N. Y., and thrown overboard.

The Board of Survey found that the loss by spoiling of the beef was not due to any negligence or fault on the part of the contractors. The Controller finds that at the time of its condemnation the beef was the property of the United States, and directs that the claim be settled accordingly.

GOVERNOR REVIEWS TROOPS.

He Gives High Praise to the Officers and Men of the Twenty-second Regiment.

Gov. Roosevelt reviewed the Twenty-second Regiment last night at its armory. The Governor was attended by his staff, as well as by Major Putnam Bradlee Strong, Brig. Gen. George Moore Smith, and Brig. Gen. McCoskry Butt. The regiment paraded in excellent form, and the drill was applauded.

A dance in the armory followed the drill, while Gov. Roosevelt, his staff, and the officers of the regiment were dining at the Colonial Club. The Governor, in a short speech at the dinner, complimented Col. Bartlett warmly on the fine appearance of his regiment.

"It is especially remarkable," said he, "in view of the fact that the National Guard was greatly depleted by the enlistment of a considerable number of its men in the volunteer regiments, that it is larger numerically than it was before the war."

Col. Bartlett then made a speech thanking the Governor for his compliments, and assuring him of the hearty appreciation of them by the officers and men of his regiment.

TO DISCUSS LEGISLATION.

Gov. Roosevelt to Meet Mr. Platt—The Adjutant Generalship.

Gov. Roosevelt came to this city last evening to hold a final conference with the Republican State leaders and other prominent politicians in regard to legislation which will be pushed during the coming session of the Legislature.

The Governor to-morrow morning at the residence of Douglas Robinson, his brother-in-law, will meet Senator Thomas C. Platt, B. B. Odell, Jr., Chairman of the Republican State Committee; Dr. Albert Shaw, Prof. Nicholas Murray Butler, Gen. Francis V. Greene, Chairman of the Canal Advisory Commission; Chairman Holls of the special Unification Commission; Charles Stewart Smith, and others. General legislation, including the educational unification plan as adopted by the commission, the report of the Canal Advisory Commission, and the question of a successor to Adjt. Gen. Andrews will be discussed.

Gov. Roosevelt saw Major Putnam Bradlee Strong, Brig. Gen. George Moore Smith, and Brig. Gen. McCoskry Butt last evening. Later in the evening he said:

"I have been talking with several members of the National Guard about the Adjutant-Generalship, but it is still an open matter. I have not yet decided on the man to succeed Gen. Andrews."

The Governor was asked if there was any truth in the report that President Seth Low of Columbia College was to be made Chancellor of the State Board of Regents. He said:

"You must kill your bear before you skin him. It is foolishness to talk about the appointment of a man to a place that has not yet been created. It will be time enough when the bill becomes a law."

The Governor will be the guest of President Low at dinner this evening. He expects to return to Albany to-morrow afternoon in order to spend Christmas with his family.

Senator Platt returned to the city last night from Washington, and Chairman Odell will come down from Newburg some time to-day.

SENATOR JONES IS HOPEFUL.

Says Bryan Will Be Nominated and that the Outlook Is Brighter than in 1896.

CHICAGO, Dec. 21.—Senator James K. Jones, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, looked into party affairs at headquarters in the Unity Building to-day. He assured everybody that the prospects for Democratic success next year are brighter than they were in 1896. He said only W. J. Bryan would be mentioned as candidate for President in the convention. The Senator would not say where or when he thought the convention should be held. He denied a story sent from Washington that he had repudiated the system of collecting money for a campaign fund, and had discharged Richard S. Slayter, one of the collectors.

"The system of collecting money," he continued, "was inaugurated by me. It has been a success, and is worthy the support of all Democrats. There are no differences between ex-Gov. Stone and myself, and never have been. I approve all he did while I was in Europe."

The Senator also said that the selection of Sam B. Cook for manager of the Ways and Means Bureau was made at his request. He approved J. G. Johnson's work as Chairman of the Executive Committee. With reference to next year's contest the Senator said:

"No doubt the convention will reaffirm the Chicago platform. It will declare against imperialism and in favor of regulating trusts. I think, too, that it will condemn the efforts, which have become too common, to control elections by the use of money. In my opinion, the passage of the bill establishing the gold standard will aid us greatly."

The Senator says he never saw such a diversity of opinion as to where the nominee for Vice President should come from.

Regarding the currency bill Senator Jones said:

"I think the adoption of a gold standard bill by the present Congress would have an enormous effect in shaping the money issue. It is a declaration on the part of the Republican Party for which it will have to answer. A gold bill, if adopted by the Senate—and there is no doubt in my mind that the present bill substantially will be accepted by the Senate—will force the Republicans to explain what is on its face a stroke of treason against the pronouncement of the St. Louis platform."

The Senator figures that the Currency bill could command 50, and possibly 52, votes in the Senate.

New Bishop Reaches San Juan.

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico, Dec. 21.—Archbishop Barnado of Santiago and the Very Rev. James H. Blenk, formerly of New Orleans, recently appointed Bishop of Puerto Rico, arrived here to-day on the steamer Maria Herrera. They were received by the Acting Bishop of the Puerto Rican Diocese. The streets were crowded with people, who accorded the prelates an enthusiastic reception. A procession, headed by the Bishop and Archbishop, under a canopy, proceeded to the Church of St. Anne, where the Archbishop was invested with the mitre and crozier. Thence they went to the cathedral, where high mass was celebrated.

Last Volunteers Start for Manila.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 21.—The United States transport Grant cleared last night for Manila with the last of the volunteer regiments, the Forty-eighth Regiment, colored, in command of Col. Duval.

Two Transports Reach Manila.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—Gen. Otis has notified the War Department that the transports Senator and Benmohr arrived at Manila to-day with the Forty-fifth Infantry and two batteries of the Sixth Artillery. No casualties were reported.

Movements of Naval Vessels.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—The Machias has arrived at San Juan, Puerto Rico.

The transport McClellan left San Juan, Puerto Rico, this morning for New York.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

This being Forefathers' Day, the exchange editor has noticed that many of the New England papers are republishing as a particularly appropriate bit of verse for the time the poem of Mrs. Hemans which begins:

The breaking waves dashed high
On a stern and rock-bound coast.

He had been to Plymouth, Mass., which that line about the stern and rock-bound coast is supposed to picture, and he has to chuckle a bit, every time he sees the poem, at the poetic license and imagery that was used to typify one of the troubles of the Pilgrim Fathers in their attempts to reach terra firma. "There didn't happen to be any stern and rock-bound coast when I was there," he remarked, as he glanced at one of the many reproductions of the stanzas so familiar to every school boy or girl of New England at least. "I suppose it is sort of vandal-like to attack that time-honored bit of verse, but as a matter of fact that 'stern and rock-bound coast' is a big salt marsh at low tide, with only the most commonplace sort of a stream leading up through it from Massachusetts Bay to the spot where Plymouth Rock is situated. That rock, which isn't very much of a rock after all, was the only one in sight. Unless all the rest of the rocks that were once there have been blasted away in the march of civilization and progress, that one boulder is a pretty poor sort of an apology for a 'stern and rock-bound coast.' But I suppose that line sounds better in her poetic description of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers than if she had stuck to the facts and written something like this:

The tide was rushing in
On that pebble on the beach, &c.

"By the way," said one of the sons of old New England while the story of the Plymouth Rock landing was the topic, "did you ever hear about Gen. Grant's visit to Plymouth Rock? It was made soon after his famous trip around the world and at the time when he was being entertained in Boston. One day the General remarked to one of the party that accompanied him that he would very much like to see Plymouth Rock, and so he was taken down and given a sight of the historic boulder. He took it as philosophically as he did everything else, and without any sign of emotion of any sort. No one knew his motive for making the trip for some time, and he did not talk about it much outside of the circle of his intimates. To one of these latter he did explain the reason for the visit, however. It appeared that during his trip in foreign lands he was repeatedly asked about Plymouth Rock and was as repeatedly and shamefacedly compelled to say that he had never seen it. So he took the first opportunity to visit it in order that he could be able to say he had stood on the rock in case any other inquisitive foreigner should happen to ask him if he had seen that boulder, of which so much has been said and about which so much has been written."

"Speaking of Gen. Grant," said the pilgrim from Philadelphia, "reminds me of the fact that a great admirer of his has been secured to talk to us on Washington's Birthday. It is Wu Ting Fang, the present Minister from China to this country, and the address is to be delivered on University Day, one of the big days at the University of Pennsylvania. Wu was educated in England and was the legal adviser to Li Hung Chang, another of Gen. Grant's great friends, when Li was Viceroy, and wore all sorts of peacock feathers and yellow jackets. We of Philadelphia are making a big push for trade in China, and we hope in some way to switch the Minister onto some tack so that his talk to us will be of a practical nature. He's too good a thing to get hold of at just this time to let him waste his time on an ordinary Washington's Birthday oration. But I'm afraid that this time we Philadelphians are no match for the shrewdness of the Oriental, who has the reputation of being one of the ablest men in the whole Chinese diplomatic coterie. He must be a good one to be able to win the friendship of both Grant and Li Hung Chang, and to hold his favor at Court, no matter what happens to Li. If he can 'do' New York all right, as your politicians found out at Washington, but Wu is a harder proposition."

"Were you ever attacked by the Patriotic Society microbe?" asked another of the party, a member of the Mayflower Society, made up of descendants of the original passenger list of the Mayflower. "If you haven't, dodge it if you see the microbe headed your way. I'm a Son of the Revolution, a New England Society man, a member of the Mayflower Society, of the Loyal Legion, of the Order of Foreign Wars, and of a few more that I don't happen to recall at the moment. As if that was not trouble enough, I have just received a circular letter from one of the genealogical cranks who now proposes to make another shuffle of the cards and sort out all the suits in the Mayflower Society into a number of hands, so to say, each of which shall bear the name of the particular Pilgrim from which each member of the Society of Mayflower Descendants was descended. My family is so Pilgrim inbred that I am at least collaterally descended from at least a half dozen of the Pilgrim Fathers and mothers, and they now propose that I shall be shunted into each one of these societies to perpetuate the memory of these very good but sometimes very tiresome men and women. That means several more annual meetings and banquets and several more annual dues and enrollments at $2 an enroll. When the original Mayflower Society has only 2,000 members scattered over a dozen different States it is getting the subdivisions down a little too fine, and I think that the Society microbe in me has been fatally attacked and will now die a natural death. The thing is getting to verge on the ridiculous. Of course Bostonians are back of this new scheme."

Merchants in the upper part of the city are complaining of the number of counterfeit half-dollars that are being offered them in the rush of the Christmas shopping. The pieces are remarkably good counterfeits in appearance, but they seem to have an unusual amount of aluminium in them, for they are of very light weight, though they have a ring that is very convincing to women who occasionally object to taking the coins because they appear too light. The bad coins are supposed to have come from "Little Italy"—on the upper east side—and the owners of small markets and stores where Christmas trinkets are sold to people of the tenement house class are the chief sufferers because of their getting into circulation. No one familiar with good coins could possibly be deceived by them.

Previous to leaving Germany for his trip to this country Herr Felix Schweighofer, the German comedian, made flying visits to a number of the principal German cities, and found everywhere the liveliest interest being taken in the war in the Transvaal. Naturally, the sympathies of the Germans were with the Boers, and there was no attempt to in any way hide these feelings. In the hotels and shops in all the cities that the actor visited he found little boxes had been placed about, very like those placed at the elevated stations here for hospital Sunday collections. Above them were posted cards containing appeals to the public to contribute of their substance to a fund to aid the Boers "in their battle for their rights." The appeal was a popular one, to all appearances, for the actor noticed that coin of all values were constantly being dropped into the boxes by people of all grades of life. The poor peasant put in his copper coin, while members of the nobility and even officers of the army added their quota of gold and silver.

"Twelve dollars is a good deal to pay for one night's lodging," said Col. M. J. Dady of Brooklyn, "but that's what they charged me at the Walton, in Philadelphia. I came over from Washington Tuesday, and when I went to the Walton the clerk told me the house was full. I started to leave, when another man behind the desk shouted, 'Hold on. Are you not Mr. Dady of Brooklyn?' 'That's my name,' I replied. 'I can fix you,' he rejoined, and he gave me Rooms 129 and 131. When I received my bill in the morning it called for $14, of which $2 was for carriage hire. In paying it I said to the clerk, 'I am Mr. Dady of Brooklyn, but please remember that I haven't got those Havana contracts yet.' When I told Secretary R. L. Fox of the Republican State Committee that I wanted him to fix me for rooms in Philadelphia during the National Convention I told him I wanted good rooms, but that I would bar Nos. 129 and 131 at the Walton, as they were too rich for my blood."

Crushed in an Elevator.

BOSTON, Dec. 21.—Albert Von Wagenen, manager of the Consolidated Goodyear Lasting Machine Company, was fatally crushed in an elevator in the Ludlow Building, on Essex Street, this afternoon. He died after removal to the hospital.

THE EXPERTS ON MOLINEUX

Both Kinsley and Tyrrell on the Stand Yesterday.

TWO JURORS ASK QUESTIONS

Mr. Martin Drops a Remark Which Is Construed as Giving His View of the Handwriting Evidence.

John F. Tyrrell, the expert in handwriting, gave testimony all day yesterday in the trial of Roland B. Molineux. He was under direct examination all the morning by Mr. Osborne, and in the afternoon Mr. Weeks tried to shake whatever impression the witness had made on the jury by a searching cross-examination. Mr. Tyrrell, whom Mr. Osborne has come to call the "Wizard of the Pen," stuck to his theories and went on illustrating them in his photographic style. It was another day of "pen habits," only where with Mr. Kinsley the questions related to slant, speed, and shape, in the case of Mr. Tyrrell they referred to wrist movement, spacing, swing, and other elements which he considers important in the identification of handwriting.

While Mr. Kinsley was on the stand last week Mr. Osborne, after a wrangle with Mr. Weeks, declared that it was impossible to find in Molineux's writing made by request the characteristic breaks noticed in his other writings, because, he said, Molineux knew better than to make them after he had consulted Mr. Weeks and Mr. Weeks had consulted Mr. Carvalho. Mr. Osborne was rebuked by the Court at the time he made this remark, but it remained for Mr. Tyrrell to get the same thing before the jury in the form of evidence.

Mr. Tyrrell had gone on to talk about these breaks between letters and words in Molineux's admitted writings, and had compared them with the disputed writings alleged by the prosecution to be in the defendant's hand. He drew sketches of his subjects, among them being the word "trial" in one of the Cornish letters, and the word "cordially" in one of the admitted letters. He pointed out how the breaks between the letters, notably the "i" and "a," agreed in each.

"I consider those breaks part of the individuality of the writer—marks of identification," said Mr. Tyrrell.

"Do you find such breaks often?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"Very often."

"In the writings of others?"

"Yes. They are not at all uncommon. The breaks are characteristic."

"Do you attach any importance to the fact that when the defendant wrote for the prosecution these breaks were not evident in his writings?"

"I do, indeed."

"What do you think of it?"

"That he was coached."

MOLINEUX SMILING, AS EVER.

Molineux smiled when the witness made this answer, and his senior counsel and Expert Carvalho followed suit. In fact, there was no time in the day when the defendant was not as smiling as ever.

There was a warm argument in the morning between counsel and the Court over the admissibility of evidence tending to establish a standard for Cornish's handwriting. Mr. Tyrrell was asked by Mr. Osborne if he had ever seen Cornish write. He said he had, several times. He was then asked to say if a paper handed to him was in Cornish's hand.

"What for?" asked the Recorder.

"To establish a standard of comparison," said Mr. Osborne.

"But Cornish is not on trial," said the Court, using the same phrase he used to Mr. Weeks when the latter tried to get Kinsley to identify the writing of Felix J. Gallagher.

Mr. Osborne insisted, and the Recorder finally allowed the question under vigorous objection from Mr. Weeks, who said he had been ruled against on exactly the same point. Mr. Tyrrell identified the writing, but it was not put in evidence.

Mr. Kinsley got back on the stand for a few minutes at the morning session. He had promised Foreman Martin to bring a list of cases in which he had testified. When he took the stand he said that he appeared before petit juries twenty-three times and before Grand Juries three times, not including the present case. Jurors Martin and Billings asked the witness who else had written for him besides Molineux.

"Adams and Cornish and Mrs. Rogers and Gallagher and Harpster and Hassett and Paul Glorr," was the reply. "They wrote enough to satisfy me that they did not write the poison address."

"Were you present when they wrote?" asked Mr. Martin.

"Not when all of them wrote."

"Did you furnish pens, ink, and paper, and what else was needed?"

"Only to some of them."

"Is is not a fact," asked Mr. Billings, "that when Molineux wrote for you on Feb. 17 you knew he was the man wanted by Mr. Osborne?"

"Quite the contrary," said Mr. Kinsley. "I understood that they did not suspect him."

JUROR FURNISHES A SENSATION.

Juror Martin has questioned the experts rather closely throughout the trial, and he did so again yesterday, furnishing, just at the close of the afternoon session, the one real sensation of the day. There is a space of six months between the dates of some of the Cornish and Barnet letters requesting various remedies which the prosecution has bound itself to prove were all written by Molineux. Mr. Martin has frequently asked questions about these letters, and yesterday, just before 5 o'clock, Mr. Martin suddenly asked Mr. Tyrrell if a man could, in his opinion, after an interval of six months, produce a set of letters written in a disguised hand exactly the same as the first set—whether he could revert to the disguise after six months.

"I should say not," was Mr. Tyrrell's reply, "unless he followed a set method or habit of disguising his handwriting."

"Then for me, as a layman, it is impossible to see where the disguise comes in," was the observation of the foreman of the jury, just as the Recorder announced the close of the session. Mr. Martin's remark caused a great deal of discussion after the adjournment, as by many it was construed as revealing his opinion of the expert evidence.

Among the spectators at the afternoon session were William Kendal, the actor, and Mr. and Mrs. Bronson Howard, who occupied seats with the lawyers. Mr. Weeks undertook the cross-examination of Mr. Tyrrell as soon as court convened.

"Did you consult with the other experts before testifying before the Grand Jury?" he asked.

"Not concerning the handwriting," was the reply.

Mr. Weeks put some questions about his testimony before the May Grand Jury, which failed to indict Molineux, but Mr. Osborne objected to that line of questioning, and the Recorder sustained the objection.

Mr. Tyrrell testified that he had already presented a bill for his services in the case at the rate of $50 a day, with his hotel and traveling expenses. He said he expected to charge for about twenty days' work. Asked if he had any rules that he applied to determine a disputed handwriting, the witness said that that depended altogether upon the nature of the case.

DISGUISED HANDWRITING.

"Disguised handwriting," he said, "in the first place, differs from simulated handwriting. I generally form my opinion at first, and apply rules to suit. When in any disguised handwriting we find certain peculiarities occurring at regular intervals, we conclude that these peculiarities would be found in the same person's regular handwriting, and in the regular handwriting we find these peculiarities recurring more regularly than in the disguised handwriting, because the writer notices them himself."

The question of "hand capacity," or the distance to which a line of writing would extend over paper before the writer would have to move or lift his wrist, was taken up, and much time was spent in discussing different styles of capital letters. A package wrapped after the manner of the poison package was handed to the witness, and he was asked to make a cross as close to the lower right-hand corner of it as possible with his wrist resting on the central part of the package.

"Is it your opinion that this wrapper was addressed after it had been wrapped about a package?" Mr. Weeks asked.

"Yes," he replied.

"Now, if it should appear, Mr. Tyrrell, that the lower portion of this piece of paper was substantially on the edge of the box, causing a crease, would you still be of the opinion that the characters of that address were written from a fixed wrist point?"

Mr. Tyrrell said he had not considered this question.

Taking up Exhibit C—one of the medicine letters signed "Barnet"—Mr. Tyrrell said that as there was a constant tendency to depart from the base line, giving the words what he described as a "saw-tooth" look, he assumed that the writing was disguised and the writer not accustomed to write vertically.

After a whispered consultation between Mr. Weeks and Mr. Carvalho, Mr. Tyrrell was asked to go to the board and write the word "oblige" in several ways, and in several of them to stop after he had written the "l" and dot it before proceeding. He did this and every time there was a break between the "l" and the "g" following, as it appears in some of the letters offered in evidence, indicating, as Mr. Weeks intimated, that this break, instead of being an individual characteristic, would be likely to occur with any writer. The witness a short time before had referred to his art as a science, saying "It has been proved to be scientifically correct so often that the cause of a failure to prove handwriting has been due to the person making the investigation."

Mr. Osborne, in a brief redirect examination, elicited from Mr. Tyrrell that a person disguising his handwriting always seeks to get away from the "pictorial effect" of his ordinary penmanship, and that the pictorial effect of Molineux's handwriting was not at all like that on the poison package.

Henry L. Tolman, handwriting and microscopical expert, will be the first witness when the court opens at 10:30 o'clock this morning.

WOMAN KILLS A BICYCLIST.

Lewis Perry Shot by Lizzie Morse at West Natick—She Says He Entered Her Home and Struck Her.

NATICK, Mass., Dec. 21.—Lewis Perry, a Spanish war veteran, was shot and killed this afternoon by Miss Lizzie Morse, at her home in West Natick. Four shots were fired, two of them taking effect, one in the heart. Miss Morse was shortly afterward placed under arrest. She claims that the circumstance justified her in shooting Perry.

Perry was thirty-three years of age, and married. He and Arnold Stappen, who is thirty-five years old, and also married, left their homes, on Speen Street, with their bicycles this afternoon. Miss Morse and the members of her family claim that Perry and Stappen arrived at their house at about 1:30 o'clock and demanded admittance, without stating their business. The inmates of the homestead include Mrs. Willard Morse, who is about eighty years of age, and her children, Electra, Lizzie, Willard W., and Rufus D. The family is one of the best known and wealthiest here.

The sons were at work in the barn when the two men arrived. The latter demanded admission to the house, and upon being refused smashed several windows. Lizzie Morse loaded a .22-calibre revolver. She claims that the men went around to the front of the house, where Perry finished smashing the glass in one of the windows, and climbed in in spite of her remonstrances.

After gaining an entrance he caught hold of Electra Morse and wrenched from her a croquet mallet with which she tried to protect herself. Lizzie rushed to her sister's assistance, and informed Perry that she would shoot him if he did not leave the house. He gave her a terrific blow with the mallet, and felled her to the floor. She managed to get up again and told Perry to get out of the house, when he dared her to shoot. She then fired four shots at Perry, who managed to climb through the window and then fell dead.

Steppen, in the meantime, had attempted to get into a window, but was prevented by Willard Morse, who had heard the noise. Stappen then threw several stones at the window, and as Perry fell, he said to the wounded man: "Let's get out of this." Perry replied: "You can go, but I can't," and then died. The members of the Morse family claim that Stappen then tried to get into the house, but upon being prevented he mounted his wheel and went to the West Natick Engine House and telephoned for the police.

Stappen was taken to the Natick lock-up. Chief Sweeney later placed Lizzie Morse under arrest. She will remain at her house in the custody of an officer until to-morrow morning, when the hearing will take place.

Friends of Perry are unable to account for his alleged actions. He came to this town from Roxbury, Mass., about two years ago and last Summer served in Puerto Rico, being a member of Company E, Sixth Regiment, Massachusetts Volunteer Militia. Of late he has been out of work. He was a member of the West Natick Hose Company.

RECEPTION FOR NEWSBOYS.

Mr. Morris Entertains Those Whose Occupation He Once Followed.

Frederick Morris, manager of the Long Island News Company, held a reception last night at his residence, 121 Jamaica Avenue, Flushing, and his guests were 300 newsboys employed by the company. Mr. Morris was once a newsboy in the company, and he prepared a supper and entertainment for them which will doubtless long be remembered by the boys.

The occasion was the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of Mr. Morris's connection with the company. Among the invited guests, aside from the boys, were Rear Admiral Philip, President H. H. Vreeland, W. H. Baldwin, and Col. John W. Vrooman.

SAMOAN REPORTS DISCREDITED.

German Officials Think Story of Annexation Proclamation Untrue.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—The following statement is made by the official German authorities here:

"A press telegram of the 13th inst., from Apia, via Auckland, reports that the German Consul in Apia has solemnly proclaimed the pending annexation of Upolu and Savaii by Germany to a number of Samoan chiefs, on board the German man-of-war, and that on the same day he hoisted the German flag on the Supreme Court.

"This report does not cover the reports received in Berlin from the German Consul in Apia, and, according to the instructions which he has received from Berlin, it seems to be absolutely untrue.

"The German Consul likewise wired on the 13th inst., but he simply states that certain Tanu chiefs have refused to pay the head tax imposed by the three Consuls, hence they had been ordered to leave the district by the thirteen chiefs. The three Consuls have instructed the thirteen chiefs to send the aggressors to Apia for trial. This has been agreed upon."

The State Department has had no message from the United States Consul at Apia to confirm the reports of fresh trouble in Samoa, and this fact is regarded as sufficient to show that any slight disturbance that may have occurred has been very much exaggerated. The officials are confident that whatever trouble may occur will not be chargeable to the German officials, as the German Government is quite as anxious as our own that the pending treaty providing for a permanent settlement of the whole Samoan question shall not be endangered at this critical stage.

ESCAPED ON WAY TO PRISON.

Detective's Shots Failed to Stop George Dailey.

Detective William Van Orden of Westchester took George Dailey to Brooklyn yesterday to serve six months imprisonment in the Kings County Penitentiary. He and his prisoner got off a trolley car at Fulton Street and Nostrand Avenue to transfer to a Norstrand Avenue car, which passes the penitentiary. Dailey got permission to go into a saloon on the corner to write a letter to his brother. Dailey sat down and pretended to write. Van Orden stood at the door on watch. Some one in the street, a confederate of Dailey's, it is believed, shouted to Van Orden, who turned his head a moment.

Dailey appeared. Van Orden ran out of the saloon and saw Dailey sprinting along Nostrand Avenue with Patrolman Canfield and a crowd of 100 men after him. Van Orden fired several shots at Dailey, but missed him. Dailey escaped.

British Warships Closely Guarded.

VICTORIA, B. C., Dec. 21.—Whether or not there was an attempt to blow up the cruiser Leander, as reported a few nights ago, the Esquimalt authorities have become more strict. Where there was one officer in charge of the dockyard at night there are now two, and twelve additional marine sentries patrol the naval yard. Visitors are refused admission and the big gun commanding the port is now manned by a crew of gunners night and day.

Ex-Senator J. W. Bradbury Very Ill.

AUGUSTA, Me, Dec. 21.—James W. Bradbury of this city, the oldest ex-United States Senator living, who has been indisposed for several weeks, is now dangerously ill, and the end is not far off. He is about ninety-eight years old. He was Senator from Maine from 1847 to 1853.

LAUDANUM AIDS A COURTSHIP.

Woman Compelled to Receive Addresses to Save Her Wooer's Life.

BALTIMORE, Md., Dec. 21.—John G. Gearhard of this city took a desperate chance to compel the love of the girl of his choice. His attentions were received coldly by Miss Nancy Pickett, of Poplar Springs, Howard County, Md., whom he visited at a mutual friend's house here last night. He went to a drug store for ten cents' worth of laudanum, returning with it to Miss Pickett's home, and swallowed it in her presence.

The woman's cries brought Patrolman Stalling, but Gearhard refused to be taken to a hospital until Miss Pickett's desire for his survival was made too plain to be doubted. Dr. Shook of the Maryland University Hospital operated on him with a stomach pump, and he recovered, returning to Miss Pickett's home to continue his visit.

HIS STEPS LED TO PROFIT.

Rings Found Under His Foot Yield Paterson Man $100.

A small package containing two diamond rings valued at $335 has been recovered in an unexpected manner by the wholesale jewelry house of S. F. Meyers Company of 50 Maiden Lane.

A boy employed by the firm had lost the rings while on his way to an express wagon with several other packages. The packages were held together by a piece of rope. When they were receipted for by the expressman it was found that one was missing, and the boy hurried to the store and reported the fact. A fruitless search followed.

A man who said he was Willis J. Thurber of Paterson, N. J., entered the store late in the afternoon, made some inquiries about the package, and asked how much it would be worth to the firm.

Regarding it as a business proposition, the firm decided to give him $100, whereupon he returned the box, explaining that he had stepped on it in Nassau Street.

FARMERS TO MAN WARSHIPS.

The converted cruiser Dixie arrived at the Brooklyn Navy Yard yesterday morning with a crew of 700 men, 400 of whom are farmers from the Mississippi Valley, taken on board at Philadelphia on Wednesday. Their employment is in the nature of an experiment.

Only a few of the men had ever seen anything larger than the river boats. This pressing of landsmen into service is said to be a pet scheme of Rear Admiral Crowinshield of the Bureau of Navigation.

The Hartford, which is at San Francisco, and which is expected to arrive here about April 15, 1900, will have several hundred recruits of the same kind. The Dixie and the Hartford will circumnavigate the globe, going by way of the Suez Canal. It is believed that by the time they return from their voyage the farmers will have developed into full-fledged American sailors.

If the plan succeeds the navy will probably have within a year all the men it needs to put into commission all the new warships as soon as completed. The Dixie will remain in dry dock until after Christmas, when she will go to Norfolk, and thence to the West Indies and Europe.

NO FEAR FOR GEN. WHITE

Asserted that He Is Well Supplied for a Long Siege.

TROOPS ARE IN GOOD SPIRITS

Response to Great Britain's Call for Volunteers Has a Strong Effect on European Critics.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—The Daily Mail says:

"We understand that news has arrived from Gen. White to the effect that Ladysmith is well supplied with food and ammunition and can hold out much longer than has been estimated. The troops are described as in good spirits and anxious to fight."

The splendid patriotism of the volunteers continues to be evidenced on all sides. The newspapers note with satisfaction the effect of this display of British spirit and evidence of the resources the empire is able to command is having on Continental critics. But The Westminster Gazette sounds a note of alarm. It thinks the moment is peculiarly unpropitious to send abroad the home defenders, since no one is quite easy as to the effect the British proceedings in South Africa will have upon Great Britain's European neighbors.

Queen Victoria and Princess Beatrice went by train from Windsor to Farnborough this morning and spent an hour with ex-Empress Eugénie.

The Queen has been greatly annoyed by the unfounded statements that she is in ill-health and perpetually weeping. A paragraph contradicting these stories appears in the papers, which add that it has never been her Majesty's habit to "display grief like a hysterical schoolgirl."

The morning papers give prominence to Lord Roberts's message, and most of them comment editorially upon it. The Times says:

"In an admirable message to America and Canada Lord Roberts has given an adequate and welcome expression to our national sentiments."

The Daily Telegraph says:

"We feel sure the message will be welcomed in both the United States and Canada. Lord Roberts describes in apt words what all Englishmen feel. There is nothing like adversity to test the value of our friends, and the sympathy of the United States and the magnificent devotion of our colonies stand out in strong contrast with the cold caping and envy of some Continental nations."

The Standard says:

"The British Empire is on its mettle and is giving the world a hint as to the extent of its latent resources in fighting material. Nowhere is the demonstration watched with more interest, and, we believe, with more satisfaction, than among our kinsmen in the United States, whose sympathy will be still further aroused by Lord Roberts's admirable message."

Belated stories from Chieveley Camp, Natal, all concur in saying the British did marvels in an impossible situation. The oldest war correspondents say they never saw anything comparable with the bravery of the men and officers. The naval contingent created an immense furore, engaging the Boers single handed and hailing shrapnel and lyddite shells on the fortifications north of the town, in a vain effort to silence the murderous fire of the Boers, while the British forced the passage of the river.

The advance of the Second Brigade along the road leading to the bridge, in the face of a deadly fusillade, is described as magnificent. The British forced their way across the fire zone under a perfect storm of bullets from the invisible Boers. The patter of the bullets on the dry plain, it is added, raised the dust like heavy raindrops on water.

The heat throughout was intense. There are many stories of special acts of bravery.

Gen. Buller's casualty list at Colenso, just published, shows that 146 were killed and 746 wounded. Two hundred and twenty-seven are described as missing, and of these about forty are known to be prisoners in the hands of the Boers. This makes a total larger than Gen. Buller's original estimate.

Royal letters, signed by the Queen, are being circulated by the Archbishop to the Bishops of the various dioceses authorizing a collection in the churches throughout England on Jan. 7 in aid of the fund for sick and wounded soldiers and their families.

Interest centres for the moment in the preparations to send out reinforcements. The various city guilds have given an additional £12,000 for the expenses of the Imperial Volunteers, beside gifts of horses, ambulances, and other paraphernalia.

The latest notable volunteers include two nephews of Lord Roberts, Major Charles Sherston and Major Maxwell Sherston. Their brother was killed at Glencoe.

The Admiralty have decided to dispatch another naval brigade of 700 men to South Africa.

It is believed that, in mobilizing the Eighth Division, the War Office will have recourse to some extent to the militia, it being deemed inadvisable to denude the home garrisons over much of regulars.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, has issued a formal denial that any differences exist in the Cabinet regarding war expenditure.

According to a dispatch from Cape Town, there is a good deal of distress in the Orange Free State owing to a scarcity of grain.

GEN. CRONJE BECOMES RUDE.

Refuses to Communicate Further with Lord Methuen.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—The War Office has received the following from Gen. Forestier-Walker, the British commander at Cape Town:

"Cape Town, Dec. 20.—Methuen wires that he has received a rude reply from Gen. Cronje respecting his representations as to Lieut. Chandos-Pole-Gell, saying that this officer is regarded as a spy. Gen. Cronje also states he will hold no further communication with Methuen."

As cabled Dec. 18, the British War Office received the following dispatch, dated Sunday, Dec. 17, from Gen. Forestier-Walker:

"Methuen reports that Lieut. Chandos-Pole-Gell was taken prisoner last Thursday when going to meet a flag of truce. He was waving his handkerchief in response, and was unarmed."

DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH'S OFFER.

Volunteers to Equip and Accompany 150 Men.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—The Duke of Marlborough, who is a Lieutenant in the Oxfordshire Yeomanry, and who has volunteered for service in South Africa, will take with him, if his offer is accepted, 150 men and horses. He will personally furnish the equipment for these men.

The Earl of Warwick, the Earl of Dudley, the Earl of Lonsdale, and Viscount Galway are among the other members of the aristocracy who have volunteered for service in the campaign against the Boers.

The Earl of Warwick, who is one of those who have volunteered, was better known as Lord Brooke. His wife is the celebrated beauty, who is famous as being the only woman who was ever known to make the Princess of Wales jealous. Lord Brooke succeeded his father as fifth Earl of Warwick in 1893. He owns over 10,000 acres of valuable property, and possesses two splendid seats besides Brook House in London. One of the former, Warwick Castle, is one of the most famous historic buildings in England.

The Earldom of Dudley is among the wealthiest in the United Kingdom. Lord Dudley owns about 30,000 acres, a large proportion of the property consisting of coal and iron mines in Staffordshire and Worcestershire. He is a Major of the Worcestershire Yeomanry, and is Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade. He recently, in speaking at a public dinner, made an attack on Gen. Gatacre, declaring that the latter should never have received an important command, as he was known to be in the habit of overworking his men.

The Earl of Lonsdale is even more wealthy than either of the two previously named noblemen, possessing nearly 70,000 acres. He is extremely prominent, both in social and political life, and is a great personal friend of the German Emperor. He is Honorary Colonel of the Third Battalion of the Border Regiment, Honorary Colonel of the First Cumberland Volunteer Artillery, and Vice Admiral of the coasts of Cumberland and Westmoreland.

The seventh Viscount Galway is an aide-de-camp to the Queen. He is Colonel of the Sherwood Rangers Yeomanry, and is well known in London society.

The Duke of Marlborough is so well known in this country that it is hardly necessary to speak of him. He is a Lieutenant in the Oxfordshire Yeomanry, of which Viscount Valentia, M. P., is Lieutenant Colonel.

LORD ROBERTS SAYS GOOD-BYE.

He Bids Farewell to the Prince of Wales.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—Gen. Roberts bid farewell to the Prince of Wales at Marlborough House. The staff of the new British Commander in Chief in South Africa includes Major Gen. Pretyman and Viscount Downe, besides his present staff.

The parting message which Gen. Lord Roberts sent yesterday to the American people is republished in London to-day and occupied the foremost place in the afternoon papers here, which characterize the straight simple words as eminently soldierly and as having the ring which, it is claimed, should mark the relations between the Anglo-Saxon peoples.

Although it arrived too late for the usual editorial comment on its contents, the display headlines show that his references to America's friendliness and Canada's patriotism and his repudiation of the charges of Irish disloyalty are widely approved.

STEAMERS TAKEN FOR TRANSPORTS.

A Cunarder and Three Allan Liners Are Chartered.

LIVERPOOL, Dec. 21.—The Cunard Line steamer Umbria, which arrived here Dec. 17 from New York, has been chartered by the British Government for use as a troopship.

The Allan Line steamers Laurentian, Parisian, and Pomeranian have also been chartered. They will carry the Canadian troops to South Africa.

KITCHENER HAS A BUSY DAY.

Escapes a Train Wreck, Has a Reception in Cairo, and Sails for South Africa.

CAIRO, Dec. 21.—The train conveying Gen. Lord Kitchener, now on his way from the Soudan to South Africa via this city, was derailed north of Luxor, slightly delaying the General's arrival here.

Gen. Kitchener subsequently arrived in this city, and was given a reception by Lord Cromer, the British Consul General in Egypt, and others. He immediately boarded a train bound for Alexandria.

ALEXANDRIA, Dec. 21.—Lord Kitchener arrived this evening from Cairo and went on board the British second-class Isis, which immediately sailed for Malta.

UNITED STATES MAY COMPLAIN.

Great Britain Violates Custom in Seizing Flour.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—In the absence of a formal complaint, the State Department officials do not care to express a specific opinion in the case of the reported seizures of American flour by British cruisers off the South African coast, under suspicion that it was intended for the Transvaal.

But under the general rule adopted by our Government and adhered to by most of the other civilized Governments, merchandise of this description sent by one neutral nation to another, as in the case of the United States and Portugal, is absolutely exempt from seizure.

Captain of the Ismore Suspended.

CAPE TOWN, Dec. 21.—As a result of the inquiry into the disaster to the British transport Ismore, which went ashore on the rocks in St. Helena Bay Dec. 3, the Captain has had his certificate suspended for six months.

Col. Plumer Enters the Transvaal.

TULI, Monday, Dec. 11, via Lorenzo Marques, Dec. 16.—Col. Plumer, with a strong reconnoitring party of horsemen, has returned here after a week's expedition into Transvaal territory. He reached a point fifty miles from Pietersburg, in the South African Republic, but found no Boers, the country being seemingly empty of men.

MAY BE BOER ARMY RECRUITS.

Group of Twenty-five, Reticent as to Plans, Sail for Havre.

The French Liner L'Aquitaine, which sailed for Havre yesterday morning, had among its steerage passengers twenty-five men, who, it is supposed, are going to enlist in the Boer army. The men came to the pier in a body, under the evident leadership of one man, and all were reticent concerning their plans. One young Irishman said that he was ready for anything that came along. Most of the men appeared to be Holland Dutch, and some wore campaign hats. It is rumored that they are a part of a regiment that is being formed by Gustave Thielkula of Washington.

Inquiries among several prominent Boer sympathizers failed to develop the existence of a recruiting agency in this city.

George W. Van Sicien, who is known to be an ardent champion of Oom Paul's cause, denied any connection with the supposed recruits who sailed yesterday. When asked if he was engaged in enlisting men to fight in the Transvaal, he replied:

"If I were, I wouldn't tell you. Of course I'm a Boer sympathizer; aren't you? All I know of these stalwart men is what you have just told me."

Men who wish to join the Boer army have been visiting the offices of the Orange Free State Consulate at 136 Liberty Street. The circumstances led to the report that something very like recruiting was being carried on there. It was said that Consul Charles D. Pierce directed them to Dr. Hendrik Muller, the Orange Free State Minister at The Hague, and that interested persons were providing transportation. When questioned concerning the matter, Mr. Pierce said:

"There is no recruiting being done in this city that I know of. Any one who wishes to is at liberty to go and fight in the Transvaal. He'll need about $200 to pay his way, however, and I should advise him to take along $200 more to use when he gets there. It is true that quite a number of American surgeons and military men and some German soldiers, have asked information of me about going."

"Have you directed any of them to Dr. Muller?"

"Yes, when they have asked for it, I have given them his address."

Mr. Pierce denied any knowledge of the reputed recruits who sailed on L'Aquitaine.

EMIL ZOLA TALKS OF THE WAR.

Tells Why Sympathy Is with the Boers and Regrets "Imperialism in the United States."

LONDON, Dec. 22.—The Paris correspondent of The Morning Post telegraphs the substance of an interview with M. Emile Zola, explaining why French opinion is on the side of the Boers. M. Zola, while expressing sentiments friendly to Great Britain, said:

"The great mass of the French people are unacquainted with the details of the more or less complicated dispute which culminated in war. In the eyes of the unreasoning mob a powerful Nation is assailing a small, weak people. The impulses of the mob, although unreasoning, are frequently generous. Herein is the explanation of public opinion in France, Germany, and Russia.

"I am sorry to say that imperialism exists even in the United States."

CANADIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Letters from Soldiers in the Field, Describing Brave Deeds, with Some Pathetic Incidents.

From The Toronto (Ont.) Mail and Empire.

The following extracts from letters sent by our soldiers in South Africa to friends at home afford vivid glimpses of the war. A letter from a wounded Lance Corporal of the King's Royal Rifles to his mother, just come to hand, gives a description of the storming of Glencoe:

"I have told you," says the writer, "how eager I was for a fight, but I never thought I should come so near to going under as I did in my first set-to. It was just daybreak when the Boers opened fire on us, and as men began to fall rather fast, Gen. Symons, who was in command, ordered our Colonel to have us in readiness to storm their hill. If you had only seen that hill, mother, you would have fainted at the look of it.

"When the order came to take it, up we went like rockets. I was with some more chaps right in front, and the way we got over huge boulders and took flying leaps across great ledges was a fair treat. I don't know how I did it now, but it didn't seem two minutes from the start when I was right up at the top of that hill, and stabbing at the 'Paulies' for all I was worth. I got so excited that I got right away from the main body, and among a crowd of them, and as my ankle got twisted over a big stone, down I came a cropper, just as I was going to lay out an old fellow with a beard a foot long.

"He had clubbed his gun and was going to bring it over my head as I lay on the ground, when all of a sudden up springs in front of him a young fellow, and says something to him in their lingo, and the old fellow only scowls at me and then turns round and goes off somewhere else to fight. Then the young chap helps me up, and as the fall and a bullet in my foot had taken it all out of me, he props me up against a rock and gives me some water. Then he says to me, in very bad English: 'I save your life. Do you know?' I nodded. Then he says: 'You know why I save your life?' I shook my head. Then he says: 'Because you are like my brother!'

"Then he gives me a cigar and carries me on his back down the hill to where our camp lay, and when we got to the bottom he puts me down and says: 'They will find you here all right!' Then he gives me another cigar, shakes my hand, and bolts. I was picked up by a patrol an hour or so afterward, and have been in hospital ever since."

A MUSIC HALL ARTIST'S TURN.

A resident of Wellingborough has received a letter from a relative who was wounded in one of the earlier engagements and is now in the hospital. "Some of the incidents in hospital make us all laugh," says the writer. "You know Tom H., who used to do a turn at ——— Music Hall. He is in my ward, and keeps our spirits up. He did a funny thing the other day when tobacco was given out. You remember his hand elocution at the hall? Well, one of the Boers has lost both his arms, and when the tobacco was given out he shook his head, and a tear fell down his cheek. Tom saw it, and was by his side in a moment. He placed his arms each side of the Boer, and performed the office of the missing ones, giving the Boer a good smoke. He brought down the house with cheers.

"Another little incident showed how we leave our hatred in the field. One of our men had lost a left arm, and a Boer his right. They received their tobacco in despair, until a bright thought struck Tommy A—. 'Mate, shift up closer,' he said. 'I've cigarette papers in my pouch.' They rolled the cigarettes, one man using his right hand and the other his left, and this was how they always made their cigarettes until the men left hospital."

FOUGHT BEHIND ANT-HILLS.

The following extracts are from a letter sent by Private J. Locke of the First Battalion Devon Regiment, to his mother:

"I was in both the battles of Elandslaagte and Rietfontein, and had the luck to come out of both without being hit. I shall never forget the battle of Elandslaagte. The bullets were simply raining. Our casualties were thirty-eight, and would have been a great deal more if it hadn't been for a lot of ant-heaps that afforded us splendid cover as we advanced to take the Boer position, keeping well apart from one another and not crowding as we advanced. When we charged their position we fixed our bayonets, and, with a cheer, charged up the slope. Before we got to the top the enemy hoisted the white flag. Our officers stopped us, and would not allow us to use our bayonets. The Boers had run away and left everything they possessed—rifles, horses, tinned provisions of all kinds, and a lot of clothes. The Boer killed and wounded were lying all over the place. It was very miserable, as it rained all night, and we could hear the cries and groans all round. The next morning we returned to Ladysmith by train.

FIFTY-SEVEN HOURS' MARCH ON TWO BISCUITS.

"Last Tuesday's fight was not so bad," this letetr proceeds, "as we fought on the defensive. We only had one killed and five wounded. The artillery did all the fighting, shelling them for six hours. We must have killed hundreds of them. To give you some idea of what splendid artillery we have: The Boers had a gun mounted on a high hill, about 4,000 yards away, dropping shells on the road we were marching along, and our artillery got into action like lightning, and by the third shot blew the gun to pieces and killed all the gunners. The Devons at Elandslaagte led the bayonet charge. We are known in Ladysmith as 'The Gallant Devons.' The Glencoe column arrived today from Dundee. They had been marching for fifty-seven hours on two biscuits per man, and on seven hours' rest. Our regiments, out of our pockets, gave the Dublin Fusiliers a good feed, which they devoured like wolves. They were simply starving.

"There is no discipline among the Boers," Private Locke's letter concludes, "nor any formation. They come along anyhow, and like savages; in fact they are savages, according to how they treated their killed and wounded, which they threw down an old mine, because they were too much trouble to them. A British officer gave one of the wounded Boers a drink of water. The officer turned around to get on his horse, when the wounded Boer blew the officer's brains out with his revolver."

THE CIGARETTE CASE.

In an interesting and graphic letter from Ladysmith, one of two brothers, both privates in the Royal Army Medical Corps, says:

"I have just returned from Nicholson's Nek, which is several miles away from the town. Herbert and I with the rest of the corps have been collecting the wounded who fell in the big fight there. I found one man propped up against a rock. When he saw me, he called out in a weak voice, and I went up to him at once. I saw that both his arms were broken, and that he could not raise either of them. About two yards away there was a cigarette case which some one had dropped in the battle.

"'I'm all right, old boy,' said the wounded man; 'there's lots worse than me all round. Get them on the stretchers first. I can last out a bit. I'll tell you what you can do. See that case of 'fags'? Well, just take one out and stick it in my mouth. I've been watching it for ever so long, but I couldn't pick it up. I'd give anything for a smoke.'

"I gave him a cigarette. It would have done your heart good to see how he puffed away at it. The poor fellow seemed quite contented and happy when he had got it. I saw this inscription inside the cigarette case: 'From Alice to Fred, in memory of happier days.'"

An Appeal for Funds.

During the past year the expenses of the American Female Guardian Society and Home for the Friendless have exceeded the income, and the President yesterday issued an appeal for support. Contributions may be sent to the President of the society, 29 East Twenty-ninth Street. There are now over 7,000 children registered in the schools of the society, and a noble work is being accomplished daily. The society has seldom been in greater need of funds to carry on the immediate work, and an earnest appeal has been made to the general public.

GRIM REALITIES OF WAR

DISASTER AT NICHOLSON'S NEK

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Letters from British officers and soldiers fighting in the Transvaal, and lengthy descriptions from war correspondents that filter into print through the mails, teem with thrilling and pathetic incidents. Writing to his mother, a young officer of the Manchesters, wounded in one of the first engagements, relates that while he lay on the hillside, expecting to die through the night, which had already fallen, bleeding from a bad wound in his thigh and shivering with cold, there stumbled over him a "Tommy of my company named Rogers."

This "Tommy" quickly whipped off his own overcoat, placed it around the boy officer, and, lying down, put his arms around him, and for the rest of that long, cold night kept him "beautifully warm." And there are now being told many such incidents of tenderness and bravery that wipe away differences in rank.

The Times correspondent gives a graphic account and explanation of the British disaster at Nicholson's Nek, where Carleton's column, consisting of six companies of the Royal Irish Fusiliers, four and a half companies of the Gloucestershire Regiment, and No. 10 Mountain Battery surrendered.

"Two hours before daybreak," says this correspondent, "while the column was in inclosed country, either a shot was fired or a boulder rolled into the battery in column of route. The mules stampeded and easily broke away from their half-asleep drivers. They came back upon the Gloucestershire Regiment, the advance party of whom fired into the mass, believing in the darkness that it was an attack. This added to the chaos; the ranks were broken by the frenzied animals, and they dashed through the ranks of the rear-guard, carrying the first and second reserve ammunition animals with them. It became a hopeless panic, the animals, wild with the shouting and the turmoil, tore down the nullah into the darkness, and the last that was heard of them was the sound of ammunition boxes and panlers as they were splintered against the boulders. The hubbub of those few minutes was sufficient to have alarmed the enemy.

SURROUNDED BY THE BOERS.

"By a strenuous effort the officers succeeded in getting the men again under control, and when daylight came they seized the first position which presented itself, and which was about two miles short of the original goal. They were forced to take advantage of the first kopje, as Boer scouts were all around them, and the day was ushered in with desultory firing. It was a sorry position which they had chosen, and the men were in a sorrier plight. All their reserve ammunition was gone, and, though they had saved pieces of the screw-guns, they were not able with these pieces to patch up a single mounting.

"From earliest daybreak Boer scouts were reconnoitring, and about 8 o'clock mounted Boers could be seen galloping in small groups to the cover at the reverse of the hill on the west. Later, two strong parties of mounted men took position on the far side of the two hills commanding the kopje from the west. About 9 o'clock these two parties had crowned the hills and opened a heavy fire at short ranges down upon the plateau. Our men made a plucky attempt to return this fire, but it was impossible; they were under a cross fire from two directions, flank and rear.

"The two companies of Gloucesters holding the self-contained ridge were driven from their shelter, and as they crossed the open on the low plateau were terribly mauled, the men falling in groups. The Boers on the west had not yet declared themselves, but about 200 marksmen climbed to the position which the two companies of the Gloucesters had just vacated. These men absolutely raked the plateau, and it was then that the men were ordered to take cover on the steep reverse of the kopje. As soon as the enemy realized this move, the men on the western hill teemed on to the summit and opened upon our men as they lay on the slope. They were absolutely hemmed in, and what had commenced as a skirmish seemed about to become a butchery. The grim order was passed around, 'Faugh-a-ballaghs—fix your bayonets, and die like men.' There was the clatter of steel, the moment of suspense, and then the 'Cease fire' sounded. Again and again it sounded, but the Irish Fusiliers were loath to accept the call, and continued firing for many minutes. Then it was unconditional surrender, and the men laid down their arms."

THE HORRORS OF WAR.

The correspondent at Ladysmith of the same paper, describing the battlefield of Elandslaagte, realistically details the horrors of war. He writes:

"The battlefield, as it stood on the Sunday, conveyed sufficient proof of the severity of the fire. The wounded had been removed by daylight, but the burial parties had not arrived to perform the last duties to the dead. The men lay there as they had fallen, a sad, pathetic tribute to the courage of the British soldier. We followed this tragic trail—Highlanders, Manchesters, and mounted volunteers lay indiscriminately grouped. Then solitary figures under the stone showed how little the cover had availed them. There were places where wire fences had impeded the advance; here the carnage had been great, and one brave fellow stooped in death, cut off as he strove to wrench a post from its foundations.

"On the skyline of the tableland the dead lay thickest, this being the main spot where the attack had been checked, but the white flag was already there, and strings of coolies were digging the trench which too often is the soldier's resting place.

"We rode back to the Boer position—the little kopje upon which Schiel and his twenty-three men had made their last stand. The bodies of the fifteen that had fallen of this little band were grouped as death had taken them. Some lay with heads sunken upon their riflestocks, fighting to the end; another had placed his hat upon a prominent stone five yards away, and had died with his fingers pressing a charge into his magazine. What remained of the laager was the litter of shell fire. Tents were torn and burned, wagons splintered and overturned, foodstuffs, dead horses, and explosives lay in wrecked profusion. There remained no doubt that the shell-fire had played upon the position with full effect, and one could only marvel that the Boers had stood to their guns so long. But, as one of the wounded prisoners told me later in the day, there was no room to retreat, the extended files of the Manchester Regiment overlapping the reverse of the kopje, sweeping the northern footpath, while the rain of shrapnel destroyed every living thing on the western slope. And the scene at the farmhouse nestling at the foot of the ridge, on the far side, bore out this statement. It was here that the Boers had brought their led horses for cover, and carcasses lay piled on every side. The slaughter among the horses must almost have been as heavy as that of the men."

WRECK OF AN ARMORED TRAIN.

Bennett Burleigh, The Daily Telegraph's war correspondent, supplies a full account of the annihilation of the armored train contingent at Chieveley, when Winston Churchill was captured. The train, it appears, with the exception of the engine, tender, and two trucks, was badly wrecked by the removal of fishplates, and the seventy-two men of the Dublin Fusiliers and forty-five men of the Durban Light Infantry, to say nothing of five bluejackets from the Tartar, were thrown out. Capt. Haldane of the Gordon Highlanders, who commanded the party, rallied his bruised and shaken men, and, amid a hail of bullets from the Boers, began to clear the line, while others were pouring deadly volleys into the almost unseen Boers hidden behind the rocks about 1,000 yards off. The bluejackets, bravely commanded by their petty officer—who was the incarnation of coolness—got their seven-pounder into action. They sent in two, if not three, well-aimed shells at the Boers, several hundred of whom lined the hills. But, just then, a shot from the enemy's three-pounder or field gun, hit the small naval seven-pounder, knocked the gun and carriage on to the veldt, and wounded several of the seamen. But, the men were not a whit beaten.

"The character of the Dublins, Private Kavanagh—that day one of the stretcher bearers—chaffed and encouraged his comrades, telling them the Boer shells could hit nothing. He it was who, at Dundee, after the long day's battle, being asked if he was hungry and did not wish for something to eat, said: 'No. How can I with my mouth full?'

"'Full!' said his officer, "what do you mean?'

"'Why, my heart's been in it all day, Sir,' replied Kavanagh, with a grin. And so the 'hard case' of his battalion shouted and joked, walked about amid a tempest of bullets, and stirred the gallant, glorious Dublins to shoot well and true."

WINSTON CHURCHILL'S BRAVERY.

"A party of volunteers, consisting entirely of platelayers, &c., led by Winston Churchill, who behaved throughout with most heroic courage, succeeded in replacing the rails. Mr. Churchill had previously assisted in carrying in no less than twenty men under a terrific fire. Some idea of the accuracy of the enemy's fire and of Mr. Churchill's courage may be obtained by narrating the fact that a Boer shell burst in front of Mr. Churchill's face, killing two men on each side of him. Our wounded were now dotting the veldt on each side, the continued rifle fire, and the weird sound of the quick firers adding to the horrors of the situation. At last the line was clear, and the engine, with one carriage of the armored train, was enabled to return to Frere, leaving Capt. Haldane's party fiercely engaged. The Boers gave it a passing salvo of shells, hitting the tender and nearly derailing the train a second time. At Frere, Mr. Churchill, despite the entreaties of the people with him, insisted on returning to Capt. Haldane, who was an old comrade of his in the Tirah expedition, and, seizing a rifle from one of the wounded men, was last seen making his way across the veldt. The officer in command of the rear truck reports that Winston Churchill was hit twice, in the hand and in the shoulder.

"All of the wounded who were fit to give any account of the engagement describe Churchill's conduct in the most glowing terms. It must nave been heroic beyond all ordinary heroism. He is described as walking up and down under the terrible fire, giving confidence to the wavering volunteers, carrying the wounded, and, at another moment, collecting a party of good shots to assist Capt. Haldane. True to his character, he insisted on wearing the medals he had earned as a soldier. I begged him not to wear them, and pointed out that if he were taken there would be but little chance for him. The one hope—and it is a view that several of us who know him well hold—is that he is such an extraordinary man that he is quite capable of convincing the Boer leaders that it would be the best thing for them to release him."

WITH THE BOER PRISONERS.

The Daily Graphic's correspondent, describing a visit to the hulk Penelope, at Simon's Bay, where the Boer prisoners are confined, undertaken in the company of Col. Stowe, the United States Consul General, writes:

"The majority of the prisoners are sleek, contented, and indifferent. They told me that they thought the war would be a picnic, and they would rush Natal before the imperial troops arrived, that Great Britain would be involved in foreign complications, and that they would be able to dictate terms from Pietermaritzburg and Durban. They thought to view the Cape peninsula as conquerors, not from a prison-ship.

"'Hullo, there!' shouts Consul General Stowe, whose geniality is quite irresistible. 'Good day to you, Col. Schiel. Come down out of that and tell me how are things.'

"The notorious Schiel—the man who was Governor of Prisons when the Reformers were in jail, and who created the Transvaal Staats Artillery—steps down with some difficulty. His wound in the thigh is nearly healed, but he still requires to use a stick—an ebony, carved staff, which looks as though it might have a history attached to it. But the man interests one more than the stick. He looks as though he had a history, and he has. Schiel is a typical soldier of fortune. Grizzly gray hair, cropped close, aggressive military moustachios, shrewd gray-blue eyes, a thick neck, a figure still unmistakably active, but tending to stoutness—such is Col. Schiel in the flesh. As to bearing, he is a genial man of the world. He introduced us to some of his brother officers, including Capt. van Leggelo, a benevolent, good-looking cosmopolitan, of kindly expression and modest mien, who told us he was born in Holland, educated in Germany, and had a sister in St. Louis.

"The Consul General speaks as one having authority, seeing that he was in the American civil war, and to this day bears the mark of a bullet wound. The discussion is interrupted by Capt. Bruce.

"'Sorry to intrude,' says the Captain, 'but the launch is waiting.'

"We stroll down the deck, accompanied by a little group of Boer officers, who warmly thanked the Consul General for his kindness in forwarding their letters to the Transvaal.

"Good-byes are said, while the surrounding Boer prisoners glance up with lazy, curious eyes, and a minute later we are skimming across the bay to H. M. S. Doris, the flagship, which lies white and beautiful, contrasting with the long, black hull of the Powerful—coaling near by. Ten minutes on the breezy deck with Commander Grant, and we are again under way, while the Doris's guns boom out a salute in honor of the visit of the representative of the United States."

Refuses Still to Discuss Fifth Avenue Church's Formal Call.

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 21.—The Rev. Dr. George T. Purves, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, has the formal call from the members of the Fifth Avenue Church, New York, to become their pastor.

Dr. Purves, when seen to-night, refused to discuss the matter. He said he had received the call, but could say nothing further at present. He will go to New York to-morrow, and it is probable he will meet the Pulpit Committee of the Fifth Avenue Church. It is believed here that Dr. Purves will accept the call.

COALING WARSHIPS AT SEA.

Successful First Trial of the Miller Conveyor—An Accident.

After a continuous trial yesterday of four hours of the Miller conveyor for coaling ships at sea, the battleship Massachusetts and the collier Marcellus, which left the navy yard on Wednesday morning, anchored at 5 o'clock last night in Sandy Hook Bay.

The trial was very successful, 400 bags, about 80 tons, of coal being transferred in four hours without and accident to the apparatus. There was a light ground swell during the forenoon, making the ships pitch slightly, but there was hardly any wind during the day. J. J. O'Brien, an apprentice, second class, while attending the hoisting winch on the Massachusetts, was caught by the rope and had his arm broken on the winch barrel. He was attended by Surgeon J. C. Byrnes.

The trials will go on to-day, the Navy Department requiring that there shall be two trials of four hours each, one to be in a fairly heavy sea.

New South Carolina Industries.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Dec. 21.—Official figures in the annual report of the Secretary of State show that during the present year twenty-six cotton mills were chartered and commissioned in this State, with a capital stock of $5,650,000. This total is further increased to $9,079,000 by the aggregate capital stock of sixteen mills which have increased their capital. In addition there are cottonseed oil mills, flour mills, &c., put into operation, of which statistics have not yet been compiled.

WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S

To-morrow—Then Christmas

STORE open to-night till ten. But to-morrow night it will be closed at 7.

Ten thousand people have been on the Wanamaker pay-rolls this month (here and in Philadelphia). This business has not only won a place in the economic life of two cities, but it is a factor in the social and moral life, bringing responsibilities that we try to meet by working for an improved personnel, and by supplying facilities for the comfort and broadening of those in our employ. This secular Christmas Eve (to-morrow) is their and ours.

It is noticeable that the store service here is pleasant—it is growing still better. Wanamaker's shall not only be the best Christmas Store but the best every-day store in New York.

It is an economical store, where fair prices rule even in holiday times.

Very busy, but very careful, and the last Christmas gift we undertake to send home shall be in the stocking safe and sound, so far as our service can help.

To-morrow is last day for the Halsey-Stirling exhibitions of Paintings.

Very Elegant Lamps---Half Price

Monday we told of some very beautiful lamps—French china with decorations of artistic value, and mountings of brass, finished to look like Etruscan gold (and gold-plated, to retain their good looks). The maker had some four thousand ($4,000) dollars' worth. We took half and an option on the rest. Half price, which is a pretty big loss, but fortunately this lamp deal is only a fraction of his business. The buying was so spirited that we've taken the rest of the lot—a mere handful, as to number of lamps, for high-priced goods count up rapidly.

Ready to-day—

$50 lamps at $25
$75 lamps at $37.50
$125 lamps at $62.50

We sold the former lot of $100 lamps, excepting two, the first day they were on sale.

Interested? Please give us all the chance you can on their Christmas delivery by coming early, Basement, Broadway.

A Dainty Gift from France China, decorated with holly wreath and an odd leaf here and there, as though the decorator had such a wealth of beauty that he dropped some. We ordered this to reach us a month ago. We got it yesterday, so to make it worth your while to come quickly for it we lose a third of the price we should fairly get.

Breakfast Plates, $8 a doz.
Tea Plates, $6 a doz.
Bread and Butter Plates, $5 a doz.
Coffee Cup with saucer, $1.25.
Tea Cup with saucer, $1.
After-dinner Coffee Cup with saucer, 75c.
Ice Cream Sets—dozen saucers and a dish—$12. Basement, Broadway.

Swiss Music Boxes Just eleven of them—very elegant ones—each with a table in cabinet work matching the box, and with drawer to hold extra cylinders which most of the boxes have.

Here is one that represents a whole orchestra, with wind and reed instruments and drums, but, with the other ten, we shall sell it to-day or tomorrow at just half price

This one is $200 instead of $400.

The others are—

$100 from $200 $150 from $300

There are a few boxes without table—boxes playing 6 to 12 tunes—half price, as well. For instance, $20 from $40. Basement, Music Store.

Important News of Boys' Clothing

It doesn't matter to you whether we have one or a hundred suits of a sort, if the one we have is the one you want. But it matters to us. To have a customer fall in love with a suit and then fail to get the required size, is to make that person dissatisfied with the store. Hence, clearance sales, every few days—when we bunch the fews of various sorts and, telling plainly that sizes are missing here and there, we sell them in a way to make friends instead of losing them.

Boys' Middy Suits, a hundred; from lots at prices running from $6 to $8.50. All at $5.
Boys' Double-breasted Suits (Jacket Suits, they're called)—$11, $12 and $13 kinds at $9.
Some $7 and $8 styles at $5.
Some $5 suits at $3.50.
Knee Trousers, $1 kind at 65c.
Corduroy Trousers, 75c.

And to help out the boys' wardrobe, we've brought out the new Percale Waists—with two collars and separate cuffs at $1. For boys of 6 to 13.

Overcoats—Of frieze, navy blue or brown or Oxford-gray for boys of 4 to 16, at $5.
Reefers of chinchilla cloth, broken lots of the $6 and $7 kinds, at $5. For boys of 3 to 12, but not all sizes in any one style. Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Embroidered Handkerchiefs

Handkerchiefs being an important part of our every-day business, and not a mere holiday spasm, of course we are justified in carrying greater assortments than are to be found anywhere else—and every handkerchief we sell is pure linen (unless it's silk).

There are two hundred and fifty-one styles of Embroidered Handkerchiefs at the one price of 50c a piece.

There are over two thousand other styles here besides—5c to $75 a piece—embroidered and other sorts included. Broadway, and convenient stations about the store.

Fifty Golf Capes at $10.50 instead of $16.50.

Stylish, and entirely new, but an over-plus so far as the maker was concerned.

These are made of double-face cheviot—the outer side blue, black or brown, the inner side of a rich bright plaid. The monk's hood is entirely of the plaid, and the high collar is slashed in the back, for prettiness sake. We congratulate the fifty who share the lot.

Golf Capes seem to be growing in favor. We've fifty styles, $5 to $25. Second floor, Broadway.

Down Pillows Reduced. We have large facilities for making pillows, and chances for economy, too, for the pillow makers use up remnants from the upholstery work-rooms. That lets us sell very pretty Sofa Pillows, tapestry covers over muslin—instead of $1.75, $2 and $2.25. Fresh, new goods, remember. Other pillows for as much as $26.50. Third floor.

Christmas Wreaths Fifteen cents for the plain ones; 25c for those with red star of immortelles in center. These are made by a professional florist who wires them and puts them together most ingeniously. Basement and Fifth floor.

Silk Waists and Petticoats We have sold thirty-five hundred of these pretty Taffeta Silk Waists, and they come and go so quickly that each day's lot is as new as the morning—crisp, fresh, bright—very giveable for gifts.

The waists are corded liberally, front and back, at top of sleeves and on collar; the cuffs have the new flare. There are lots of pretty colors and black as well—

Five Dollars

And to-day, almost like a gift to you, we have made with deep flounce which is corded and bound and lined with percaline. Quite well worth $6.50 instead of the $4 we ask.

Not many; hardly worth while trying to get one by mail. Second floor.

Fountain Pens You grow attached to a good fountain pen. That's what makes one an ideal Christmas present. Ours are all Waterman; they wear like good friends. Not wholly prosaic either. You can find them here as pretty as you want them. All sorts, from plain pens at $2.50 up to 14-karat gold ones at $35. Broadway.

Carpet Sweepers We have sold a good many Carpet Sweepers for gifts. The Wanamaker (which is a best and special style of the Bissell Sweeper). It takes up dirt but don't get wound up with ravelings. Japanned, $2.50; nickeled, $3. Basement.

Mechanical Toys at Less than Half Prices

Ordinarily these ingeniously constructed affairs are expensive. They must be so—there's a lot of study and work put into them. But here's a lot brought here with the chief object of amusing the daily throngs. They've done that, and now some little ruler of a household may have one all to himself at no great outlay. Prices for the most part are halved—some are much less than half.

Another little lady, somewhat vain, labors diligently to improve her beauty before a dressing table. $30—now $15.
Here's one with a boy feeding chickens; a pump from which the boy brings real water. $27.50 was the price. Now $15.
And a magician, who removes his own head, and while still decapitated exhibits his smiling face in a box by his side. It's $15—half price.
There are acrobats and bicyclists and musicians and clowns, too, that do strange tricks, simply through a little winding up with a key. Half prices or less all through the gathering. Basement.

Blankets You'd think a 10-4 blanket was 2½ yards wide—and big enough for a liberal bed. It is no such thing, because blanket labels are printed lies. Several years ago we began using labels printed with actual sizes, stated in inches. We stick to it, and now some of the blanket labels lie by inches instead of quarters. If you hear of blankets apparently as cheap as Wanamaker's, have them measured. You can trust your eyes. We do not accuse other stores of dishonesty; but there is carelessness—and that's just as bad, in its effect upon you.

Now here are blankets at $3.50 a pair. They weigh 5 lbs. and measure 72x84 in.; filling of long staple wool on cotton warp. A good value.
At $4 a pair—A trifle smaller, 70x82, but the same weight, and all wool.
At $5 a pair—Extra large—78x86—7 lbs.; these have wool filling on spool cotton warp.
Some of the fine French blankets are still here; one of these is equal in weight to an ordinary pair. They're shown in various pretty colorings. $10 each. Third floor.

Lace Curtains Are you less afraid of a mouse because it's Christmas time? Not a bit of it. And the upholstery chief was as scared as he'd be in January, when he found some of his finer sorts of curtains were sold down to remnant lots. He dare not keep such a broken stock. So, at a loss of a fourth or more, he will sell to-day—

Real Arabian Lace Curtains—$12.50 to $75 instead of $17.50 to $90.
Real Renaissance—eleven patterns of these beautiful French laces. $7.25 to $25.50 a pair regularly. Prices, $5.50 to $18.50.

As a rule, only two pairs of a pattern.

Some other and larger lots are also reduced—

Irish Point Curtains, white, $8, $8.50 and $9 kinds at $7 a pair.

Slippers for Christmas Gifts

Men's kidskin Slippers, Romeo style—you know the high-sided kind with rubber inserted. Stay on well. Black and russet. $1.50.
Men's Black Felt Slippers, leather soles—best sorts, $1.30 and $1.60.
Women's D'Orsay Slippers—cut low at the sides, you know—a heel-and-toe style. Red or black, $1.90.
Boys' Slippers, red, black, tan—$1.25 or $1.50—depends on size.
Shoe Store, Main floor, Fourth avenue and Ninth.

Candies and Glace Fruits A five-pound box of Mixed Candy of good quality for $1—a holiday price. Five-pound box of excellent Glace Fruits for $1.50. Sold only in five-pound lots—you'll want that much. Basement.

LAWTON FUND STARTED

Many Amounts Already Received for the General's Family.

AT LEAST $25,000 NEEDED

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—Adjt. Gen. Corbin, at the head of the committee charged with the collection of funds for the benefit of the family of the late Gen. Lawton, is in receipt of expressions of sympathy and of willingness to co-operate from all quarters of the country. Some of these are accompanied by contributions of money, and altogether there is promise of a generous response to the committee's appeal issued yesterday.

Gen. Charles King telegraphed from Milwaukee that the committee might count on a proper response from that city to the appeal. The brokerage firm of Worden & Co. of New York City has voluntarily undertaken to collect funds on the New York Stock Exchange. The committee aim to collect at least $25,000.

The first contribution in Washington came from a clerk in the War Department, who contributed $2.

Gen. Corbin received a telegram from Gen. Alger saying: "I send $100 for the Lawton fund."

Major Gen. Shafter, at San Francisco, telegraphed that he will do everything in his power to help Mrs. Lawton.

A telegram was received from C. H. Hamilton of Milwaukee saying that the citizens of that city authorized him to offer $1,000 as a nucleus of a fund for the widow and family.

Gen. Corbin received a telegram this afternoon from Col. Seyburn of the Inspector General's Department contributing $100 for "brave old Lawton."

A subscription of $50 was received from J. A. Porter of this city, and Gen. Corbin received a telegram from a gentleman in Pennsylvania, who does not wish his name made public, contributing $1,000.

Other contributions received to-day are as follows: Secretary Hay, $100; Assistant Secretary H. C. Taylor, $100; Mrs. Addison Porter, $100; Gen. McCoskry Butt of New York, $100.

The Riggs National Bank of this city has been designated as the depository of the Lawton fund.

Lieut. Col. Clarence R. Edwards, who was temporarily acting as Gen. Lawton's Chief of Staff, has been instructed by the Secretary of War to superintend the transportation of the body and to accompany it to this country.

ORDER TO THE ARMY ISSUED.

War Department Announces Lawton's Death—Directs Flags Be Half-Masted and Minute Guns Fired.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—The following general order announcing to the army the death of Gen. Lawton, was issued from the War Department to-day:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON. Dec. 21, 1899.

With deep regret the Secretary of War announces the death on the field of battle of Henry W. Lawton, Major General of Volunteers and Colonel and Inspector General of the Regular Army.

On the 15th of April, 1861, three days after President Lincoln's first call for volunteers in the war for the Union, at the age of eighteen, he enlisted as a private in the Ninth Indiana Volunteers. He served with his regiment in the field in the army of the Tennessee throughout that war, and at its close was mustered out, at the age of twenty-two, as Lieutenant Colonel, after being brevetted Colonel for gallant and meritorious service and awarded a medal of honor for distinguished gallantry.

He was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the regular army on the 28th of July, 1866, and served in the infantry until 1869, then in the cavalry until 1888, and thereafter as Inspector General until the commencement of the war with Spain.

He was repeatedly commended in General Orders "for vigilance and zeal, rapidity and persistence of pursuit, and for great skill, perseverance, and gallantry" in services on the frontier against hostile Indians.

Upon the declaration of war with Spain he was made Brigadier General, and on the 8th of July following Major General of volunteers. His nomination for Brigadier General of the regular army was determined upon and was ready to be sent to the Senate upon the day of his death. He commanded the Second Division of the Fifth Army Corps in the Cuban campaign, rendering distinguished service in the battles before Santiago, and subsequently commanded the Department of Santiago and the Fourth Army Corps. On the 18th of March, 1899, he assumed command of the First Division of the Eighth Army Corps, in the Philippine Islands, and remained in command of this division in practically continuous and most eventful service in the field until he fell, on the 18th of December, 1899, pierced by an insurgent bullet, while leading his troops near San Mateo, on the Island of Luzon. The swift and resistless movement of his colmun up the Rio Grande and across the northern boundary of the plain of Central Luzon, which had just been completed, was the chief factor in the destruction of the insurgent power, and was the crowning achievement of his arduous life.

He fell in the fullness of his powers, in the joy of conflict, in the consciousness of assured victory. He leaves to his comrades and his country the memory and the example of dauntless courage, of unsparing devotion to duty, of manly character, and of high qualities of command which inspired his troops with his own indomitable spirit.

The flag will be placed at half mast and thirteen minute guns will be fired at every military post and station on the day after the receipt of this order, and the usual badges of mourning will be worn for thirty days. ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

By command of Major Gen. Miles:
H. C. CORBIN, Adjutant General.

THE FUNERAL AT MANILA.

To be Held in About Ten Days—Filipinos to Participate.

MANILA, Dec. 21.—Gen. Lawton's body will be removed from his late residence to the cemetery to-morrow. In accordance with Mrs. Lawton's wish, there will be no ceremonial, only a prayer. The late General's staff and Lieut. Stewart's troop of the Fourth Cavalry, which accompanied Gen. Lawton through the campaign, will compose the escort.

The actual funeral ceremonies will take place in about ten days, when the transport sails, under the direction of Gen. Schwan, and with military honors. The civil organizations, including the Supreme Court Judges, will participate, and Senor Calderon will lead the Filipinos who were associated with Gen. Lawton in the organization of the municipalities. Senor Calderon said it was the "saddest day to the Filipino Nation to see lost not only the foremost advocate of peace, but their best friend."

Mrs. Lawton bears her grief bravely.

President McKinley's and Secretary Root's messages to Major Gen. Otis have been posted at the palace, where the flags are flying half-mast high.

GEN. LAWTON'S SUCCESSOR.

New Major General Will Not Be Named Till After the Manila Funeral.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—It was said at the War Department to-day that the vacancy in the list of Major Generals caused by the death of Gen. Lawton will not be filled until after the funeral services over his body at Manila.

It is thought among well-informed officers of the army in this city that the appointment will go either to Gen. John C. Bates, Gen. S. B. M. Young, or Gen. Loyd Wheaton. These officers hold the rank of Brigadier General of Volunteers, and each has distinguished himself in active military service in the Philippines. It is also understood that Brig. Gen. Chaffee, who has been chief of staff to Gen. Brooke, commanding the Division of Cuba, is likely to be relieved of duty in that division in a short time, and to receive an important command with the army in the Philippines.

Gen. Lawton held the office of Inspector General, with the rank of Colonel, in the regular establishment. His death makes the following promotions in that department: Lieut. Col. Peter D. Vroom, to be Colonel; Major Charles H. Heyl, to be Lieutenant Colonel. A vacancy is thus created in the list of Majors and Inspectors General, which will probably be filled by transfer from the line.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

Raleigh and Gaston Shareholders Approve Seaboard Consolidation—T. F. Ryan's Opposition Fails.

RALEIGH, N. C., Dec. 21.—Upon application this morning of attorneys for Thomas F. Ryan of New York, a temporary restraining order was issued by United States District Judge Thomas R. Purnell to prevent any action of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad stockholders looking toward the consolidation here to-day of the various lines of the Seaboard Air Line system.

A few hours later Judge Purnell granted a hearing to the parties and revoked the temporary restraining order in a written judgment, as follows:

"The order inadvertently signed this morning is revoked, and the service thereof held to be invalid. In the exercise of a sound judicial discretion the restraining order is refused."

Mr. Ryan's counsel in the hearing charged that the interests of his client would be irreparably jeopardized by the consolidation plans of the Williams syndicate. Judge Watts, general counsel of the Seaboard Line, read in reply a dispatch from President John Skelton Williams to Thomas F. Ryan, under date of Dec. 12, which was, in part, as follows:

"We have already submitted all the offers, suggestions, and propositions that any fair-minded man could reasonably desire, including propositions for the arbitration by a court of disinterested persons of the differences between us, and we have nothing further to propose. Our efforts to secure a peaceable solution of the question have been in no way reciprocated by you, but you have appeared to be determined to place in the way of this great enterprise, which means so much for this whole section of the country, every obstacle within your power directly or indirectly. We have told you frankly that we intended to respect all of your rights as a stockholder in this system, and to accord to you terms as favorable as those accorded to any other stockholder."

The meeting of the stockholders of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad was accordingly held at 4 P. M., after there had been an adjournment at noon.

The purchase of the preferred and common stock of subordinate companies of the system was reported by Vice President and General Manager E. St. John, with the prices paid, and a resolution approving and confirming the same was adopted by a vote of 14,967 shares to 16.

A resolution was also adopted by the same vote. After the preamble, it was in part as follows:

"Resolved, By the stockholders of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Company that they approve of the corporate union of the railways and properties comprising the Seaboard Air Line system with those of the South Bound Railroad, the Georgia and Alabama Railway, and the Florida Central and Peninsular Railroad Company. And they hereby authorize and empower the President and Directors of this company to join in such agreements, contracts, merger, or consolidation, or other measure as may be legally necessary or proper to bring about the closest physical connection and corporate union or merger of such properties for the accomplishment of the creation of the system so proposed."

The meeting was then adjourned till Jan. 17, when final action is expected to be taken.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 21.—John Skelton Williams, President of the Seaboard Air Line system, in referring to the fact that the United States Court at Richmond had rejected the application of Thomas F. Ryan for an injunction to restrain the carrying out of the consolidation plans of the syndicate, and that following this the United States Court at Raleigh took the same action, stated that "he believed hat this made the seventeenth defeat Mr. Ryan had received since he began the fight upon the Seaboard three years ago."

"Every step," said Mr. Williams, "which has been taken in carrying through this consolidation has been under the advice of the ablest counsel, and the various actions which have been taken have not only been ratified by the Boards of Directors, but also by the stockholders of the several companies in general meetings. There is no single step which has been taken to which the slightest objection can be legitimately made. I have just received a statement of earnings of the Seaboard Air Line for the month of November, which show an increase at the rate of about $1,000 a day over last year, which was the biggest year in its history."

Mr. Williams was asked what he had to say in regard to the recent statements in New York papers that the capitalization of the Seaboard system was excessive.

"The total capitalization of the greater Seaboard system," replied Mr. Williams, "under the proposed plan of consolidation, will be less than one-half the capitalization per mile of the Southern Railway. The total bonded debt per mile of the greater Seaboard system will be about $18,000 per mile of road owned, against a debt on the Southern Railway of about $26,000 per mile of road owned. The preferred stock of the new system will be about $7,000 per mile, against $15,000 per mile of road owned by the Southern Railway, while our common stock will be only about $8,000 per mile, against $25,000 per mile on the Southern Railway. These figures speak for themselves, and require no further comment from me."

RAILROADS GET MORE TIME.

Allowed Seven Months More to Equip with Safety Appliances.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—The Inter-State Commerce Commission to-day, in an opinion prepared by Commissioner Prouty in the matter of applications of carriers for an extension of time beyond Jan. 1, 1900, within which to comply with the requirements of the safety appliance law in using automatic couplers and power of train brakes on freight cars, extended the time to Aug. 1, 1900.

It was admitted by representatives of the railway employes that some additional time should be granted and the commission, upon full consideration, arrived at the conclusion that an extension of seven months would be proper.

PITTSBURG AND GULF RAILROAD.

Philadelphia Plan of Reorganization Becomes Effective.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 21.—Although no official announcement has been made, it is stated to-day on good authority that a majority of all classes of securities of the various companies has been deposited under the modified Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf Railroad reorganization plan. A member of the committee says this means that the reorganization is practically accomplished.

The time for deposits expired yesterday. It is said that over $23,000,000 of securities of the various companies were deposited by holders in Holland.

A meeting of the Reorganization Committee will be held in New York, probably, when it is expected definite announcement will be made of the securities deposited. Certificates of deposit are being engraved, and these will be listed in Philadelphia and New York.

Steps are also being taken to foreclose the mortgage upon the road, so that it can be bought in by the committee, and turned over to the new company, which will bear the same or a similar name to that by which the road is now known. There will be some changes in officers, but no intimation has been given as to who will be the President.

THE GRAND CANYON RAILWAY.

CHICAGO, Dec. 21.—Col. L. M. Martin, Vice President of the Santa Fé and Grand Canyon Railway, who, with a party of Eastern capitalists, has been on a tour of inspection in the West, left for the East to-day. Col. Martin and his associates decided to extend their road at once to the copper mines at Grand Cañon, where there is more copper in sight, it is said, than in any other locality in the country. They expect to complete the work within thirty days, and interesting ceremonies will attend the opening of the road. The last spike will be driven the latter part of January and will be of solid gold. The extension will enable the owners of the mines to begin shipping ore to the Williams smelter, which has been completed for some time and is in readiness to be started up the minute the ore can be taken to it.

In addition to tapping this copper country, the road will pass through a most picturesque region, and will open up a section of the West that heretofore has been traversed by stages only.

Alton Road Vice President Resigns.

CHICAGO, Dec. 21.—Vice President and General Manager C. H. Chappell of the Chicago and Alton Railroad, announced to-day that he had decided to retire from the active duties of his office. No successor will be appointed, the President assuming the work of the General Manager's office in addition to his own. Mr. Chappell will continue as a member of the Board of Directors of the Alton Company, and as President of the St. Louis, Jacksonville and Chicago Road and of the Mississippi Bridge Company, auxiliaries of the Alton Company.

American Locomotives for France.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 21.—The locomotives built and shipped some months ago by the Baldwin Works for the State railways of France, the first American engines ever run in that country, have given such satisfaction to the French officials that the Baldwin Works have just received another order from the State railways for ten passenger locomotives of the Atlantic type, with eighty-four-inch drivers, and similar in design and size to those in use on the Reading's Atlantic City route. The locomotives are to be completed by the early Summer, so that they can be used in connection with the rush of travel to the Paris Exposition.

BUFFALO HEARS CLARK HOWELL

BUFFALO, Dec. 21.—Clark Howell of Atlanta, who with several friends from that city arrived here last evening as the guest of the Independent Club, to-day, in charge of a committee of the club and representatives of the Pan-American Exposition Company, visited the site of the exhibition and inspected the service building, which has just been completed, and the other work in progress. This evening Mr. Howell was the guest of honor at the monthly dinner of the Independent Club and delivered an address; the title of which was "The Man with His Hat in His Hand."

His remarks were frequently interrupted by applause. He said in part:

"On the day I received the invitation to address this distinguished gathering chance took me to the Federal military post in the suburbs of my city. The Twenty-ninth Regiment of United States Volunteers, then quartered there, and recently landed on the other side of the Pacific, had that day received orders for their trip of 10,000 miles. The troops were formed in full regimental parade in the presence of thousands of spectators.

"Leaning against a tree close beside me was a white-haired mountaineer who looked with intent eyes upon the movements of the men in uniform. The regiment had finished its evolutions, the commissioned officers had lined themselves to make their regular march to the front for report and dismissal. The bugler had sounded the signal, the halyard had been grasped, and the flag slowly fell, saluting the retiring sun. Instinctively and apparently unconsciously my tall neighbor by the tree removed his hat from his head and held it in his hand in reverential recognition until the flag had been furled and the last strain of the National Anthem had been lost in the resonant tramp of the troops as they left the field.

"What a picture that was—the man with his hat in his hand, as he stood uncovered during that impressive ceremony. I moved involuntarily toward him, and, impressed with his reverential attitude, I asked him where he was from.

"'I am,' said he, 'from Pickens County,' and in casual conversation it developed that this raw mountaineer had come to Atlanta to say farewell to an only son who stood in line before him. The silent exhibition of patriotism and loyalty I had just witnessed had been prompted by a soul as rugged but as placid as the great blue mountains which gave it birth, and by an inspiration kindled from the very bosom of nature itself.

"There was the connecting link between the hearthstone and the Capitol. There was the citizen who, representing only the real, substantial element of the Nation's reserve strength—'the citizen standing in the doorway of his home, contented on his threshold'—had answered his country's call—the man of whom Henry Grady so eloquently said: 'He shall save the Republic when the drum tap is futile and the barracks are exhausted.'

"In the Philippines 65,000 American soldiers to-day are standing in the trenches against the onslaught on our Nation's authority. It is needless now to recount the whys and the wherefores of this attack. There is room for patriotic difference on expansion of our boundary lines and the subsequent control of territory thus acquired. But it should be enough for any American citizen, whatever may be his political opinion, to know that our boys are being killed, our flag is being assailed, and our authority is being defied."

NEW CHURCH AT PLYMOUTH.

Forefathers' Day Celebrated by Dedicating the Edifice.

PLYMOUTH, Mass., Dec. 21.—The members of the First Church (Unitarian) of this town, which was organized immediately after the landing of the Pilgrims here Dec. 21, 1620, celebrated Forefathers' Day today by dedicating a beautiful new structure which is to be the future home of the society.

The members of this ancient parish are the legitimate successors, through an unbroken church organization and a continuation ministry of the little band of Separatists who met in the manor house at Scrooby in the first years of the seventeenth century. The history of this church, in fact, is the history of the Pilgrim Fathers.

The dedicatory exercises began at 11 o'clock with every seat in the church filled. The programme included a prayer of dedication by Edward Everett Hale, and addresses by Gov. Wolcott, the Rev. Francis G. Peabody of Harvard University, the Rev. Samuel A. Elliott, Secretary of the American Unitarian Association, and others.

This is the fifth house of worship which has been erected on or near to the site now occupied. The first building was of logs, fortified and protected. The new structure is of stone and marble, and cost about $75,000. It replaces one which was burned in 1892.

WRECK ON THE NEW HAVEN.

FARMINGTON, Conn., Dec. 21.—Two locomotives and eleven cars were totally wrecked in a head-on collision between two freight trains on the Northampton Division of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company near here this morning. The débris caught fire and eleven cars were destroyed. The train hands jumped, and all escaped serious injury.

The money loss will probably run into the thousands. A misunderstanding of orders is believed to have been the cause of the wreck.

E. G. WILLIAMS A SUICIDE.

Former Toy Manufacturer Shoots Himself in a Brooklyn Hotel.

Edward G. Williams, fifty years old, of 141 St. Mark's Avenue, Brooklyn, committed suicide in his room at the Clarendon Hotel in that borough some time yesterday by shooting himself in the left breast with a revolver. He was formerly a member of the firm of Ives & Williams, toy manufacturers, of 682 Broadway, Manhattan, but had been out of business since last Spring. He engaged a room at the Clarendon Hotel on Wednesday night and retired about midnight, after which he was not seen alive.

When his body was found on a chair near the bed there was a clipping from a newspaper, containing an article on "Heaven Our Future Home and How to Get There." The suicide had evidently read it just before he killed himself. Among the books and papers in his clothing were two bankbooks, made out in the names of his niece, Elsie Schlegel, for $1, and of Francis W. McLean, for $1,700. There was also a receipt for life insurance, together with some Masonic charms, an answer from Lieut. Gov. Woodruff, dated Dec. 10, to an application by Williams for a position, and letters from William Sherer, Treasurer of the New York Clearing House, addressed to Bradstreet's in regard to Williams. On the dresser was a letter addressed to his wife and daughter, in which he claimed that the former had ill-treated him after he lost his money and that his financial downfall was caused by his business associates.

LAWYER KILLS HIS OPPONENT.

DALLAS, Texas, Dec. 21.—F. M. Etheridge, a prominent lawyer of this city, to-day shot Attorney Edwin O. Harrell, who is equally well known, four times in a crowded elevator in the North Texas Building. Harrell died later at his home.

Harrell had a pistol half cocked in his hand as he fell in the lobby in front of the elevator shaft. Etheridge is in custody. The men were employed as counsel on opposite sides in litigation involving cotton mill property, and quarreled concerning professional affairs.

A Christmas Note.

The cardinal point of a Chistmas gift is appropriateness. A present should express an harmonius note between giver and recipient; for the things we use every day influence us more than we realize.

Diamonds, Watches, and Jewelry are but the starting points of our stocks. We have everything in Cut Glass, Silverware, Fine China, Table Cutlery, Bric-a-Brac, Bronze and Art Pieces. And there are scores of useful articles in our store for home and individual use.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

SUGGESTIONS BY

C. C. SHAYNE.

From now on until the holidays most men are too busy to "shop" in a vague search for an appropriate gift to present to some friend or loved one, and many of us are forced to realize that our hearts are bigger than our purses at this particular time of year, when we all regard it as a duty and a pleasure to remember in some substantial way those who are dear to us. Few there are, however, and very few who have not the time and means of gratifying, to some extent at least, the sentiment which possesses us and grows as the holidays approach. But the real perplexity of the matter presents itself when the question arises, What shall it be? What article will be the most expressive of the sentiment and the most substantial and at the same time come within the range of my purse strings?

Furs naturally suggest themselves to the mind of the thoughtful, and the following list will doubtless meet, both in price and character, the wishes of all:—

THE DAY IN WALL STREET

STANDARD OIL'S PURCHASES

The General Market Irregular—Produce Exchange Trust Company's Affairs—Gould's Interest $100,000.

Though there were no new developments yesterday in respect to Brooklyn Rapid Transit, the stock was under pressure all day on the Stock Exchange, and the final quotation for the day marked a decline from the previous day of one full point. There was absolutely no news in respect to the property, but the effects of the persistent rumors of Wednesday, that a receiver for the property was to be appointed, were, despite the official denial of these rumors, still felt, and the continued aggressive bear campaign accelerated the downward movement.

From what could be learned yesterday, it would appear not alone that the receivership rumor had been circulated for stock jobbing purposes, but also that many of the other fanciful reports emanated from the same sources, and had simply for their object the intimidation of weak holders and the depression of the quotation for the stock.

William F. Sheehan, of counsel for the company, reiterated that all the recently circulated stories concerning the company were absolutely false, while Anson R. Flower declared as ridiculous the idea that the decline of the stock was due to pressure brought to bear on Anthony N. Brady in order, because of that gentleman's gas holdings, to force a settlement of the gas war. Mr. Brady himself declined to discuss the matter, but a close friend of his said that his holdings of New Amsterdam Gas were so small that he would not be as appreciable a factor in determining the policy of that company as some people seemed to think.

The following statement was put out during the day by Directors of the company who are agreed that the present decline in the stock has been the result of a systematic bear attack.

"The Brooklyn Rapid Transit system now consists of 504 miles of railroad. The company has available over $10,000,000 assets to meet all expenditures for future improvements and enlargements. It has appropriated during the last six months over $600,000 for that purpose from earnings. It has an ample cash balance in bank, and has absolutely no floating debt. The surplus earnings will hereafter be applicable for dividends on the stock."

A rather puzzling feature of yesterday's trading was the buying of the stock by Standard Oil interests, who are reputed to have purchased some 10,000 shares. In some quarters this buying was said to be in order to steady the stock and prevent a further break; while in other quarters it was said that the Standard Oil interests were simply buying in order to begin to unload the stock later and further depress the quotation. In fact, there was almost as much talk regarding the significance of these purchases as there had been concerning the distressing rumors circulated on Wednesday.

All told, over 95,000 shares of the stock—the largest of any stock traded in—were sold, with the range of prices from 62½ to 67½, and the close 64½.

The general market was irregular and at times positively weak as a result of London's weakness, and talk of a panic there due to reported further reverses in South Africa.

PRESIDENT BEALL'S STANDING.

The Produce Exchange Trust Company's Trustees Consider Mr. McIntyre's Plan—Mr. Gould's Interest.

Several interesting facts in regard to the Produce Exchange Trust Company, which closed its doors on Monday, came out yesterday. One was that President Turner A. Beall need not resign, as he has nothing to resign, having been relieved of his duties, so that to resume them he would have to be re-elected. Another development was that the interest of Edwin Gould, who is Chairman of the Special, or Reorganization, Committee, in the company is $100,000. It also came out that the proposition which the Board of Trustees is to consider to-day is that of Thomas A. McIntyre, which was published in THE TIMES yesterday. Mr. McIntyre's proposition involves, it is asserted on excellent authority, the placing of Gen. Samuel Thomas at the head of the trust company in the place of Mr. Beall. It was further asserted, on authority, that when the capital of the company was increased from $500,000 to $2,500,000 the plan was underwritten by a syndicate, and that a large amount of the stock was not disposed of and is in the treasury of the corporation.

Little progress was made yesterday toward the liquidation or the rehabilitation of the company. Several of the Trustees were busy with Messrs. Goodwin and Cromwell, the lawyers of the Special Committee, in examining into the loans of the concern, and the entire clerical force was active in preparing data for the Trustees. The Special Committee held a brief session, on which it made no report, early in the evening. Mr. Gould presided. As he left the meeting he was asked if it was his purpose to take the company out of its embarrassment and merge it with the Federal Trust Company, which was organized by his brother Frank, and which is shortly to begin business at Wall Street and Broadway. Mr. Gould said that he did not care to discuss the subject. He said also that, while he would not talk further about it, President Beall had not resigned. He would not discuss a story that Thomas A McIntyre's plan was distinctly hostile to him. On one subject he was decided. "My committee," he said, "has not the final voice in the affairs of the company. The Board of Trustees has. We derive our power from it. The majority of the Trustees will finally decide what will be done with the company."

Another Trustee said last night: "If Mr. McIntyre produces the money he claims to have secured, and I have no reason to doubt his assertion, why, all that there will be to do is to open our doors and go on with our business. Perhaps a definite result will not be arrived at at our meeting to-morrow. You see Mr. McIntyre wants until next Tuesday. His choice for President is Gen. Thomas. I do not know that Mr. Gould is bent on controlling a trust company. Indeed, I have heard him quoted as saying that these are bad times for trust companies. But he has no inconsiderable interest in the Produce Exchange Trust Company. He put $100,000 into it before he became a Trustee and Vice President, and is not a man to be trifled with, while he intends to look out for all interests that are imperilled.

"Mr. Beall has no need to resign. He has been relieved. He goes out. My view of his case is that there is now no President of the Produce Exchange Trust Company. Mr. Gould's committee comprises the company's officers. So far, I have no reason to doubt that the company will liquidate honorably, or that the company will continue in business.

"But a question that is important has developed. When the company increased its capital the plan to issue $2,000,000 more of stock was underwritten by a syndicate, and we learn that all the stock was not sold. An important part of it is in the company's treasury."

Mr. McIntyre said yesterday that he had decided not to speak of his offer to the Board of Trustees of the company before they had acted on it, because it said all he cared to say on the subject.

Gen. Thomas would not talk about Mr. McIntyre's plan of reorganization or the possibility of his being chosen to succeed Mr. Beall, except to say: "I would not go in with Mr. Beall. But I would with Mr. McIntyre. I consider Mr. McIntyre a good man. I have known him for years and trust him. In my opinion, if the trust company starts again and is properly managed, there is a future for it."

Mr. Beall was in the offices of the company in the morning. He refused to speak of his affairs or about the company.

MONEY MARKET EASY.

No Aid Required from the Banking Syndicate — Estimates of Gold Exports This Week.

The money market continued easy yesterday, and the syndicate of Associated Banks took no action to relieve it, because no aid was required. Time money was firm at 6 per cent., and call loan rates were the same, with an exception or two at 7 per cent. As the day advanced the rate ran down to 3 per cent., with accommodation abundant and money going a-begging. A late demand ran the rate up to 4 per cent. The sterling exchange market was balanced by the Bank of England, holding to its 6 per cent. discount rate, and the increase in the rate of the Bank of France from 4 to 4½ per cent. Demand sterling in the last hour of business showed a tendency to easiness, the last posted rates being $4.87¼ to $4.87½, with the first quotation ruling. The current impression was that the French rate was raised to prevent gold going to London. On the other hand, the holding of the rate at London was accepted as an indication that the strain of gold getting was relaxed, and that the situation had improved, with the prospect of getting $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 from this country.

During the week about $600,000 in gold has been received from Canada by local banks having affiliations with the Dominion. Conservative opinion is that its mission is profitable investment and not exportation, even with the concessions granted by the Bank of England. The estimate of to-morrows gold shipments from America varied in the financial district. Some put them at $4,000,000, others at $7,000,000. Few of the exporting houses discussed probabilities or intentions. It is likely that these exports will be made.

At the Sub-Treasury yesterday $1,700,000 in bonds was deposited by banks to qualify as custodians of Government moneys, making about $8,000,000 so deposited here. At the Sub-Treasury this notice was posted:

The National City Bank has been designated as the depository of the internal revenue receipts, through which the distribution of funds will be made to all banks which accept the offer of the Treasury Department, and pledge United States bonds to secure such moneys.

ANOTHER BOSTON BANK CLOSED

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21. — Controller Dawes this evening appointed Special Examiner Daniel G. Wing temporary receiver of the Globe National Bank of Boston, Mass. In connection with his action the Controller said:

"Some time ago Mr. Wing, who is one of the experts employed in the system of special bank examinations recently inaugurated, discovered a serious condition of affairs in the Globe National Bank, which he immediately brought to the attention of the Controller, and under his direction to the Directors of the bank. The Directors very laudably agreed, and undertook to make good the doubtful and bad assets found, and have greatly improved the condition of the bank since that time. They also delivered to the Controller a written guaranty that they would remove the doubtful assets. Recent failures in Boston have lessened the value of the unperformed portion of the guaranty, and involved the solvency of the bank.

"In view of the fact that to allow the bank to remain open longer will result in injustice to unsecured creditors, now that the condition of insolvency is found to exist, it becomes my duty under the law to appoint a receiver. A considerable cash dividend can be paid to creditors at once.

"The condition of the bank was discovered by Special Examiner Wing in time to secure such action on the part of the Directors as will probably prevent the failure from inflicting heavy losses upon the depositors, but the Directors and stockholders will lose heavily."

The bank, it is understood, was involved in the Squire failure and in mining stocks. The following is a condensed statement of the condition of the bank as reported to the Controller Dec. 2, 1899:

RECEIVERSHIP SURPRISES BOSTON.

Clearing House Takes Precautions, However, Against Further Trouble.

BOSTON, Dec. 21.—The news that a receiver had been appointed for the Globe National Bank has taken this city by surprise. While the bank was known to have been in distress ten days ago, presumably over the decline in copper specialties, chiefly of the United States Mining Company, it was thought the crisis had passed.

The Boston Clearing House came to the assistance of the Globe Bank, although when the Broadway National Bank later was in trouble the same body declined to offer help. Three days ago it was officially stated that the Clearing House Committee had certificates to a large amount signed, ready to assist any solvent bank should pressure come upon it. For this reason the situation in financial circles here to-morrow is hardly likely to be seriously affected by the Globe Bank receivership.

Boston Speculators Fail to Make Margins Good and Brokers Sue.

BOSTON, Dec. 21.—A $400,000 attachment against Edward A. Clark and William H. Coolidge has been filed by Dupee & Sargent, State Street bankers and brokers. The writ relates especially to property held by the firms of Hayden, Stone & Co. and Frederick H. Prince & Co., bankers, and owned by Mrs. Elizabeth Clark, wife of Edward A. Clark.

William A. Hayes, counsel for Dupee & Sargent, said, to-day, that the attachment was made to protect the firm, with whom Messrs. Clark & Coolidge had an account. The former say they have lost $200,000 through the failure of their customers to strengthen their margins during the recent drop in the value of United States mining stock.

It is asserted that Dupee & Sargent, under orders from Clark & Coolidge, bought all the stock that was offered at $30 per share up to a certain time. It also is stated that Hayden, Stone & Co. made loans to Clark & Coolidge on other shares of United States mining stocks, and they are made parties to the writ for the purpose of recovering the value of these shares, if any, in their possession. Frederick H. Prince & Co. also are made parties for a similar purpose.

DRIVEN TO SUICIDE BY LOSSES.

Baltimore Post Office Cashier Takes His Own Life.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 21.—Having lost nearly $100,000 in the recent crash in the stock market Capt. Louis Schneeberger, cashier of the Baltimore Post Office, prominent in politics, and treasurer of the Young Republican Club, yesterday committed suicide by shooting himself in the head. Post Office Inspector Warfield says that Capt. Schneeberger's accounts as cashier are correct and his books balance to date.

Capt. Schneeberger had amassed a fortune during the past two years in the stock market. Since last January he had gained over $75,000 on lucky turns in the market. He was very popular in club and military circles, and everybody congratulated him on his good luck. Only a short time ago he told a friend that he intended to quit the market when he had made $150,000. He expected to round out that sum this year.

His friend says that he is sure from what he knows of the Captain's investments that he was completely wiped out both from call loans and from margins. He was a natural bull, and was always looking for increased values. While he did not pretend to be the possessor of any great inside information he watched the market carefully and was believed to be a good speculator. He did not carry any great margins on his stock, and was not prepared for any considerable slump like that of the last few days.

Capt. Schneeberger was well known in baseball and other sporting circles. During exciting races for the pennant he accompanied the Baltimore team to Boston, New York, and Philadelphia as the head of a band of rooters.

He leaves a wife, three sons, and two daughters.

MORE GAS WAR RUMORS

Russell Sage Calls Talk of Settlement Trashy Gossip.

STATEMENT OF SAMUEL SLOAN

There was yesterday in the Wall Street district a chaos of rumors in regard to the "gas war" and its settlement. The stories were on the authority of those fully acquainted with the situation without other foundation than the meeting of the Board of Directors and the Executive Committee of the New Amsterdam Gas Company in the offices of August Belmont & Co., the bidding of the Standard and Consolidated Gas Companies for a municipal contract at 92½ cents, the meeting earlier in the week of three Consolidated Directors, who are Directors of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, to transact Lackawanna business in Samuel Sloan's office, the rise of Consolidated Gas stock, desultory meetings of officers of the rival gas companies—which accomplished nothing—an association of the raid on Brooklyn Rapid Transit stock with the gas situation, and the growing sentiment that something must be done to save the local and warring gas corporations from bankruptcy.

Directors of the Consolidated Gas Company said that the rumors of a settlement were absolutely without foundation. They ridiculed a story that "Standard Oil interests" had "clubbed Anthony N. Brady into submission" by attacking his corporations, including New Amsterdam Gas. Samuel Sloan said:

"Recently, that is for several months, there have been 'conferences,' if you may so style them. Mr. Rockefeller may have met Mr. Sage and said: 'How d'ye do?' and Mr. Brady may have been polite with Mr. Rockefeller. But there's nothing to hang your hat on. The 'war' is not ended. I know of no sale of a block of stock by Mr. Brady that has any bearing on the stories, while from what I see in the papers, I should judge that he has sold some Brooklyn Rapid Transit."

Another Director of the Consolidated Company, who is recognized as voicing the sentiment of all the Directors of that company, said yesterday:

"There will be no settlement of the 'gas war' until the owners of the outside companies are prepared to submit to the appointment of three independent arbitrators to adjust matters, to lay open their books, showing their capitalization and earnings, their assets and their liabilities—the exact state and worth of their property, in fact—just as we are now prepared to do. More, they must abide by the decision of these arbitrators, as we will.

"The managers of the New Amsterdam Company, it should be borne in mind, do not own a share of the stock of the company, and when the stockholders learn that they will turn them out. In the meantime it is very expensive business for us all.

"I may say that, in my opinion, the gas business in New York will not be as profitable in any year in the next twenty years as it would have been if certain Wall Street speculators had not gotten together to take advantage of the boom times by organizing a new company, the New Amsterdam.

"The present condition of the business is such that it is not calculated to impress very favorably those looking for legitimate investment."

After the meeting of the Directors of the New Amsterdam Company, Frank S. Hastings, one of the board, and its gas expert, said: "The situation has not changed. The Board of Directors and the Executive Committee met to day and transacted ordinary business. But they discussed and did nothing that had a bearing on the strife between the companies. So far as New Amsterdam is concerned, the financial affairs are all right, as will be seen shortly when the time arrives for it to fulfill its obligations.

Russell Sage, President of the Standard Gas Light Company, said: "All this talk is trash, gossip. The situation is not changed and I cannot see any change ahead. Standard is attending to business and going ahead with its affairs. I have talked recently, just simply gossiped, with William Rockefeller without result. We have not been invited to any conference, and the fight is going on yet. But it could be settled in a few minutes if the others would get sense and get us all together."

Anthony N. Brady would see no one in regard to the reports. He was quoted by an intimate friend as ridiculing them as buncombe and circulated for stock-jobbing purposes.

The fact that a renewal of a contract for supplying the city with gas for Blackwell's Island and its institutions had brought bids of 92½ cents a thousand from the Consolidated and Standard Companies was known several days ago. Officers of the companies said that the coincidence as to price was not significant. The New Amsterdam is likely to bid at this uniform rate. A financial agent for the last-named company said that the knowledge of such a bid by the Consolidated sent the stock of the company up when other stocks were tumbling.

The quotations for securities at the close of the market yesterday did not indicate a cessation of hostilities among the gas companies. Consolidated Gas closed at 180, a net decline of three points; New Amsterdam common at 21½, a loss of one point; New Amsterdam preferred at 41, a similar loss. Standard stocks advanced. Common closed at 100, a gain of five points, and preferred at 123, one of three points.

DISTILLING COMPANY'S AFFAIRS.

Plan to Increase Stock Abandoned—Wants Tax Decreased.

President S. M. Rice of the Distilling Company of American announced yesterday the abandonment for the present of the plan for increasing the capital stock of the company. Mr. Rice considers the condition of the money market so unfavorable as to suggest prudence in launching any financial scheme at present, and he will not risk failure with that of his company. The proposition was to raise about $2,000,000 by a stock or bond issue to take up a floating indebtedness.

Mr. Rice is anxious to secure the passage of an act of Congress which would reduce the amount of internal revenue which the company has to pay. He believes that a tax of 70 cents, instead of $1.10, would, on account of increased consumption, produce more revenue than the present tax.

EMIGRATED IN GIRL'S ATTIRE.

Austrian Youth's Device to Escape Service in the Army.

Peter Segina, seventeen years old, of Reskov, Austria, arrived here on the steamship Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse and passed through the Barge Office as Fräulein Theresa Matinsic. He was accompanied by his aunt, Catherine Segina, of Bradford, Conn.

Peter was of an age when he expected to be drafted into the Austrian Army. In order to avoid conscription he rigged himself up in some of his aunt's clothing and embarked for this country with her as her niece. On the voyage his attentions in girl's attire to other girls attracted a good deal of notice and aroused suspicions, which his aunt did her best to allay. Upon arrival at the Barge Office Fräulein Matinsic was closely questioned by the authorities and owned up to being Peter in false garb. He was permitted to accompany his aunt to Connecticut.

Commercial Trust Company Election.

The Commercial Trust Company, recently incorporated at Trenton with $500,000 capital stock and $500,000 surplus fund, was organized yesterday at 55 Montgomery Street, Jersey City, where its offices will be until its new building on the site of Taylor's Hotel is completed. These Directors were chosen: Walter E. Ammon, Joseph S. Auerbach, Marcus Beach, August Belmont, C. Ledyard Blair, Frederick G. Bourne, William Brinkerhoff, John D. Carscallen, C. C. Cuyler, J. Warren Nordenbergh, J. H. Hyde, Robert M. Jarvis, Luther Kountze, Frank J. Matthews, Allan L. McDermott, N. Thayer Robb, Robert S. Ross, Edwin A. Stevens, Benjamin L. Stowe, Eben B. Thomas, Myles Tierney, Augustus H. Vanderpoel, John J. Voorhees, George W. Young, and Augustus Zabriskie. At a subsequent meeting of the Directors these officers were elected: President—J. Warren Hardenbergh; Vice Presidents—George W. Young and Robert S. Ross; Secretary and Treasurer—Oscar L. Gubelman; Cashier—William J. Field.

BIG ARMORY RECEPTION.

New Addition to 47th Regiment's Home Formally Opened.

The new addition to the Forty-seventh Regiment armory at Marcy Avenue and Lynch Street, Brooklyn, was formally opened last night with a review, followed by a reception. Several thousand persons were in attendance, and the great drill hall was elaborately decorated with flags and bunting. With the addition, the armory occupies an entire block and makes the drill hall one of the largest in America.

The reviewing officer last night was Major Gen. Roe, commanding the New York National Guard. The regiment was divided into two battalions, Col. John G. Eddy in command. The reception which followed the review continued until an early hour this morning.

A PASTOR DIES OF INJURIES.

The Rev. Vernon B. Carroll Had Leg Crushed by a Train.

The Rev. Vernon Bond Carroll, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Amenia, Dutchess County, N. Y., died at the City Hospital yesterday from the effects of an accident, which occurred just outside the Erie Railway Station, Jersey City, on Monday evening.

Mr. Carroll, who had been visiting his son, Vernon E. Carroll, at Tenafly, N. J., went to Jersey City by the Northern Railroad, intending to take an Erie train for Garfield, N. J., where two other of his sons reside. When his train arrived at Jersey City it was stopped outside the station on signal. Mr. Carroll alighted. When he saw his error he attempted to board the train again just as it started. He slipped and fell under the wheels, his right leg being so badly crushed as to necessitate amputation.

Mr. Carroll was born in Baltimore, Md., in 1846. He was graduated from Rutgers College, at New Brunswick, N. J., and afterward from the Theological Seminary attached to Rutgers. He was ordained in 1871. He is survived by a widow, six sons, and two daughters.

THE KRONMAN MURDER TRIAL.

William Neufeld, who is charged with the murder of Mrs. Annie Kronman of 266 West Thirty-fifth Street, went on trial before Justice Fursman in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court yesterday.

Assistant District Attorney J. Forbes Hennessy, in opening the case for the people, reviewed the circumstances surrounding the murder, and said that the evidence in the possession of the District Attorney's office, while circumstantial, was of the strongest possible kind. Neufeld, he said, knew of the jewels in Mrs. Kronman's possession, and before the murdered woman was discovered is known to have been inquiring for her flat. Neufeld heard the details of the murder unmoved.

Coroners' Physician Donlin, the first witness called, said that Mrs. Kronman's death was due to a fractured skull. All of the wounds, in his opinion, had been inflicted by the axe which was found lying beside her.

Nathan Kronman testified as to finding his wife unconscious on the floor and observing that his wife's jewelry box had been broken open, and that the jewels were gone.

All the while Kronman was testifying Neufeld took notes, handing them to his counsel, William F. Howe.

Ambulance Surgeon Crawford declined to commit himself as to whether or not Mrs. Kronman's wounds had been inflicted with a hatchet.

Frederick Kaffernan identified the jewels that had been stolen from Mrs. Kronman's jewel box as those he had sold to Kronman.

Under cross-examination he admitted that there was no mark on the diamonds in the earrings he had sold Kronman, one of which, according to the prosecution, Neufeld had converted into a stud. The witness, however, recognized the stone by the color and cutting, although he had not seen it since March 6.

Lily Cripps, twelve years old, who lives on the ground floor of the Kronman house, identified Neufeld as the man she had directed to Kronman's flat the morning of the murder. She said that she heard him climb up two flights of stairs before she went into her mother's apartments. The efforts of the defense to shake her testimony were unsuccessful.

Mrs. Katherine Werms testified that she had seen Lily Cripps open the door on the morning of Aug. 7, and heard her direct a man to the Kronman flat. Miss Louise Werms, the last witness called yesterday, said that she heard Mrs. Kronman talking to some one in her flat at about 1:30 o'clock on the day of the murder.

The trial will continue to-day.

TAMMANY MAN SENTENCED.

Indictments for Election Law Violations—Extraordinary Term Adjourned.

Justice Werner yesterday adjourned the Extraordinary Term of the Supreme Court until March 5. Before adjournment he sentenced Samuel Goldberger, the Tammany Captain of the Eighth Assembly District, who was convicted of "colonizing," to two years in Sing Sing Prison. Goldberger keeps a saloon at 1 Forsyth Street, and he was convicted of "colonizing" at 17 Forsyth Street. He has a wife and six children, and they were all in the court room when he was sentenced. They sat in the rear and wept bitterly. Ex-Police Justice Koch made a plea for mercy for the convicted man.

After Goldberger was sentenced several men pleaded not guilty to charges of violating the primary laws. Most of the cases grew out of the leadership fights in the Ninth and Thirty-fourth Assembly Districts. The indictments in the Ninth are:

Louis Hahn, two indictments; George F. Bagley, two indictments; C. Blair Mahoney, two indictments; James Gateley, one indictment; Henry G. Gleiston, two indictments; Peter J. Sleppers, one indictment; John C. McAdam, two cases, and Joseph F. Welch.

In the Thirty-fourth the list of indictments includes William H. Walsh, Joseph R. Corcoran, Edward Stricker, John C. Simon, Joseph F. Leddy, Michael Jackson, James T. McMahon, Harry Harper, and Henry Sauter.

SILVERITES UNMASKING.

The underlying motive of the silver movement is the desire to get something for nothing. The Brooklyn Bryan Democrats now frankly acknowledge that they would prefer dollars of paper that cost nothing at all to dollars of silver that cost 52 cents apiece. It is reported that this move is in obedience to the suggestion of Mr. BRYAN. It would certainly be in harmony with his avowed ideas, and his theatrical proclivities may have induced him to try the new game on the Kings County dog before transferring it to a larger stage.

It is noteworthy that the Brooklyn Bryanites couple their advocacy of Government paper with opposition to the banks, and especially to the issue of "money" by the banks. This is entirely natural, because it is one of the inconveniences of dealing with banks that no one can get money or money's worth from them for nothing. The banks are the custodians of a good deal of property belonging to others, and their only source of profit is the management of that property. One of the conditions of their business is that they shall be able to meet at sight all demands on them of those whose property they have in keeping. This necessity, together with an old-fashioned honesty that has been bred in them by generations of practice, makes them most unpromising victims of the plans of persons who seek their money without offering a full equivalent for it. If the Directors were chosen by popular election and the majority of their constituents were of the Bryanite way of thinking, they might find it expedient to "issue" money to please their constituents without adequate security or hope of return, as the Congress of the United States has repeatedly been asked to do and sometimes has come near doing. But even then the banks would be so promptly ruined by the operation that they would be of little real use for Bryanite purposes. The only hope of these is in the politicians. At present this is rather slim, but the Bryanites are logical in trying to make the most of it by popular agitation and otherwise.

Popular agitation is, however, discouraging because the people are steadily getting clearer and sounder ideas as to what is and what is not safe money to be paid in. A few years since, when the business and the industry of the land were in deep depression and there was an enormous amount of indebtedness outstanding, the idea of "cheap" money had a certain fascination for the unthinking. For the purpose of paying debts the cheaper it was the better it seemed to this class. But now that they are the creditors and have crops or goods or labor to be paid for, the money they want in payment is none too good when it is the very best. And it is gradually coming to be understood that of all varieties of paper money there is none better than the constantly redeemable notes of sound banks. The fundamental reason for this is that such notes are not issued except to render possible the exchange of actual values. No one can get them from the issuing bank unless he can give certain assurance that they are to be used in this way, for if they were not they would immediately return to the bank and would have to be redeemed. There is no profit in the issue of notes that have not a legitimate work to perform in the payment for goods or services, and for these purposes they can be issued only to those who have solid credit. Hence the always redeemable notes of sound banks are at once the best paper currency of good business and the worst for the gentlemen who want to get something for nothing.

THE GOLDEN RULE AT WASHINGTON.

Senator HOAR has snatched up the torch that lately fell from the hand of JONES of Toledo and is bearing it on far up the heights. But how vastly is the field of illumination enlarged! JONES concerned himself almost altogether with cities, franchises, and wage-earners. Senator HOAR's benignant counsels of perfection embrace the universal brotherhood of man with all its woes and passions.

His resolutions offered in the Senate on Wednesday will be read with varied emotions, according to the point of view of the reader. The general judgment will be that the Senator is dreaming. Some will say that he is in his dotage, a very unkind and disrespectful thing to say of a Senator from the State of Massachusetts. But really, what shall be said of a Senator of a quarter of a century's experience who asks the Senate to declare by resolution that it is a pressing obligation of this Republic "to banish illiteracy and ignorance from the land," and "to secure for every workingwoman wages enough to support a life of comfort, and an old age of leisure and quiet, as befits those who have an equal share in a self-governing State"? Why does an old age of quiet befit the citizen of a republic any more than it befits the born thrall in a despotism? Senator HOAR is not quiet. Again, what can the Federal Government do to enable great cities "to govern themselves in freedom, in honor, and in purity"?

GEORGE F. HOAR is a far wiser man than JONES of Toledo, but he mixes in his political philosophy the same Socialistic mush. He wants to give everybody everything, make everybody happy, abolish sin and suffering, and put the world under the sway of the golden rule. He takes no account of the ineradicable inequality among men. How can the Republic banish illiteracy and ignorance when a constant proportion of its citizens have a congenital and defiant inaptitude for learning? How can it secure a competence for every workman when a considerable percentage of that class, as of every other class, is incurably lazy and improvident? What is to be done to make City Governments pure? Would Mr. HOAR expel every inhabitant who was not a well of piety and learning?

Senator HOAR is simply decreeing that seven halfpenny loaves shall be sold for a penny and the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops. He would enact a law to amend the immutable laws of nature and Divine Providence.

Why did the Senator deem it necessary to put all this flimsy wrapping around the anti-imperialistic kernel of his resolutions? He offered them, of course, in order that one of these days he might have an opportunity to make a speech. We shall await with deep interest his exposition of the ethical basis of the eighth item upon his list of the obligations of this Republic, namely:

> To abstain from interfering with the freedom and just rights of other nations or peoples, and to remember that the liberty to do right necessarily involves the liberty to do wrong, and that the American people has no right to take from any other people the birthright of freedom because of a fear that they will do wrong with it.

This doctrine puts an end to the enforcement of every law against wrongdoing. It confers absolution for all the past crimes of men and nations, and licenses them for future offenses. The colonies ought not to have interfered with England's sovereign right to oppress them. We ought never to have forced the troops of NAPOLEON III. out of Mexico. The Government had no right to coerce the seceded States. And Senator HOAR has no right to deny this Administration the sovereign privilege of doing all manner of wrong in the Philippines.

More than thirty years ago Senator HOAR's party conferred the right of suffrage on the emancipated slaves, a right they were in no wise fitted to exercise, which has brought them untold misery, and which, had they not, largely through unlawful means, been restrained from exercising it, would have reduced the Southern States to a condition of unspeakable corruption and savagery. The Massachusetts Senator now insists that we shall repeat that fearful blunder with the people of the Philippine Islands. He would set these helpless beings up in the business of self-government and leave them to stand or fall, with no white population to furnish the framework of a civil structure and avert the horrors of anarchy or complete enslavement. It is a narrow policy, the cruelest policy that man could propose for the Filipinos.

MR. MCKINLEY'S BLOW TO REPUBLICAN POLICY.

According to The Sun—a very good authority on such things—Mr. MCKINLEY is regarded by his friends in Congress as having struck "a blow at the Republican policy of protection."

The bludgeon used by the President for this cruel and perfidious act is found in the reciprocity treaties which he has negotiated with various foreign powers, and especially with France and some of the South American Republics. In the French treaty he is accused of sacrificing the interests of the California winemakers, while other Californians are offended at the rates he has arranged for on the citrous fruits of the West Indies. The shepherds of Ohio are wroth with him for the concession of 20 per cent. on wool imported from the Argentine, and the tolling members of the Cattle Trust are angered by a like concession on hides in the same treaty. When the full text of the various treaties is made known this feeling of resentment at the President will doubtless be intensified. Word has already been received in Washington that the opposition in the House to the approval of these treaties will be bitter, obstinate, and thoroughly organized. The threat will probably be carried out, but we do not believe that it will be of any avail.

In the first place, Mr. MCKINLEY is not what in Ohio is known as a "tumble bug" in politics. He knows pretty well what he is doing and how it will be treated in Congress. He does not like to bring up short against any obstacle set in his path by men of his own party, and to avoid this annoyance he has the habit of providing beforehand that there shall be no obstacles that he cannot safely encounter. His recent triumph in the passage of a gold standard bill, which many of his friends regarded with undisguised disgust, is a case in point. In that instance some of us thought that he was a little slow in action, but when he did act it was plain that he had made success entirely secure. There is every reason to infer that he has done the same before he consented to put the reciprocity treaties on their way through the Senate and finally through the House.

In the next place, it must be remembered that the treaties are made in pursuance of direct authority given in the Tariff bill of 1897. Section 4 of that act practically gave the President power to arrange the details of such amendments as he thought best, within a limit of 20 per cent. reduction, to the tariff in the form of treaties, which should require only the assent of the Senate and the approval of Congress in a block to become a part of the law, thus avoiding the delays and uncertainties of the usual mode of amendment. It is true that this provision was quite inconsistent with the spirit of the act, but then the late Mr. DINGLEY was from Maine, and he had been inoculated with the belief strongly held by his former leader, Mr. BLAINE, that the sheer despotism of protection could properly be tempered by the slow assassination of reciprocity. And there were men, like Mr. ALLISON, in the Senate who also believed in this idea, though they probably realized that the assassination would not be so slow as Mr. DINGLEY may have supposed. At any rate, the forces that secured the insertion in the tariff of 1897 the reciprocity section are much stronger now than they then were, and are likely to be quite strong enough to enable the President to get his treaties through.

Nevertheless the shepherds of Ohio are right. It is a blow to the Republican policy of protection that the President has struck, and it will not be the last.

THE MILITARY SITUATION.

It is immensely to the credit of the organs of British opinion that they do not attempt to disguise from themselves or from anybody else the awful seriousness of the British situation in South Africa. The London Times has as much responsibility for that situation as any public man, and far more than any other public newspaper, because it has had the weight of an authority to which no other newspaper can pretend. Certainly it has a very large share of responsibility for the proclamation which it made, and which no other newspaper could have made with equal emphasis and assurance of being attended to, on the day after the Transvaal's ultimatum was issued. That was the proclamation that the real object of the war was not to right the wrongs of the Outlanders, but to settle, once and for all, "the question of British or Dutch supremacy in South Africa." Considering that the inhabitants of Dutch descent constitute, as Mr. BRYCE puts it, "the bulk of the white population" in South Africa, and this not only in the two Dutch Republics but in the two nominally British colonies, and that such a proclamation was to every Dutch-descended and Dutch-speaking man in South Africa a challenge, we must agree with the Journal des Débats that the proclamation was "conspicuously maladroit." Doubtless the belief thus needlessly inculcated has done very much to complicate the purely military problem.

Yet it is The London Times which now frankly owns that, "Viewing the situation as a whole, its extreme gravity is apparent." It is The London Times which expresses a desire to be rid of "the incubus of Ladysmith and Kimberley," which "still dominates the situation." One can understand how a military critic should say that. If these two towns were not threatened by the Boers, Gen. BULLER would be at liberty to revise his plans with sole reference to the immediate safety of his forces and to their efficiency after reinforcements should enable them to resume the advance. The Times goes so far as to say that if Gen. WHITE is hard pressed there is nothing for it but that "he must fight his way south at all costs." And what is true of the garrison of Ladysmith is at least as true of the garrison of Kimberley, which seems to be in even narrower straits, though it is not so numerous and thus, in a military sense, not so important. But the plain fact is that the British force now in South Africa is not competent to do anything for the relief of either beleaguered place. That is the fact which has been made clear by the successive repulses of Lord METHUEN and Sir REDVERS BULLER. That is the fact which constitutes "the extreme gravity of the situation."

The Boers have at least a month before them before any considerable accession of strength can come to their enemies. They have so much time in which to make the most of their victories. Until the reinforcements arrive time will be on the Boer side. Many persons may have wondered that the Boers have not already followed up their advantage by attacking the two beleaguered towns and garrisons. Doubtless the explanation is precisely that time is on their side, that the garrisons are every day growing weaker and they themselves relatively stronger, while the strength of the forces available for relief is a constant quantity which has been demonstrated to be insufficient. The longer the sieges are protracted, until the reinforcements are available, the better for the Boers. If they wait for the forces of famine to reinforce their own, as there is evidence that they are already doing, they may have, without the loss of a life, what would cost them terrible loss if they undertook to snatch it prematurely. If this be the correct explanation of the quiescence of the Boers, since the repulses at the Modder on one side and at the Tugela on the other, we may expect to see that quiescence prolonged until the arrival of the British reinforcements. It may be broken by some desperate sorties on the part of the garrisons which their countrymen have been forced to abandon to their fate. Or it may be relieved by the proposal of surrender from them, which would equally be an act of desperation. But there is no reason that is evident why the Boers should take the offensive for several weeks yet to come.

It is true, as The London Times declares, that Kimberley and Ladysmith constitute, or rather that the necessity of considering them constitutes, an "incubus" upon the British forces. But the British commanders do not seem to be restrained in their movements by that incubus. They are taking the best and most convenient and most defensible positions for themselves, without any reference to the beleaguered garrisons. What The Times means by "incubus" is doubtless that the British would be better off now if they had abandoned the two towns weeks ago. That is doubtless true. But it is also true that an abandonment of either or both, while there was still time to abandon them, would have been fiercely denounced all over Great Britain as a sign of weakness if not of cowardice. A confession of weakness it would undoubtedly have been, and such a confession of weakness as no Englishman would have made until it was actually forced upon him by military defeat. The two towns in question are in unquestionably British territory, and each of them is a good many miles from the border of the Transvaal, though one of them is directly on the border of the Orange Free State. And they are the most important towns on their respective borders. To abandon them to the Boers, before being compelled to abandon them, would have been a pusillanimous performance. They have come to be an "incubus," but an incubus which Great Britain had really no choice but to assume and carry until she was compelled to drop it. That they are now exposed to capture, with a very slight chance of being relieved, is a result of the general underrating of the military qualities and resources of the Boers which has prevailed in England, in spite of the experience of 1881. That is nobody's fault in particular. It is the fault of everybody in general. Scarcely any Englishman is entitled to incriminate any other with it. But the result of it is none the less a situation of which "the extreme gravity is apparent."

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—In a letter recently sent to an American friend HENRY M. STANLEY not only ascribes the British reverses in South Africa to the almost criminal lack of foresight of the Government, but expresses strong apprehension that after the costly victory has been won its fruits will not be gathered. "I am so confirmed," he writes, "in my belief that the English people are given up to sentiment, and adverse to good sense, that I expect when BULLER—as I hope to GOD he may—brings order out of disorder and KRUEGER to his senses, we shall give the fruits of our costly struggle away for the first whine that comes out of the Transvaal. Wait and see." Another passage of the letter runs: "In England we are so given to the cultivation of beautiful phrases and logic, that no one of the simple kind can hope to have simple truths listened to. Our newspaper leaders are written in such Johnsonian-Gladstonese that plain people pass them over as being 'grand,' but they are scarcely understood by the many. In admiration of the sound we have lost the sense, and the direct, simple English has no chance in these libretto days." The concluding phrase will strike some readers as a good example of the fault the writer was condemning. And, after all, perhaps, retired explorers are not the best possible judges of war and national politics. Some of them, at least, are disposed to be sourly gloomy in all their opinions.

—That the merriness of the Yuletide season is occasionally, not to say often, sickled o'er with the pale cast of the cash account is a fact that has received frequent mention and much more frequent consideration. Really novel, however, is the argument which has just been presented by a Jerseyman of true genius and courage for the purpose of bringing about a reformation and simplification of our Christmas rites. He declares with every evidence of sincere emotion that a frightful incident of every recurrence of the more or less joyous and more and more expensive day is the destruction of innumerable young trees. Come to think of it, the Jerseyman is right, at least in the contention that Christmas does every year cut off, and carry away an impressively large multitude of arboreal benefactors, and, with the growing appreciation of the injury that follows the removal of forests, it may be that his plea will produce in a few minds an effect which an indulgent smile cannot altogether express. Possibly enough he has an exaggerated idea about the amount of damage done by the purveyors of Christmas trees, but genius is always a magnifier, and that fault, like many others, must be overlooked. Anyhow, it is something, no, much, that at last those in whom this festal season inspires thoughts the reverse of enthusiastic have been supplied with a new explanation of the gloom that drapes their brows—an explanation which can be offered with a faint hope that it will delay, if not entirely exclude, the hitherto inevitable suspicion of a mean economy. Incidentally we may state that this would-be reformer of ancient customs is the same man who long ago found in the first chapter of Genesis, 29th verse, clear proof that to use trees for anything except as a source of food is a violation of divine command.

—Using as a text comments recently made in this paper on the habit, now so common among the well-to-do, of sending their children to private instead of public schools, The Topeka Capital says that the tendency is to be deplored for two reasons: "If the public schools are poor, it is unfortunate for the thousands who are obliged to attend them; if they are good, it creates class antipathies to see them attended only by the poorer people." The Capital, however, is of the opinion that this lamentable separation of American children is taking place to a notable extent only in the great cities. Nothing of the kind, it asserts, can be seen in Topeka, where, thanks to the fact that the public schools supply adequate accommodations for all who desire to attend them, and to the other fact that they are well up to modern educational methods and ideas, nobody is tempted to send his children to private institutions. If that is the case, Topeka is certainly to be congratulated and envied. It could not be said with even an approach to truth about New York. But is The Capital quite sure that the management of the Topeka schools has been kept free from the taint of politics?

—There was some excuse for despair, as well as much reason for hope, in the Havana dispatches published yesterday. On the one hand was the apparently unanimous enthusiasm with which Gen. WOOD was welcomed. It showed a most encouraging appreciation of what Cuba must be and do if she is either to deserve or receive independence, for to cheer Gen. WOOD was to abjure dishonesty and ignorance and to promise the acceptance and furtherance of all that he represents—progress, fidelity to public trusts, physical and moral cleanliness, and an awakening to the realities of the present, the possibilities of the future. In another part of the city, however, there was a scene of a different sort. Ten representatives of the Cuba that has so much to change were marched through the streets to jail, living evidence that conviction of the need for reform is still far from universal among the ambitious islanders. These ten men had been chosen, presumably with care, to serve on the Custom House staff as Chief Appraisers, and, unless their arrest was a piece of almost incredible injustice, had conspired with a group of Havana merchants to evade the revenue laws in the old Spanish style. About the worst feature of an incident that had no good ones is revealed by the report that there is hot indignation in the Union Club, an organization of much social importance to which these men belonged, because they were not allowed to go to the jail in cabs, but were conducted to it on foot. This misapprehension of where the disgrace really lay is too amusing to be pathetic and too pathetic to be amusing; it is simply disgusting. Gen. WOOD, fortunately, can be trusted to see that the case is thoroughly investigated, and that not only the Appraisers, but their accomplices among the merchants, get unmistakable proof that times are not what they were. Evidently lessons of that kind will have their uses in the aspiring island.

—Ordinarily, in a conflict between librarians and Tammany officials, it could safely be assumed off-hand that the former were right and the latter wrong, and good citizens would be in no doubt as to which side deserved support. It seriously complicates the situation, however, when the Tammany officials are seconded and the librarians opposed by Controller COLER. This at least makes it necessary for the public to wait for more light before making up its mind as to the merits of the controversy. Yet one thing can be decided at once—Sunday, of all days in the week, is the day on which libraries supported in whole or in part by the products of taxation should not be closed. If the available funds are not sufficient to permit the doors to be open all the week through, let them be shut on any other day than Sunday—until, of course, enough money can be provided to make any closing at all unnecessary.

AS TO LETTERS FROM READERS.

The numbers of letters on the South African war which THE TIMES has received from its readers is a gratifying evidence of the interest taken in the subject. As soon as space will permit those letters will be published which conform to the customary requirements. These requirements are that the real name and address of the writer accompany the communication; that the expressions used be not abusive or otherwise unfit to print; and that not too many words be employed to convey the ideas expressed or the facts adduced. A number of letters have been received which we would have cheerfully printed had they been accompanied by the correct names and addresses of the writers. We may repeat here, also, for the benefit of those who are unfamiliar with the policy of the newspaper, that it is immaterial whether or not the writers of letters agree with the views advanced in the editorial columns.

WASTING CITY WATER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I fear our good people will find it an extremely difficult matter to fill and keep full of water a tub that has a sieve for a bottom. As the city increases in population, so does the tub, and, of course, its bottom and likewise the sieve. It will therefore be an expensive job to capture eventually all the rainfall of the State and bring all the water of the State to the ocean by artificial aqueducts, instead of by way of the Hudson River. And, should it be accomplished, our people would not be healthier, happier, or cleaner, for the water wasted does no one any good except those who are interested in contracts to furnish it.

It is worth considering whether it would not be better for the city at its own expense to place a meter on every service pipe in the city and raise the salaries of the Inspectors until they were the best-paid men in the department, and thus obtain employes whose integrity, honesty, fidelity, and ability could not be questioned. At the same time reduce the price of water from $1 per 1,000 cubic feet to 65 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

The following figures are taken from the year 1897, and refer to the Manhattan and Bronx, and the term city always refers only to those two boroughs as they existed in that year.

In June, 1896, I requested Gen. Collis, Commissioner of Public Works, to have a meter placed upon the service pipe of his residence, 1,055 Fifth Avenue. On the 13th of the same month a one-inch meter was connected with the service pipe, and was read and the reading recorded at noon every Saturday until Dec. 25, 1897, a copy of which record I have before me. Before connecting the meter the Commissioner informed me that he had just had the plumbing all repaired, and there were no leaks. The first seven weeks the consumption was a little over 7,000 gallons per week. This was enormous. I sent plumbers from the bureau, and when they found and repaired the leaks the consumption fell to less than 2,250 gallons per week. For the entire year 1897, with an average of eight people living in the house, the weekly consumption was about 2,967 gallons.

This was when the plumbing was free from leaks and without any attempts to save. This gives a per capita average for the year of 19,281 gallons. The population of the city for 1897, according to the Board of Health, was 1,990,000. At the above average per capita the consumption should have been 38,369,190,000 gallons plus about 16,000,000 gallons consumed through meters and 4,380,000,000 gallons, the amount estimated by Mr. Birdsall, to be used for fires, sprinkling, public buildings, charities, &c., making in all 58,749,000,000 gallons. Mr. Birdsall says in 1897 the city consumed 243,000,000 gallons per day, or 88,695,000,000 gallons during the year.

Subtract from this the 58,749,000,000 gallons, and we find the amount of actual unnecessary waste to be 29,946,000,000 gallons, or 82,800,000 gallons per day, or more than 33⅓ per cent. of all the water furnished the city that year, which, at the present daily consumption, would show a waste of 86,600,000 gallons per day. This is conservative, because the 16,000,000,000 gallons consumed by meters furnished all the water consumed by that large portion of the population living in flats, apartment houses, and hotels, and should have been deducted from the population of the city in the above computation.

The amount of money received for water from all sources in 1897 was $4,833,549. If the 38,000,000,000 gallons plus the 16,000,000,000 gallons, above which is the actual amount necessary for the city after deducting free water, had been metered and paid for at the reduced rate of 65 cents per 1,000 cubic feet, instead of the present price of $1, the receipts would have been $4,910,337, or over $476,000 more than it actually was. This would permit the bureau to increase its expenses $58,000 a year and have enough left to pay 3 per cent. on over $14,000,000.

Of the amount of money collected in 1897, $2,438,475 was from the 16,000,000,000 gallons which passed through meters and $1,851,754 from over 68,000,000,000 gallons not metered, allowing for water not charged for. It is possible that those having meters may think this is not quite equitable.

The leaks and useless waste of water are mainly, if not almost entirely, after it enters the service pipe of the house, and not so much in the mains as it has been attempted to demonstrate. Gen. Collis's residence, I belive from my experience, is a conservative example of a great majority of the houses in the city. And besides, in places where the change has been made and all service pipes metered, the saving has actually been much larger than the above. I firmly believe that 50 per cent. waste at the present time is conservative.

Or our good people might consider the plan of allowing each dwelling house a certain amount of water free, based upon so much per capita per year, and charge for all in excess of that amount. This would not be any deprivation to the poor. Of course the rate could not be reduced as much as above suggested.

THE ARCH IN UNION SQUARE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Among the suggestions in regard to the permanent site of the Dewey arch that have been made in your paper, I have not noticed any that spoke of Union Square as a suitable one. If the arch, with its approaches, were placed in the centre of the park space with a driveway cut through from Fourteenth to Seventeenth Street, it would have an artistic setting of greenery around, a suitable space on every side, and it would not be dwarfed by any buildings near it.

It is patent to all by this time that the arch cannot remain in its present situation. Apart from the great detraction to its beauty and proportions from the close proximity of large hotels, its outlying groups of columns are exceedingly in the way of the great pressure of traffic surging about the pedestals. The protest against the intrusion of obstacles at this very crowded crossing of three different currents of travel is to be seen by the gaping rents, wounds, and abrasions of all sizes and shapes on the bases of the groups.

The injuries would be just as frequent if the obstructions were of marble instead of wood and plaster. This is a serious aspect of the case which should be well looked into before the final decision is made as to the ultimate destination of what should be a lasting and perfect adornment of our city.

RECENT DAYLIGHT ROBBERIES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Seeing an article in your to-day's issue of another robbery in broad daylight, in view of its frequency I am led to write you concerning what I think was an attempt at robbery of myself, on Park Row, about 100 feet south of your building. I had just left a café, where I get my lunch, and walked straight along from there near the gutter side of the street, intending to go to the Nassau Bank, on Beekman Street. I had not proceeded more than 100 feet when, before I knew it, a big strapping fellow stood close to my left side, and I thought he had made a mistake in the person and was about to apologize, when, to my surprise, he said, "What are you zigzagging about?"

I said I had been walking straight along, and hadn't zig-zagged and hadn't touched a person. I argued with him, but he didn't attempt any explanation of his extraordinary conduct. Just then, while we were arguing, a police officer appeared right behind us. I related the circumstances to him, but he said, "Why do you want to argue with him?" In the meantime the fellow was walking away, and I told the officer I thought he was a thief, and that he probably wanted to get into a row with me and with the aid of some confederate rob me, but the officer made no reply, nor even suggested the making of a complaint.

I believe the fellow was a thief, and I shall keep a sharp lookout for him. I merely write this, if you desire to publish it, as a warning to people to be on their guard, in view of the many recent daylight robberies in the streets and on elevated railroad stations. H. F. LIPPOLD.

PROVING THE ROBERTS CASE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Is not the action of the House of Representatives in assuming the burden of proof in the Roberts case an error? Mr. Roberts refuses to admit or deny anything, but stands on what he calls his Constitutional rights, and leaves the committee to prove their case, as if they were conducting a criminal prosecution, and the committee submits to his dictation and undertakes to do so. Is this right?

Our law carefully protects every individual in the enjoyment of his rights to life and liberty. One accused of crime is presumed to be innocent until proved guilty. He cannot be punished until his guilt has been judicially established by competent evidence and beyond reasonable doubt. But clearly this has no application to the Roberts case. He is not on trial. This proceeding does not aim to deprive him of any natural right. It does not present a case in which the law throws around the accused the aegis of its protection.

On the contrary, Roberts is himself the mover. He demands admittance to a constituted assembly of our lawmakers, and the burden of proof lies upon him to establish his right to such admittance. As in the case of every other Representative, this right is challenged at the outset. He accepts this challenge, and meets it by producing the certificate of his election in due form, under the seal of his State and bearing the signatures of the proper State officers. His right is then challenged again on the ground that he is a lawbreaker, by living in concubinage, in violation of the Constitution and law of Utah, and of the solemn compact made by the Territory of Utah and binding upon all her citizens, with the United States, as a condition precedent to her admission to the Union as a State.

This challenge also he must meet. He can do this in either of two ways. He may contend that such act does not disqualify him—or, either waiving or reserving this contention, he may deny the truth of the charge. Then, as in the first case, the burden of proof rests upon him. It is his business to make his denial good, just as it was his business to file the certificate of his election. The facts are necessarily within his knowledge. If he is innocent, it is his duty to place the facts establishing his innocence fully before the House, to verify them by his solemn oath, and to submit to whatever examination the House may direct, with a view to unearthing any deception, and his refusal to do this must be taken as an admission of guilt. His demand that the committee shall prove the truth of the charge or else that he be admitted to his seat would seem to be one that cannot be sustained.

Rules for Democratic Success.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Please grant space for the views of a veteran Democrat. First, an ardent prayer that Mr. Bryan be not the Presidential nominee, since defeat would be as sure as the succession of the seasons; second, absolute free trade, as free as inter-State; third, one standard, gold, wherewith to measure values; fourth, maintenance of the National bank system; fifth, a just reform of the pension laws; sixth, enlargement of the National domain, by peaceable acquisition. These are radical views, but their adoption, besides other necessary declarations fathered by the party, would advance it well on the way to success.

THE FIRST YEAR.

From The Chicago Record.

The year is nearly gone, my child—
Your only year, or, rather,
Four months have passed since first you smiled
Upon your blushing father.
The nurse scoffs at my unctuous claim
That you in infant frolic
Grinned at your dad; she vows that same
Grin meant a touch of colic.

When babes are new, so I am told,
Life bores them out of measure;
I know some "babies" gray and old
Who don't find life all pleasure.
You were a solemn little chap
When we became acquainted;
I dubbed you saint and watched you nap—
You're not as fair as painted.

What lonely nights we walked the floor!
'Twas I did all the walking.
And how you bawled! and how I swore—
And set the neighbors talking!
No doubt your voice will ring, some day,
Full elojuent and pure;
But don't be so ambitious, pray,
While yet so immature.

Still, darling infant, you are fair,
Though ofttimes passing doleful;
You look a cherub lying there,
With eyes so big and soulful.
If chance we spank your nether parts
And often seem to flout you—
Why, brightest jewel of our hearts,
We couldn't do without you!

GERMAN PRESS AND POLITICS.

Prussian Ministers for the First Time Reply Through Newspapers to Attacks Made Upon Them.

BERLIN, Dec. 21.—The sharp attacks made of late upon imperial and Prussian Ministers seem to be bringing about a change in political customs, as the Ministers are replying through the newspapers to their assailants. Only a few days ago Dr. von Miquel answered, over his own signature, the charge that he was the Prussian Minister responsible for the dismissal of the Landrathe, who had voted against the Canal bill. To-day's sensation is Prince Hohenlohe's reply to his critics through a semi-official article in the Norddeutsche Allegemeine Zeitung. This is interpreted as showing that very dark intrigues are brewing behind the scenes if such extraordinary steps are necessary.

The Imperial Chancellor's article has not satisfied the press. The Agrarian organs especially declare that the writer has not rendered a service to Prince Hohenlohe. The Kreuz Zeitung commends the calm tone of the article, but does not comment further. The Liberals are vexed because the Chancellor has minimized his liberalism in order to appease the Conservatives.

All signs indicate a sharp fight in the Prussian Diet, which assembles Jan. 9, against Prince Hohenlohe, whom the Conservatives are determined to oust. Count Hohenthal, a member of the Prussian House of Lords, writes to the Kreuz Zeitung indicating the intention of the Conservatives to bring up the question of the constitutionality of disciplining Government officials who voted against the Canal bill.

The Centrist organs charge the Conservatives with hypocrisy in attacking Prince Hohenlohe, inasmuch as they know that the disciplining—so the Centrist organs assert—was Emperor William's personal act.

The Agrarians are becoming more outspoken than ever against the Government in demanding increased protection for agricultural products. An Agrarian organ serves formal notice to-day upon the manufacturers in the following terms:

"We shall not let industry march over our dead bodies. If the agrarian duties are not to be increased, then we shall demand free trade in manufactured articles."

HAITIANS FEAR GERMANY.

Arrival of a Warship at Port au Prince Causes Alarm—The United States May Be Appealed To.

PORT AU PRINCE, Dec. 8.—The German warship Nixe entered this port yesterday, coming from Puerto Plata, in the neighboring republic of Santo Domingo. The Nixe, which has a crew of 350 sailors and marines, mounts seventeen guns, and is commanded by Capt. von Basse, saluted the Haitian flag. The salute was returned by the forts of St. Clair and Crete-a-Pierrot.

The arrival of the Nixe caused general commotion among the population, owing to the fact that it occurred on the day before the anniversary of the threatened bombardment of Port au Prince by the Germans two years ago, at the time of the Luders affair, and the people feared that the Nixe had been sent here to enforce the immediate settlement of another dispute, in which a German resident of this city named Tippenhauer is interested.

It is quite possible that the unexpected arrival of the foreign warship has no relation to the dispute in question, which is purely a civil lawsuit between Tippenhauer and a man named Reimens. But, according to the suppositions freely expressed by Haitian patriots since the anchoring of the Nixe, it may result eventually in an international question of the most important character. They recall the fact that the claim, or "reclamation," presented some time ago by the German Minister, Dr. Michahelles, apropos of the refusal of the civil tribunal of Port au Prince to pronounce a sentence in the Tippenhauer-Reimens affair, is still pending. Dr. Michahelles, it is said, maintains that the Tribunal had no right to declare itself incompenent, and he asserts that if Haitian Judges refuse to occupy themselves with the affairs of parties amenable to their jurisdiction, a kind of special court should be established at the Legation to pronounce upon lawsuits which may hereafter originate between subjects of Germany residing in Haiti.

It is pointed out, however, that such action would result in reducing the country to the system of the famous "capitulations," as practiced in the Levant and other parts of the Ottoman Empire, and, it is further asserted, this would also be imposing a humiliation upon the republic, which, it is declared, is numbered among the civilized nations, and which has proved itself to be worthy of occupying its rank among them. It would, the patriots declare, amount as well to a judicial violation of the Monroe doctrine, about which, they confidently add, the United States would surely have something to say. They recall the numerous evidences of friendly feeling given to them by the latter country, and also the frequent proofs of deference that Haiti has shown toward America, notably last Summer, when the Government of President Sam granted the request of United States Minister Powell for magnanimous treatment of some Haitian conspirators.

The principal reason which has caused the people of Port-au-Prince to connect the arrival of the Nixe with the case of Tippenhauer, who has been employed as a civil engineer by the Government of Haiti, is the remembrance of his attitude at the time of the Luders affair. This was a case of greater importance than the present one, with which the Executive power of the republic has nothing to do. Luders was imprisoned for several days, in spite of the demand of Count Schwerin, the then German Minister at Port-au-Prince, without being brought to court. Finally two schooleships of the German Navy, which were cruising in West Indian waters, received orders to proceed to Haiti. When Commandant Thiele dropped anchor in the harbor of Port-au-Prince, Dec. 6, 1897, the whole population became extremely agitated, fearing disastrous consequences. An ultimatum was sent to the Haitian authorities with the notification that only a few hours would be granted to the Government for its acceptance, and the German guns were trained on the city. At 1 P. M., when the time limit expired, and when everybody expected to hear the alarm gun, the signal of resistance, the two colored flags of Haiti flying on the mast surmounting the National palace were seen to be replaced by the white flag of surrender. Complete satisfaction was given to the Germans, and an indemnity was paid to Luders.

The surrender was due, in great part, to the entreaties of the foreign Ministers. But though it was honorable, resistance being practically impossible, Haitian patriots have not forgotten that "Black Day" of December. This is why they consider that it is to cow them and compel an instant settlement of the Tippenhauer case that the Nixe has arrived, with her seventeen guns, at their capital, on the anniversary of that memorable day in 1897.

The Wheat Harvest in Victoria.

MELBOURNE, Dec. 21.—The Argus of this city publishes a forecast of the wheat harvest of this colony in which it says that the average yield is 9.37 bushels an acre, and that the exportable surplus is 13,000,000 bushels.

In 1898 the produce of wheat an acre in Victoria was 6.38 bushels; in 1897, 4.49 bushels; in 1896, 4.01 bushels; in 1895, 8.38 bushels, and in 1894, 10.38 bushels.

Good Cereal Crop in Russia.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 21.—The Central Agricultural Bureau has published a report showing an increase of 20 per cent. in Winter cereals over 1898, and an increase of 17 per cent. upon the average of the last five years.

Minister Straus Coming Here.

Special to The New York Times.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 21.—United States Minister Straus, taking advantage of a short leave of absence, left here yesterday for Italy. He expects to remain some time in Florence and Rome, and to sail Feb. 3 on the Columbia for New York. The Columbia is due to arrive at that port Feb. 13.

Guatemalan Revolt a Failure.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—The attempt at revolution in Guatemala has come to an end according to advices to the State Department from United States Minister Hunter. He cables that on Dec. 14 the rebels seized the town of Tacona, near the Mexican boundary. The Government troops soon surrounded the place and captured

GEN. WOOD TAKES OFFICE

CUBANS WELCOME HIS REGIME

Belief Expressed that No New Governor Will Be Appointed for the Province of Santiago—Other Changes.

HAVANA, Dec. 21.—Major Gen. Wood formally took charge of the Governor General's offices at 9 o'clock this morning. His first act was to accept the resignation of the members of the Advisory Cabinet of Gen. Brooke. These officials, after considering the question overnight, had decided to insist upon retiring. Their decision meets with public approval. Almost without exception they had rendered themselves particularly obnoxious to a majority of the Cubans.

One prominent Cuban General said to-day: "The only chance Gen. Brooke's secretaries have, if they wish to rehabilitate themselves in the eyes of their countrymen, is to resign and thus, for a time, bring forgetfulness."

The same General, discussing Gen. Brooke's farewell proclamation, said:

"The proclamation was ill-advised. Cuba is bound, in the course of time, with food and without war, to arrive at a state of comparative comfort. No man has a right to regard himself as the sole cause of such improvements. As a matter of fact, under Gen. Brooke's administration the military authorities frequently overrode the civil, and there is less civil government now than before. As for the courts, they are the same corrupt organizations, and are virtually unchanged in any important particular. All this, in my opinion, most Cubans will attribute to the bad advice given Gen. Brooke by his secretaries."

The Lucha, contrasting Gen. Brooke's withdrawal with Gen. Wood's advent, says: "Gen. Brooke's proclamation was unfortunate, as it contained errors. Gen. Wood, although promising nothing, speaks volumes by his quiet, democratic manner of taking charge of affairs. He has captivated every one."

Gen. Chaffee is receiving numerous congratulations upon his appointment to the rank of Brigadier General in the regular army. It is believed here that the post of Chief of Staff will be abolished, and that Gen. Chaffee will succeed Gen. Wilson as Governor of the Department of Matanzas-Santa Clara, or will remain in the Department of Havana-Pinar del Rio, Gen. Ludlow succeeding Gen. Wilson.

It is also believed that no Governor will be appointed for the Santiago Department, but that an experiment in civil Government on a much broader scale than ever before will be initiated there, Governor General Wood having supervision of the experiment from Havana.

Gen. Wood this afternoon visited the prison and the penitentiary, and seemed much interested, although he declined to comment upon the experience. He was accompanied by Gen. Ludlow and Gen. Chaffee.

INSTRUCTIONS TO GEN. BROOKE.

He May Remain for a Time in the South for His Health.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—When Major Gen. Brooke was relieved from duty in command of the Division of Cuba, he was instructed to proceed to Washington and report to the Adjutant General for further orders of the Secretary of War. As a result of correspondence between Gen. Brooke and Secretary Root, the former has been authorized to suit his own convenience in the execution of his orders, the idea being to allow him to make the trip from Havana to Washington by easy stages.

Gen. Brooke has been in a tropical climate for nearly two years, and as he is nearly sixty-four years old it has been deemed best for the protection of his health to permit him to accustom himself gradually to the Winter climate of this country by short stops before coming to Washington. It is therefore likely that he will not reach this city much before Feb. 1.

It is said at the War Department that Gen. Brooke's future assignment to duty will depend mainly upon his own wishes. He can have his old command, the Department of the Lakes, at Chicago, if he wishes it. That command will become vacant next month by the retirement of Gen. Anderson, the incumbent.

DEATH OF JEAN LAMOUREUX.

Celebrated Musical Director Succumbs to Sudden Illness.

PARIS, Dec. 21.—M. Jean Lamoureux, the celebrated musical conductor, died to-day after a two days' illness.

Lamoureux was born in Bordeaux of poor parents in 1834, and at the age of twelve played the violin at the Grand Theatre in that city. Two years later he went to Paris and studied under Girard and Chauvet at the Conservatoire. Afterward he became one of the orchestra at the Church of La Trinite, and in 1854 gained the first prize at the Conservatoire for violin playing.

Until 1872 Lamoureaux was the second chef d'orchestre at the Conservatoire concerts, and also played in a string quartet with Colonne, Adam, and Reignault. In 1873 he organized the Société de l'Harmonie Sacrée, and in 1875 this oratorio society performed the "Messiah" for the first time in Paris, also giving performances of other oratorios of Handel and Bach. In 1876 Lamoureux was appointed assistant director of the Paris Grand Opera, and from 1878 to 1881 he was director.

The Lamoureux Orchestra was founded in 1881, the year following that in which its organizer was made a Knight of the Legion of Honor. The concerts created a furore in Paris, and, indeed, became famous throughout the musical world. The director first to introduce Wagner in Paris in 1887, but, in spite of the fame of his orchestra, the attempt was an utter failure. However, he tried and tried again, and in 1891 the grudging French people admitted that Wagner was a great composer. In 1896 and 1897 Lamoureux and his orchestra visited London, scoring tremendous successes each time. In the former year he gave up the direction of the orchestra in Paris.

CLEAR OF MURDER, NEGRO SANG.

George Washington Johnson, the "Whistling Coon," was acquitted yesterday on the charge of murder, which had been brought against him in Part IV. of General Sessions. At the announcement of the verdict there was a demonstration of joy in the court, which was suppressed with difficulty. Several persons ran up to Johnson and grasped him by the hand, and he was taken away singing and whistling by a party of friends to dinner at a hotel.

Johnson was accused of murdering his common-law wife, Ruskin Stewart, on Oct. 12. When his counsel applied for a dismissal of the case, Assistant District Attorney Cowan said that he abandoned it, and Judge Newburger directed the jury to acquit the prisoner.

The courtroom was crowded by friends of the "Whistling Coon." The expenses of his defense were paid by a subscription started by Victor Emerson of a phonograph company, by which Johnson had been employed.

MRS. ASTOR'S DINNER.

Mrs. Astor gave last evening at her residence, 842 Fifth Avenue, her first large formal dinner of the season. The dinner was served with all the elaborateness and attention to detail which marks a dinner given in the Astor mansion. The service of gold plate was used, and the decorations of the table were entirely of American Beauty roses, and clusters of these flowers were placed in the vases in the drawing rooms and hall.

The guests were Col. John Jacob Astor and Mrs. Astor, Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, Mr. and Mrs. George L. Rives, Col. William Jay and Mrs. Jay, Mr. and Mrs. D. Ogden Mills, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Drexel, Mr. and Mrs. John Monroe of Paris, Gen. Lloyd Bryce and Mrs. Bryce, Mrs. George Henry Warren, Jr., Mrs. d'Hauteville, Mrs. Charles Marshall, Miss Alice Blight, Miss Anna Sands, and Messrs. J. R. Roosevelt, Morton, J. F. D. Lanier, A. de Navarro, Elliot Gregory, Baron Oppenheim, and Comte de Kergolay.

Mrs. Astor will give another dinner in about a fortnight from now and will probably give her annual ball during the last week in January or the first week in February.

THE MUSICAL ART SOCIETY.

First Concert of the Season at Carnegie Hall Last Night.

The Musical Art Society gave the first concert of its seventh season at Carnegie Hall last night. The entertainments of this organization have a strong social backing which makes their pecuniary success a matter beyond doubt. Their artistic character has long been an established fact, and one goes to these concerts with the expectation that he will there hear music to which he can listen with more than ordinary satisfaction. The mission of the society in the preservation of a public knowledge of the best works of the early church composers is one that commands the hearty sympathy of those who have the best interests of music at heart, and it is perhaps due to this that the concerts have the support of the truly musical, as well as of those to whom music is a mere diversion.

The purity of sacred music was never in greater danger than it is now, and the Roman Church is in the midst of one of its periodical battles against the pernicious influence of the meretricious and flimsy stuff which music publishers pour out and which even some great composers have not hesitated to write. Few people are in the way of hearing what church music of the highest type can be, and the concerts of the Musical Art Society, while they are not devoted entirely to the performance of this sort of music, afford the only opportunities that the general hearer obtains for hearing the masterpieces of the writers of the pure church compositions. Last night's concert was not so generous in its presentation of this kind of music as the sincerest well wishers of the society would have liked to see it. There was too much of the modern, too much of the mere song, and a good deal too much of the soloist.

No doubt this was all very entertaining to the public, but it was aside from the high and beautiful purpose for which the society was founded. It would be a thousand pities were the Musical Art Society to develop into were the Musical Art Society to develop into a simple body of part singers, a madrigal and glee club. The fruitful field of the old church music is not yet exhausted. However, it may be said that the programme of the second concert, which is announced, contains more of the music of the richest period of the Roman Church, and, therefore, we may possess our souls in patience.

The programme last night was as follows: A short mass by Palestrina, the old hymn, "Adeste Fideles," arranged by Henry Holden Huss; Verdi's "Ave Maria," three songs for solo voice, by Brahms; four German folk songs for solo and chorus, by Walter Damrosch's two motets on Elizabeth Browning's "The Virgin Mary and the Child Jesus," Peter Cornelius's "Trost in Thranen," and "Wings of a Dove," and "Hey, Nonino," by Howard Brockway. The solo singer was Mr. David Bispham. The Verdi composition is one of the productions of the old age of the Italian master. It would probably amaze some of the operagoers who never hear any other music but that sung in the Metropolitan. It is not at all like the master's operatic writing, but is the product of his intense admiration for Palestrina.

The composition is founded upon a curious scale, which the composer calls "Scala Enigmatica," and which is used as a cantus firmus for a piece of masterly counterpoint. Each of the four voices intones the scale in turn, starting with the bass, while the other three weave around it a web of wonderfully beautiful harmonies. The general result is a fine embodiment of religious feeling in the style of the Palestrina period. It is a genuine delight to hear such music as this and from the pen of one whom the world takes pleasure in honoring for the production of matter of a far different sort. The arrangement of the "Adeste Fideles" proved to be one of those musicianly things which Mr. Huss does so often. His employment of modern and medieval harmonies in contrast to one another was admirable both in conception and in effect. The arrangement was heartily applauded, as it deserved to be.

The shoot mass of Palestrina is not one of its composer's most striking works, and it suffered last night from an uncertainty of intonation which is indeed rare in the singing of the Musical Art Choir. Mr. Bispham, not to be outdone by the choral body, sang off the key in the first of his Brahms songs, a composition well fitted to test the accuracy of one's ear. He was more happy in the delivery of the folk songs, which are in a style thoroughly congenial to him. Mr. Damrosch's motets were produced by him at a concert of his own works last Spring, and were then sufficiently discussed in this place.

OPERA FOR TO-NIGHT CHANGED.

"Tannhauser" Gives Way to "Le Nosse di Figaro."

The colds contracted in Boston by some of Maurice Grau's artists make it impossible for the sufferers to assume roles in operas in which they have been announced to appear. The victims are M. Van Dyck, Mlle. Ternina, and M. Dippel. As a result of their indisposition Mr. Grau has been compelled to withdraw the opera of "Tannhauser," announced for to-night, and substitute "Le Nozze di Figaro."

In the opera to be presented Mme. Eames, Clementine de Vere, Zelie de Lussan, MM. Edouard de Reszke, Pringle, Dufriche, Vanni, Maestri, and Campanari will sing the principal roles.

At the performance of "Faust" to be given to-morrow afternoon M. Plancon will sing Mephistopheles in place of Edouard de Reszke.

Boston Theatre for a Music Hall.

Hurtig & Seamon, theatrical managers, have leased the Columbia Theatre in Boston, which was recently given up by George W. Lederer, and will open a music hall attraction Jan. 15. They have the only music hall license granted in Boston and announce that they will present first-class attractions. The house will be known as the New Columbia Music Hall. Among the stars engaged for the opening are Fay Templeton, Minnie Seligman, and Pauline Hall.

Mansfield Revives "Prince Karl."

At the Garden Theatre last night Mr. Richard Mansfield presented a revival of A. G. Gunter's comedy, "Prince Karl." From the manner in which the play was received last evening it still retains no small proportion of its former popularity. Mr. Mansfield's performance of Karl von Arhmein possessed all of its old-time charm. To-night Octave Feuillet's drama, "A Parisian Romance," will be given.

The Pope's Pictures for a Charity.

Arrangements have been completed by J. Wesley Rosenquest and George H. Brennan for exhibitions of the moving pictures of His Holiness, Pope Leo XIII., at the Fourteenth Street Theatre on Sunday afternoon and evening, Dec. 31. These are the original pictures which were taken at the Vatican, and the two exhibitoins will be in aid of a Catholic Church charity.

A DAY'S WEDDINGS.

Pearsall—Rossiter.

Miss Anna Belle Rossiter and Richard Franklin Pearsall of the old Long Island family of Pearsalls were married at noon yesterday in St. Ann's Church, on the Heights, Brooklyn. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Reese F. Alsop, rector of the church. The bride wore a traveling costume of castor-colored broadcloth, with trimming of white satin.

Thirty Locomotives for the Reading.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 21.—The officials of the Philadelphia and Reading Railway Company to-day announced that the company has placed with the Baldwin Locomotive Company of this city an order for the building of thirty locomotives. The engines are to be delivered in the Spring and early Summer. The orders call for ten heavy freight, ten fast freight, and ten heavy passenger locomotives.

Pay of Employes Increased.

At a meeting of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company's Directors on Tuesday a graded system of advance in wages of employes was decided upon whereby men who have been in the employ of the company for a fixed time will receive a small per diem increase. This will be further increased as the term of service lengthens.

Deroulede No Longer a Deputy.

PARIS, Dec. 21.—The Minister of Justice, M. Monis, to-day formally notified M. Deschanel, President of the Chamber of Deputies, of the condemnation yesterday of M. Déroulède to two years' imprisonment on the charge of libeling Senators. M. Déroulède's seat in the Chamber of Deputies is thus made vacant.

Lipton Now a Commodore.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—Sir Thomas Lipton has been unanimously elected Rear Commodore of the Royal Ulster Yacht Club.

Albany Line Steamers End Trips.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The fine weather of yesterday was hailed with delight by the Christmas shoppers, who, with the festival now so near at hand, find the time all too short for their purchases. The Avenue was less crowded than usual on a fine early Winter day for the reason that society itself had gone shopping and could be found on Sixth Avenue, Broadway, and the east and west side shopping streets. West Twenty-third Street, in particular, was a jam of handsome carriages all the afternoon, and as darkness came on earlier than it will again for another year, yesterday being the shortest day of the year, the crowd and confusion in this and the adjacent shopping streets from 5 to 7 o'clock was very great.

***

The guests of Mr. and Mrs. George Gould at their house party and entertainment at Lakewood, the story of which is told in another column, went on a special train on the Jersey Central Road at early afternoon, and the presence of so many handsome carriages down town taking these guests to the ferry made something of an excitement. The festivities at Georgian Court did not close with last night's theatricals, but will be continued to-day and to-morrow, and the theatricals of last night will be repeated this evening. To-day, if the weather is good, will be devoted by Mr. and Mrs. Gould and their guests to outdoor sports, riding, driving, and golfing, and the swimming pool and racquet courts of the new Casino will be tried by the men guests.

***

This Gould house party is a significant event to New York society. It means that the Gould family are at last accepted by the socially "elect." It is now some four or five years since Mr. and Mrs. George Gould, under the favoring wing of the late Mrs. Paran Stevens, made their first entrée into fashionable New York social life. Soon after occurred the marriage of Miss Anna Gould to the Count Castellane, and it was then thought that Mr. and Mrs. Gould would be accepted by the leaders. Mrs. Stevens' death the next year, and the seeming lack of desire on the part of Mr. and Mrs. Gould to take advantage of the introduction they had gained, followed by their virtual retirement from New York to Lakewood, which was influenced by the heavy taxation to which Mr. Gould was subjected in this city, seemed to have brought their social career, as far as New York was concerned, to a termination. There were symptoms last Summer, of a renewed inclination on the part of Mrs. Gould at least, to take up her place in fashable society where she had left it some years ago. With the curious conditions under which the Winter season opened, the mourning of the Vanderbilts, Goelets, and other prominent families, the gradual retirement of Mrs. Astor, Sr., from society, and the announced departure of Mrs. Astor, Jr., for Europe soon after the New Year, the rumor spread, as was natural from the times being propitious, that this was to be a Gould Winter. The ultra-fashionable set, ever eager for novelty, and to welcome new and wealthy entertainers, hoped and prayed that this rumor might be correct.

Mrs. Gould, however, appeared only once at the Horse Show, the Edwin Goulds were absent from the Garden on account of the illness of a child, and the Howard Goulds have as yet made no effort looking toward fashionable recognition. Suddenly appeared the announcement of last night's entertainment at Georgian Court, Lakewood—the invitations sent out by Mr. and Mrs. Gould, mostly to members of the very smart set, were eagerly accepted, and the story in another column of last night's affair tells how finally New York society went to the Goulds and has placed them among its leaders. It is an interesting and significant chapter in New York's social annals.

Dr. Octavius A. White and Mrs. White (Miss Chanler) have issued invitations for two young people's dances to be given at their residence, 1,011 Madison Avenue. The first of these dances, which will take place on Saturday, Dec. 30, will be given to the Misses Alexandra Helen and Elizabeth Winthrop Stevens, their two youngest grandchildren, and the guests will be children of their own age, from twelve to fourteen years. The second dance will be given on New Year's evening, Jan. 1, and will be for Dr. and Mrs. White's eldest granddaughter, Miss Helen White Stevens, whose mother, formerly Miss Helen Stevens, is now Mrs. Berkeley Mostyn. Miss Stevens will make her début next year, and her guests on New Year's evening will be young men and women of her own age who are also to come out next year. The parents of many of the young people invited to these dances, and also many other New Yorkers of middle age, recall as if it were yesterday the dances and dinners which marked the débuts of Mrs. Ledyard Stevens and Mrs. Mostyn, who were the Misses Bettina and Helen White, and the open-handed hospitality which Dr. White and Mrs. White dispensed in those days in their old home, 222 Second Avenue, only then passing as a fashionable locality.

Mr. Antonio de Navarro, who married Miss Mary Anderson, arrived yesterday on the Teutonic. He expects to remain here over the holidays at the residence of his father, Mr. Joseph de Navarro, 13 West Forty-sixth Street. Mr. de Navarro, it is said, will combine business with pleasure during his brief stay here.

The first of the Cinderella dances, which should not be confounded with the dances known as "Les Cendrillons," the latter being managed and patronized by others than those connected with the former dances, took place at Sherry's last night. Mrs. Cadwallader Jones, Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, Mrs. Henry E. Howland, and Mrs. Beverly Robinson received the guests, who for the most part were the younger men and women in society. The cotillion was led by Mr. Alexander Hadden, dancing with Miss Mildred Stokes. The guests began to arrive about 9 o'clock and the dance, according to its name, closed at midnight. The patronesses of the Cinderella dances, most of whom were present last night, are Mesdames Charles T. Barney, John S. Barnes, Charles C. Beaman, Prescott Hall Butler, Frances H. Cabot, George C. Clark, R. James Cross, Eugene Delano, Frederic J. de Peyster Henry A. Du Pont, James Clifton Edgar, Walter F. Gurnee, Jr., J. Montgomery Hare, Henry E. Howland, Alfred H. Hoyt, Henry R. Hoyt, Brayton Ives, Cadwallader Jones, Jacob W. Miller, J. Pierpont Morgan, Junius L. Morgan, John G. Neeser, Alfred Pell, Charles Phelps, Nathaniel Thayer Robb, Julian W. Robbins, Philip J. Sands, Anson Phelps Stokes, James A. Scrymser, J. Kennedy Tod, Stephen Van Rensselaer, and Stanford White. Among the dancers were the Misses Gurnee, Edith and Julia Clark, Pauline Robinson, the Misses Sands, Miss Charlotte Barnes, the Misses Miller, the Misses Delafield, the Misses de Peyster, Miss Ives, Miss Morgan, the Misses Neeser, Miss Pell, Miss Parsons, Miss Du Pont, Miss Jones, Miss Barney, Miss Beaman, the Misses Bowers, Miss Robb, Miss Ethel Stebbins, Miss Grace Henop, Miss Butler, the Misses Peabody, Miss Huntington, and Messrs. Atterbury, Barnes, Montgomery, Hare, Neeser, Robb, Sands, Stokes, Benkard, Goelet, Gallatin, de Peyster, Robbins, Satterlee, and Stokes.

To-day has the smallest social calendar for three weeks past, and there is really nothing going on, with the exception of a few dinners and some "at homes," and of course the opera, where "Tannhauser" will be sung, and where several well-known women who have not appeared will make, as it were, their first operatic débuts. The dullness of to-day is due to the nearness of Christmas, for people are too much occupied in arranging for their Christmas festivities and securing their gifts to have any time for ordinary social entertainment. The theatres, as usual, are suffering, and only the opera, which as yet is a novelty, seems to have sufficient influence to take the members of the gay world away from their Christmas preparations. To-morrow for the first time in weeks past there will be no coming out receptions, and the day will be devoted to preparations for Christmas.

READS POLITICIANS' MINDS.

Friend of Register Fromme Visits the Democratic Club and Mystifies the Members.

If there is one thing more than another that a member of the Democratic Club cares to guard from his fellow-clubmen, it is what is going on in his mind, for no matter what he may think, no matter how disappointed he may feel at not having an office, he wears a happy smile and outwardly shows no traces of despondency. Up to Wednesday every member felt that he could safely think what he wanted, so long as he did not express his thoughts in words, but that confidence is gone now, and all because of Register Fromme's latest fad, telepathy.

The Register has a friend—he is not a professional seer—who is a mind reader, and on Wednesday night he took him to the club. One of the members, a city employe, who has always been a skeptic, was sitting in the parlor trying to think of suitable Christmas presents for the members of his household when Register Fromme and his friend Mr. Reese appeared.

Then began an exhibition that made the city employe's rather sparse hair stand on end. The Register's friend told him what he had in mind; told him he intended to give his son an order for a suit; told him the date of his birth, the street in which he was born, and how much money he had in his pocket. The last revelation was a poser, and the city employe soon had Park Commissioner Clausen, Deputy City Clerk Nicholas Hayes, Edward Carroll, D. A. Newmark of Chicago, Commissioner of Corrections Lantry, and a number of others before the mind reader.

Commissioner Clausen was told to go into another room and write down the date of his birth, his birthplace, his mother's name, the place where he began work, and half a dozen other things. He was also told to write two questions. He did as directed and then returned to the room. Mr. Fromme's friend immediately pointed to his left trousers' pocket and said: "You have there the question, 'What is the next vessel to leave Manila?' And in the top vest pocket you have a slip of paper bearing the date of your birth, which is '——.'"

The answers were correct, and Commissioner Clausen, who had at first ridiculed the idea, looked puzzled. He declared that there was some trick, and suggested that his pedigree was well known and could easily have been memorized, but when he was asked to explain how the question about the vessel leaving Manila could have been divined, he became thoughtful and walked away.

Mr. Hayes, when called upon to go through the seance, said that he had seen enough and refused positively to have anything to do with the mind reader. At least a dozen members were before the mind reader, but Andrew Freedman, John F. Carroll, Corporation Counsel Whalen, and Charities Commissioner Keller, who have thoughts that they care to keep to themselves, kept out of Mr. Reese's way.

MAN AND CRAFT BURNED.

Big Fire on the River Front—The Niagara Moored Near.

Two thousand bales of hay, two thousand bales of straw, two barges, and a lighter were burned at an early hour yesterday morning at the foot of West Thirty-fourth Street, and Robert Tierman, a homeless man who slept on the Harvest Queen, one of the barges, was burned.

The fire started on board the Harvest Queen, owned by Slingland & Co. of Coeyman's, and the flames from the hay on board this barge spread rapidly to the straw on the barge Andrew M. Church, owned at Esperance, N. Y., and to the lighter, W. E. Smallman, loaded with lumber, and also owned by Slingland & Co. All three boats were sunk after their cargoes had been destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $25,000.

Patrolman McDonald of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station discovered the fire on the Harvest Queen and blew his whistle as loud as possible, waking up Capt. Joseph B. Feine and his wife and daughter, who were sleeping on board the barge. The whistle also awoke Capt. Gus Hackenham and his hands on the Andrew M. Church. It was supposed that everybody on board both boats escaped, but Tierman was stowed away on a bale of hay and did not hear the warning whistle of the policeman.

A fireboat and several engines responded to an alarm turned in by the policeman and the flames were kept away from many surrounding craft.

Howard Gould's yacht Niagara, which was lying near the scene of the fire, prepared to steam out into the river, but on account of the quick work of the firemen in preventing the spreading of the flames in her direction this was unnecessary.

COL. GILLMORE APPOINTED.

Named Department Commander of Spanish-American War Veterans.

LANCASTER, Penn., Dec. 21.—Gen. W. J. Hulings, Commander in Chief of the Spanish-American War Veterans, to-day announced the appointment of Col. Quincy O'M. Gillmore of Trenton, N. J., as Commander of the Department of New Jersey.

Col. Gillmore, who is a graduate of West Point and a retired United States Army officer, commanded the Fourth New Jersey Volunteers during the Spanish-American war and is widely known in army circles. He is at present Military Instructor at Rutgers College, New Brunswick, and Colonel of the Second Regiment, National Guard of New Jersey.

Col. Gillmore will announce his staff in a few days.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Lieut. Col. D. L. Huntington.

Lieut. Col. David L. Huntington, United States Army, retired, died in Rome, Italy, on Wednesday. He was born in Charleston, Mass., in 1834, and served for thirty-six years continuously in the army. He was a graduate of Yale, class of '55, and later at the University of Pennsylvania received his medical education.

At the beginning of the civil war he was appointed Assistant Surgeon in the regular army and assigned to various places in the West. Later he became Medical Officer on Gen. Grant's staff. He was Medical Director of the Army of the Tennessee, and accompanied Sherman on the march from Atlanta to the sea.

At the close of the war he saw service in the West at different forts, and fought in different engagements with the Indians. In 1870 he was put in charge of the hospital connected with the Soldiers' Home in Washington, and for some time acted in the capacity of Assistant Surgeon General and Acting Surgeon General of the army in that city.

For some years prior to his retirement he was in charge of the Medical Museum in Washington, and edited The Medical Record of the War. He was a delegate to the International Medical Convention held at Moscow, Russia, in 1897, and, after his return to the United States, he was placed on the retired list April 10, 1898. Since that time Lieut. Col. Huntington has lived abroad. He leaves a wife, one son, and one daughter.

Capt. Edward N. Lenan.

Capt. Edward N. Lenan died at Toms River, N. J., on Wednesday. He was seventy-nine years old. At the age of twenty-one he was commander of a vessel. During the civil war he was notably successful in transporting munitions of war by water to the Union armies operating in the far South and Southwest. When Gen. Burnside captured Newberne, N. C., he was appointed harbormaster of the city, holding the position until the close of the war. In 1874 he was elected to the Legislature as a Democrat in a Republican County. In 1870 he was appointed County Superintendent of Schools, which position he held for twenty-five years.

Col. L. P. Milligan.

Col. L. P. Milligan died at his home in Huntington, Ind., yesterday. He was eighty-seven years old. In 1864 he was arrested on the charge of treason and placed in a military prison at Indianapolis. A military commission found him guilty and he was sentenced to be hanged on May 19, 1865. The gallows were erected, but before the execution the sentence was commuted to life imprisonment. Later the case was presented to the Supreme Court, where James A. Garfield made one of the arguments in Col. Milligan's behalf and the prisoner was released.

William E. McNeal.

William E. McNeal, Mayor of Burlington, N. J., died at his home Wednesday night. He had suffered from locomotor ataxia several months. He was wealthy and was connected with the McNeal Pipe and Foundry Company. Mayor McNeal was fifty-one years old. He was a Democrat and was serving his second term.

Obituary Notes.

YELLOTT DASHIELL DECHERT, formerly a lawyer in this city, died yesterday at the Presbyterian Hospital, where he was taken from Lakewood, N. J., several weeks ago. He was thirty-nine years old, and was born in South America. For many years he lived in Philadelphia, where his uncle, Gen. Dechert, and other relatives reside. He practiced law in this city, but retired two years ago on account of his health. He married Miss Lillian Flanagan, daughter of James Flanagan, a brewer, and sister of Lieut. William L. Flanagan of the Second Battery, New York National Guard. She died a year ago.

SIMON H. RIEGELMANN, an importer and manufacturer of dress trimmings, died suddenly at his residence, 204 West Eighty-fifth Street, Wednesday. He was born in Adelsdorp, Bavaria, fifty-three years ago. At the age of eighteen he came to this country and entered the employ of A. Heineman & Co. Later he became junior partner of the firm of Leschhorn & Riegelmann. Since 1897 the business has been conducted under his name. Mr. Riegelmann leaves a wife and two daughters.

WILLIAM H. ARROWSMITH, veterinary surgeon of the Jersey City Fire Department, died at Christ Hospital, that city, yesterday. An operation for an affection of the stomach was performed on Saturday. Dr. Arrowsmith was born in Jersey City, March 22, 1860. After graduating from the American Veterinary College he established the Jersey City Veterinary Hospital, which proved a succes from the start. He leaves a wife and three sons.

Dr. WILLIAM CAMP, a prominent physician at Millerton, N. Y., was found dead in his apartments in that place yesterday. He was fifty-seven years of age. Heart disease was the cause of death. He was a brother of Dr. Charles W. Camp of Canaan and of Dr. Samuel Camp of Great Barrington, Mass.

AUTOMOBILE CLUB IN CHICAGO.

Incorporated by Well-Known Men in That City.

CHICAGO, Dec. 21.—The Automobile Club of Chicago has been organized, and articles of incorporation filed at Springfield. The incorporators are J. Ogden Armour, E. Walter Herrick, Samuel Insull, F. K. Pulsifer, and Andrew R. Sheriff.

The new club has for its objects the promotion of the automobile and of social relations among users of the horseless vehicle. From the large and rapidly increasing number of automobiles in use here, the club is expected to be a great success. Among other things, it is proposed to arrange races and tours by means of automobiles.

DR. EDWARD H. WILLIAMS DEAD.

Part Owner of Baldwin Locomotive Works Succumbs to Heart Trouble.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 21.—A telegram was received here to-day from Santa Barbara, Cal., announcing the death at that place this morning of Dr. Edward H. Williams, widely known over the country as a member of the firm of Burnham, Williams & Co., constituting the Baldwin Locomotive Works of this city. Death was due to heart trouble.

Mr. Williams was seventy-five years old, and was born at Woodstock, Vt. He was a graduate of the Vermont Medical College, and practiced medicine for a short time after his graduation. Later he became identified with various railroads throughout the United States, and became a member of the Baldwin Locomotive Works firm in 1870.

Dr. Williams made many philanthropic donations during his life, among the more notable of these being the building of Williams Hall for Carleton College, Minn.; a library building to Woodstock, Vt., and a memorial structure to the University of Vermont. He was knighted by the King of Norway and Sweden.

John W. Hudson Dies of a Fall.

John W. Hudson, thirty-five years old, a process server for Milliken & Gasten, lawyers, fell in front of 124 West Thirty-second Street yesterday afternoon and fractured his skull. He was sent to the New York Hospital. He was at one time an actor, and had a mother residing in this city and a sister in Brooklyn. Mr. Hudson died at the hospital without regaining consciousness.

THE GOLD PLANK'S ORIGIN

DENY FORAKER'S ASSERTIONS

Senators Hanna and Proctor, Henry C. Payne, and Others Tell How Matter Was Finally Settled.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—Senator Foraker published some time ago a long article concerning the origin and adoption of the "gold plank" at the Republican National Convention of 1896, in which he maintained that the plank was prepared by the Committee on Resolutions, of which he was Chairman, after much discussion and out of diverse materials. H. H. Kohlsaat, editor of The Chicago Times-Herald, published an article in reply in which he claimed the "gold plank" was framed by the friends of Mr. McKinley, at a conference held in Mr. Hanna's room at the Southern Hotel, four days before the meeting of the convention, and therefore long before Mr. Foraker was elected either a member or Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions. Mr. Kohlsaat claimed furthermore, that there were present at this conference Mr. Hanna, Henry C. Payne, Senator Proctor, Myron T. Herrick, ex-Gov. Merriam, M. E. Stone, and himself, and that the gold plank prepared by them was submitted to various Republican leaders, and also to the Committee on Resolutions, by which it was adopted, with minor changes of phraseology, and presented to the convention.

The following statements by Messrs. Hanna, Payne, Merriam, and Proctor furnish an important contribution to the history of the gold plank. Henry C. Payne, in a signed statement, says:

"The original draft of the so-called 'gold plank' was taken to St. Louis by Mr. Hanna. It was the subject of earnest consideration at the hands of Mr. Hanna, Myron T. Herrick, and myself, who were in St. Louis some ten days before the meeting of the convention, and closely associated in guarding the interests of Mr. McKinley. After many informal discussions the plank was intrusted to me for the purpose of drafting a substitute for the original, and several substitutes were so drawn and discussed. Soon ex-Gov. Merriam of Minnesota and Senator Proctor of Vermont joined this informal committee of Mr. McKinley's friends, who were endeavoring to phrase this particular feature of the coming platform. Many changes were made in phraseology and probably a dozen different forms were discussed at the various meetings, until at the meeting on Friday morning I submitted the text of the gold plank which was substantially the one finally adopted by the convention.

"At that meeting Mr. Kohlsaat, who had arrived in St. Louis that morning, was present, and was strenuously insistent upon a plain, unequivocal declaration for the gold standard, and his insistence did much to end any division of sentiment which might have previously obtained among the friends of Mr. McKinley as to the wisdom of the course.

"A copy of the resolution as thus agreed upon was shown on Friday to Joseph H. Manley of Maine and W. Murray Crane of Massachusetts, who were at the convention in the interest of Speaker Reed, and it was also submitted to Senator Lodge of Massachusetts and Senator Platt of New York, who all gave it their unqualified approval.

"The resolution as agreed upon was given to Myron T. Herrick of Cleveland, who telegraphed it in full to Canton for the approval of Mr. McKinley, which was soon obtained, and then a copy was given to ex-Gov. Merriam, who had been selected as a member of the Committee on Resolutions, and he was authorized to say to that committee that the resolution as presented by him had been drawn by immediate and responsible friends of Mr. McKinley and approved by him, and to ask that it be adopted by the committee."

Senator Hanna, over his signature, says:

"I have carefully read the foregoing account of the origin of the gold plank adopted by the Republican National Convention at St. Louis in 1896, and I find it correct. In addition to the facts brought out in it, I wish to add that other Republicans were earnest and influential in their advocacy of a gold declaration, among them Robert W. Patterson, the Illinois member of the Committee on Resolutions."

Ex-Gov. Merriam says:

"The foregoing statement accords with my recollection of the facts. The copy of the resolution referred to was given to me, and I submitted it to the Committee on Resolutions. Previously thereto I showed a copy of the plank to Senator Foraker, Senator Platt of New York, and Senator Lodge, and conferred with them about it."

Senator Proctor's signed statement reads:

"I was consulted about the financial plank of the St. Louis platform by Mr. Payne and others five or six days previous to the meeting of the convention. I remember the conference which took place Friday morning in one of Mr. Hanna's rooms at the Southern Hotel. There were present Messrs. Payne, Merriam, Herrick, Kohlsaat, Stone, and myself. Mr. Hanna came in and out occasionally, but gave the matter little attention, as he was more interested in making a President than the platform for him to stand on. He, however, expressed himself as ready to agree to anything we formulated, and did agree to it at the close of our work. Mr. Kohlsaat had just arrived in town, and was very active and earnest for the gold standard, and his forceful insistence came at an opportune moment for settling the matter in the right way. I was surprised to find some of the Western men so strong for gold. Of course, substantially all Eastern Republicans would favor it, but the credit of leading in the matter belongs to the Western men I have named. It was known that Senator Foraker was to be Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, and the plank was shown to him and met his full approval. It was submitted to Mr. McKinley by wire and received his approval. It was also shown to the different delegations, but especially to those delegates who were to be appointed on the Committee on Resolutions, and it was known very soon that it would meet with the approval of a good majority of the committee."

Political League Convention.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—The American Political League has issued a call for a National Convention for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice President of the United States, to be held in Boston, Mass., July 4, 1900. The councils of each State are directed to appoint two delegates at large.

Receiver for Franklin National Bank.

On account of the warfare which has for months existed between President James and the officers of the Franklin National Bank and the liquidating committee Judge Lacombe yesterday appointed Charles R. Shaw as temporary receiver of the affairs of the institution. He is required to give a bond of $10,000. His appointment was asked for by stockholders to protect their interests until liquidation is effected.

Bank Depositors to be Paid in Full.

DOVER, N. H., Dec. 21.—The depositors of the defunct Cocheco National Bank are to be paid in full without an assessment on the stockholders. Receiver E. H. Carroll announces that he will pay another dividend of 25 per cent., which will bring the total disbursement by the receivers since the bank's failure last Summer to 100 per cent. The settlement is one of the most rapid known in the history of embarrassed banks in this State.

Bank President Matthews Acquitted.

McPHERSON, Kan., Dec. 21.—Royal Matthews, President of the First State Bank of this city, which failed in 1897, has been acquitted by a jury in the Circuit Court of the charge of receiving deposits when the bank was insolvent. Matthews, who was arrested in Texas last August, is State Senator from this district.

Ville Marie Bank Manager Sentenced.

MONTREAL, Dec. 21.—Ferdinand Lemieux, local manager of the defunct Ville Marie Bank, was to-day found guilty of preparing and sending to the Government false statements as to the bank's condition, and was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary. The President of the bank is in jail, and two of the Directors are still to be tried.

LETTERS FOR SANTA CLAUS.

Many Addressed to Him at the Post Office, Which Must Go to an Official Burial Place.

There is in the General Post Office an old employee who has the reputation of being able to decipher almost any address that is passed over as illegible by the other clerks, and his busy season has just arrived. Since Monday he has been daily in receipt of small stacks of mail, and in almost every case the address has been deciphered to read "Santa Claus," "Mr. Santa Claus," or "Kris Kringle." The large number of letters thus received would surprise the fond parent, who usually just before Christmas tells his little one that Santa Claus will send anything the child wants, and then sits down to write an imaginary letter. In many cases the child is not content with the letter of the parent, or, perhaps, after it is supposed to have been sent, the little one remembers something that has been left out of papa's list, and sits down to correct matters by a personal letter to the great dispenser of Christmas gifts.

There are at present in the Post Office more than a bushel of letters to Santa Claus that the dear old mythical Saint will never receive for having been regularly mailed, they will after a time find their way to the Dead Letter Office. Their senders, however, never doubting that their missives received the proper attention from Santa Claus, will wake up on Christmas morning and be happy in finding what they asked for, or, as in some cases, awake to a bitter disappointment, which will lead to wonder as to why their requests were ignored.

Some of the messages are on postal cards, and when legible they read quaintly and pathetically. One little girl on the west side writes to tell Santa Claus that she is a good little girl, just six years old, and that she wants a piano and a doll's bed. She has the tea set he sent last year, but her dollie's hair was torn off by the cat, and its face is smashed in.

Another letter, addressed to "St. Nicholas, Wonderland, New York," in a woman's hand, contains on the other side of the card only scrawls, curves, and spirals, which would puzzle Expert Kinsley. They probably were meant to express something, but the intention is all they contained. They, with the bushel now on hand, will find their way to Washington, where bushels of others have already been sent.

DELAY OF CHRISTMAS MAIL.

Withdrawal of Ocean Liners Will Retard Its Delivery.

The withdrawal of the White Star liners Majestic, Cymric, and Britannic, and the Cunard liner Umbria, for service as British army transports, has upset the plans of the postal authorities for the prompt delivery of Christmas letters from European countries. The withdrawal of these four steamships necessitates the use of slower steamships running to Boston or Philadelphia. This change will cause considerable delay and the rehandling of many thousands of mail bags. An idea of the immense volume of mail matter crossing the ocean at this season may be obtained from the fact that the steamship Teutonic, which arrived here yesterday, brought altogether 2,100 bags of letters and newspapers. The letters which came to this city were all distributed by noon.

PRESIDENT'S CHRISTMAS PLANS.

No Extensive Preparations, Because of Mrs. McKinley's Poor Health.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—Many Senators and Representatives called upon the President to-day to pay their respects and extend their Christmas greetings before leaving for their homes to spend the holidays.

No extensive preparations are being made for the Christmas celebration at the Executive Mansion this year, owing to the state of Mrs. McKinley's health, and the day will probably be a very quiet one. Miss Grace McKinley and Miss Sarah Duncan, nieces of the President, will be guests at the White House during the holiday season. Abner McKinley and his wife will also be here.

The White House steward long since ceased to give himself any concern about the Christmas turkey. For many years the fattest, juciest bird in Rhode Island has arrived with the compliments of the raiser. Many boxes have already reached the White House containing gifts for the President and Mrs. McKinley, and a considerable number of presents are already on their way to their destinations from the White House. Most of Mrs. McKinley's gifts are exquisite products of her own handiwork. Last year Mrs. McKinley went to New York before the holidays and purchased many little things for the servants and White House attachés, but this year her illness prevented her from making the trip. It is the custom to remember every married employe of the White House with a big turkey and every unmarried attaché with a suitable present.

Mr. McKinley appears to be enjoying exceptionally good health.

MRS. JEFFERSON DAVIS'S GIFT.

Sends a Communion Service to Confederate Veterans for Christmas.

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 21.—Gov. Tyler to-day received a letter from Mrs. Jefferson Davis, dated at New York, in which she says:

"I send to-day a communion service, with the linen proper for its use, and beg you to present it to the veterans of the home in the name of a few Confederates who honor their steadfast valor, the proud memory of which time cannot efface. We had hoped to offer it on the birthday anniversary of Gen. Harry Heth, but, failing to receive it in time, we make it a Christmas offering to the veterans and ask God's blessing upon each and every one of them."

CHRISTMAS DANCE FORBIDDEN.

Catholic Priest Says the Day Should Be Observed as Most Holy.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., Dec. 21.—The Rev. Father McAndrew, pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church of this city, has forbidden the young men's drill organization to hold a dance which they had arranged for Christmas Day. He says:

"God made the Sabbath and he made Christmas, and Christmas is far the more important day. Christmas, of all days, should be observed as most holy."

SCHOOL BOARD'S QUANDARY.

Puzzled as to Whether the Compulsory Education Law Is Applicable to a Girl Wife.

VALLEY STREAM, L. I., Dec. 21.—The Board of Education of the Valley Stream Union Free School is confronted with a question which involves the right of the Board to compel the attendance at school of a married woman whose age brings her within the period fixed by the compulsory education law.

Mrs. Charles Coombs was married a few weeks ago. The school register shows she is fourteen years of age, and as the compulsory education law requires that all children between the ages of fourteen and sixteen, unless steadily employed, shall attend the school in their respective districts, the board is in doubt as to its control over the action of Mrs. Coombs. The matter will be submitted to Inspector Symes of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction office.

Inspector Symes visited the school on Monday, and found that twenty-five pupils were absent without excuse, and that the registry showed that there was a daily absentee list of about twenty. Among those counted as absent by the Inspector was Mrs. Coombs. He ordered that all be made to attend, and lectured the members of the board and Truant Officer DeMott for not enforcing the law compelling attendance.

Louisiana's Democratic State Ticket.

BATON ROUGE, La., Dec. 21.—The Democratic State Convention which yesterday nominated W. W. Heard for Governor, to-day named Senator Estopinal of St. Bernard Parish for Lieutenant Governor. John T. Michel of Orleans was nominated to succeed himself as Secretary of State. The resolutions adopted by the convention support the Chicago platform, denounce trusts, favor the Federal control of levees, the building of the Isthmian Canal, and the deepening of the passes of the mouth of the river.

Fourth-Class Postmasters.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—The following fourth-class Postmasters were appointed to-day for New York offices: Warren, Lester Eckler; Alderbrook, Elisha Latour; Clovebranch Junction, Dewitt C. Baisley; Winona, Emery E. Brigham.

SHIPPERS MAKE A PROTEST.

Hearing by the Inter-State Commerce Commission on the Question of Increased Rates.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—A hearing was begun to-day by the Inter-State Commerce Commission in the matter of changes in freight classification and advances in freight rates by carriers using the official classification.

Many complaints have been filed with the commission alleging that discriminating changes in freight classification by carriers have been agreed upon to take effect on Jan. 1, 1900. To determine this question the hearing of to-day was held.

Mr. C. E. Gill of New York opened the hearing with the statement that the proposed increases in rates were due to the advances in prices of equipment, and that, owing to these advances, the increase in freight rates would work no injury to shippers. Little further information was elicited from him in the course of an extended examination.

Mr. Gill was followed by N. B. Kelly of the Trade League of Philadelphia, who said what the shippers wanted was that the new classifications should go into effect April 1, instead of Jan. 1, 1900. If the railroads would consent to this proposition he anticipated no trouble.

At the afternoon session Mr. William R. Corwine, representing the Merchants' Association of New York, suggested that if a postponement of the hearing could be had he believed the shippers and the carriers might come to a reasonable agreement upon the proposed classification, which would prove satisfactory to all concerned. He was assured after conversing with several railroad representatives that a readjustment of the proposed classification could be brought about.

Another witness was A. J. Valandingham of St. Louis, who also asked for a postponement, suggesting that a settlement might be effected.

Mr. Gill, who was recalled, was questioned by Mr. F. S. Monett, Attorney General of Ohio, as to the cost of shipping petroleum. Mr. Monett endeavored to elicit from him some statement to the effect that the Standard Oil Company was favored by the railroads at the expense of the small shippers.

Mr. Nathan Guilford, Traffic Manager of the New York Central and Boston and Albany Railroads, made a long statement, in which he said that he did not care to defend the proposed classifications, because he realized there might be inconsistencies and mistakes in them. He declared the readiness of the railroads, however, to correct any inequalities or injustices that might be found to exist.

The hearing will be resumed to-morrow.

STREET RAILWAY WINS SUIT.

Gribben Loses Damage Case in Which Bribery Charges Were Made.

The jury which heard testimony in the suit brought by Hugh Gribben against the Metropolitan Street Railway Company to recover $50,000 damages for injuries received while a passenger on a car of the Second Avenue Railroad Company, on July 2, 1894, which was tried Wednesday before Justice Andrews, in the Supreme Court, yesterday returned a verdict for the defendant.

In the course of the trial Louis Grant, counsel for Gribben, alleged that David J. Lynch, who was, he declared, an employe of the company, had attempted to bribe the witnesses for the plaintiff to testify in favor of the defendant. John M. Scribner, counsel for the defendant, denied that Lynch was an employe of the company, or that any attempt had been made to bribe the plaintiff's witnesses. Lynch denied that he had tried to induce Gribben's witnesses to testify for the railroad. Two witnesses for the plaintiff testified that Lynch offered them money if they would give favorable evidence for the defendant.

DEATH HUSHED THE SPEAKER.

John Crawford, an inmate of the New York Christian Home for Intemperate Men, Madison Avenue and Eighty-sixth Street, dropped dead while speaking at an experience meeting of the inmates there Tuesday evening. Crawford was a tanner, and lived in Broome Street. He had been admitted to the home as a charity patient four weeks ago, and was to have gone back to his work in another week.

Several of the inmates had given their experience when Crawford arose.

"I am a man of slow speech," he said, "but I am not ashamed of Jesus. I am ashamed of the many failures I have made in serving Him, and I—"

Crawford raised his arm as though to make a gesture. Then he toppled over into the arms of the men beside him. They carried him to his bedroom, but he was already dead. Friends claimed the body, and yesterday he was buried from the Broome Street Presbyterian Church, of which he had been a member.

FOUND AFTER SIXTY YEARS.

Aged Volume of Municipal Records Restored to the City Library.

A volume was found in the Astor Library yesterday which clears up an old mystery in the City Library. Sixty years ago a manuscript volume of the minutes of the City Council for 1803 and 1804 disappeared from the City Library. A vigorous search was made for the missing volume, but no trace of it could be found. Second-hand book stores were searched in vain in the hope that some one who had stolen it had disposed of it in that way. It had long since been given up for lost.

A few weeks ago, in a published list of books presented to the Astor Library, there was mentioned records of the Municipal Government in manuscript form. The list was brought to the attention of City Librarian Baer, and after corresponding with Dr. Billings of the Astor Library he learned that the missing book was among those mentioned. Dr. Billings, on learning of the fact, had the book returned to the City Library, where it was received yesterday and put back into its long-vacant place. The volume appears to be none the worse for its travels.

MEMORIAL OF ROBERT BONNER.

Newsdealers, Booksellers, and Stationers' Gift to the Family.

A memorial of Robert Bonner was formally presented to his family yesterday morning by a committee representing the National Association of Newsdealers, Booksellers, and Stationers of the United States. The ceremony took place in the office of The New York Ledger, of which Mr. Bonner had been the editor and proprietor. The memorial consists of a portrait of Mr. Bonner, 6 by 9 inches, beautifully executed in water colors after his last photograph, and an engrossed copy of the resolutions passed by the association at its last convention, the whole bound in black morocco, making a volume about 10 by 12 inches in size.

F. R. Sampson, Secretary of the association, presented the memorial on behalf of the committee. He spoke simply of the regard in which newsdealers had always held Robert Bonner, because of his interest in their welfare and the counsel he had frequently given them. Robert Edwin Bonner responded, accepting the album for the relatives.

ABSENT JUROR IS FORGIVEN.

Justice Collins at New Brunswick Condones Mr. Cortelyou's Error.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Dec. 21.—The case of L. J. Phelps and S. K. Pingle against the New Brunswick Rubber Company was continued this morning, with all the jurymen in the box. Juror Abraham Cortelyou, whose absence yesterday compelled the adjournment of the case, when he reached the courtroom, sought out Justice Collins. The Justice took his hand and gave it a hearty shake.

Mr. Cortelyou then in an undertone explained the circumstances of his disappearance yesterday, and in reply the Justice said: "I will not say anything about it. I have heard good reports of your character. You took a little too much, but don't let it happen again."

Epidemic of Measels at Newburg.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Dec. 21.—There is an epidemic of measles among the children here. More than 100 cases have been reported to the Health Officer, 23 new ones this morning. No deaths have been reported, and few adults are attacked.

St. Paul Railway's Car Shops Burned.

MAYOR CHIDES MR. BURKE

Intimates that Richmond School Board Disobeyed the Law.

HE REFUSES TO GIVE RELIEF

After Sharp Discussion in the Board of Estimate the Muddle Is Referred to the Controller.

The school muddle in the Borough of Richmond engrossed the attention of the Board of Estimate for nearly an hour yesterday, and at the conclusion of that time it was just as far from settlement as it was before. The Mayor put President Burke of the Borough School Board through an examination, which disclosed the fact that the Mayor's opposition to the plan of relief proposed by the School Board was based upon a report made to him by the Commissioners of Accounts. This report was pronounced by Mr. Burke to be absurd, but the Mayor maintained that he was willing to accept the figures presented in it, and declared that no more money would be appropriated. Finally, the matter was referred to the Controller.

At the opening of the meeting the Mayor inquired if any one were present to speak for the Richmond School Board. Mr. Burke presented himself, and asked for an appropriation of $50,000 to recompense the board for the money taken from it by the Board of Education in distributing the total appropriations among the several boroughs.

"In taking into consideration the amount that each borough was entitled to," said Mr. Burke, "the Board of Education has counted the teachers in eleemosnary institutions. We have none of these in Richmond, and I submit it is unfair to our borough to have them counted. We have been the victims of an injustice, and we want to get more money to comply with the provisions of the Ahearn law."

"How much do you want for that purpose?" asked the Mayor.

"About $42,000," answered Mr. Burke.

"You are very much mistaken," said the Mayor. "You have received all the money asked for under the Ahearn law."

"We had reason to believe," retorted Mr. Burke, "that the money taken away from us would have been restored. The Legislature passed an act restoring it to us."

"And the Mayor vetoed it," said the Mayor.

"The Mayor vetoed it after we had fixed the salaries of teachers; then we could not reduce them. The whole fault lay with the Board of Education, which had everything in a jumble."

"You should have complied with the law," said the Mayor.

"The law was a ridiculous one," retorted Mr. Burke. "Nobody knew where he was at under it. As well might you tell us to comply with a law that forbade the wearing of the green."

"You have been told time and again that you could not get this money," said the Mayor.

"Nothing of the kind," said Mr. Burke; "on the contrary, we have been led to believe that we would get relief, and the chief financial officer of the city has promised us relief."

"Well, the Controller is not here," said the Mayor; "but we have here a report from the Commissioners of Accounts to the effect that the amount needed under the Ahearn law is $1,715."

"That report is absurd," said Mr. Burke.

"Well, you will get that amount," said the Mayor. A moment later he said: "Refer this whole matter to the Controller."

The board authorized the issue of $465,000 in bonds for the purchase of school sites in Brooklyn, and ratified the abrogation of a contract for a schoolhouse in Richmond, which had been entered into previous to consolidation.

MR. FTELEY'S RESIGNATION.

Accepted by the Aqueduct Commission—His Important Work.

The resignation of Alphonse Fteley, for eleven years Chief Engineer of the Croton Aqueduct, by reason of continued ill-health, has been accepted by the Aqueduct Commission. Mr. Fteley has been on leave of absence for two months, during which time Alfred Craven, one of the Division Engineers, has acted in his place.

During his incumbency Mr. Fteley has directed to a large extent all the work done by the Aqueduct Commission, including the drafting of the plans for the new Croton dam and the distributing reservoir at Jerome Park. Previous to becoming Chief Engineer Mr. Fteley was the principal Assistant Engineer for five years, and before that he was in charge of the Sudbury system of water works in Boston.

MAYOR ON LEGISLATURE.

Question of Selling Markets Gives Rise to Sharp Criticism.

Commissioner Kearny of the Department of Public Buildings, Lighting, and Supplies yesterday wrote to the Board of Estimate asking whether or not the board intended to make an appropriation covering the expense of making repairs to the public markets. In the discussion which followed the reading of the letter, the Mayor took occasion to make some remarks about what he called the interference of the Legislature in municipal affairs, and about the firm of Tracy, Boardman & Platt.

Deputy Controller Levey, after stating that the markets had largely ceased to be a source of adequate revenue to the city by reason of their location outside the centres of population, said that it might be advisable to sell some of them.

"We can't sell all of them," the Mayor replied. "Some of them were acquired for market purposes."

"It might be possible to get the Legislature to give us power to sell," Mr. Levey suggested.

"Oh, we don't want to go to the Legislature," the Mayor answered, with a laugh. "They would take the whole city away from us if we would let them, and turn it over to the Astoria Gas Company."

"But we ought to dispose of the Central Market, at all events," President Guggenheimer said. "It is practically useless."

"Well," said the Mayor, "maybe the Legislature will let us do that if Tracy, Boardman & Platt ask them. They seem to be able to get anything they want. We will get a report on it from the Controller, and then see what we can do."

WANTS NO MILK BOOTH.

Mayor Expresses Opposition to a City Hall Park Pagoda.

Whenever the subject of the erection of booths for the distribution of sterilized milk has come up before the Board of Estimate, Mayor Van Wyck has indicated his opposition in unmistakable terms. After a long controversy, however, the board in June last authorized the expenditure of $4,000 for the erection of permanent booths in the Central and Tompkins Square Parks. The season was so far advanced then that the work was not done, and the projector of the plan, Nathan Straus, through President Clausen of the Department of Parks, now asks that the unexpended money be used for the erection of a booth in City Hall Park instead of in the other mentioned parks.

In his letter, read before the Board of Estimate yesterday, President Clausen observed that the figures showed that there was a much greater demand for the milk at the temporary booth in City Hall Park than at the other distributing points, and that much more good could be done by utilizing the fund to build a pagoda in front of the City Hall.

No sooner had the letter been read than the Mayor remarked: "I do not see why we should incumber the City Hall Park by putting up a permanent milk booth in it."

"The request of the Park Department seems to me to be a reasonable one," said President Guggenheimer. "Certainly, they give good reasons why the booth should be erected there."

"This park is small enough now," the Mayor responded. "Anyway, the temporary booth was patronized largely by persons who could afford to pay more for milk. Why, I've stood at my window and seen dozens of men walk up and buy this sterilized milk simply because they could get it for a cent a glass, rather than go to the stores in Park Row. It has interfered with storekeepers who have rent to pay, and I don't think we ought to encurage it."

"There is no question that a great deal of good has been done at that booth," Mr. Guggenheimer insisted. "Hundreds of poor men patronized it—men out of employment—and I think it ought to be continued."

"They haven't any business being out of work with all that is going on," the Mayor said. Then he added: "The Controller does not seem to have much to do. I move we refer the matter to him."

"What's the use of referring it?" Mr. Guggenheimer inquired. "We have discussed this charity before. I move we grant the request of President Clausen."

The Mayor, Deputy Controller Levey, and President Feitner of the Tax Department voted against the resolution, and Corporation Counsel Whalen and President Guggenheimer in favor of it.

COL. SMITH FORCED OUT.

Report of Lively and Effective Opposition to Him in the Twenty-third Regiment.

The determination of Col. Alexis C. Smith of the Twenty-third Regiment to resign, it was reported yesterday, was only brought about after a lively fight against him by officers who have been opposed to his administration. According to those conversant with the inner machinery of the regiment, it was only after fully half the officers had determined to resign if Smith remained Colonel longer that sufficient pressure was brought to bear to move him to retire.

The dissatisfaction against Col. Smith broke out some two years ago, and resulted in the resignation of Lieut. Col. Ezra De Forest. At that time also a committee of officers was appointed to wait upon Col. Smith and ask that he resign. The Colonel thereupon demanded the resignation of a certain officer, and by a prompt and severe course of action smothered the opposition against him. However, the feeling has been smouldering and recently took on renewed life.

From an old officer of the regiment who would not let his name be used it was learned yesterday that a few days ago a number of the officers decided to take positive action. To the number of sixteen they drew up their resignations. These, it is said, were placed in the hands of an ex-officer of the regiment, who was dispatched with them to Albany, where he showed them at headquarters, the intimation being that although they had not yet been sent in they would be unless steps were taken to obtain the resignation of Col. Smith at an early date.

The messenger of the disgruntled officers is also said to have informed the authorities that two other officers were ready to resign with the other officers, making the total number who would leave the regiment eighteen. The officer was requested to return to Brooklyn with a report that the matter would be looked into.

The accounts differ at this point as to what took place immediately afterward. Some say that Col. Smith was summoned to Albany by the Governor, where he was told that the interests of the regiment called for a change. Others say that a suggestion reached Col. Smith from headquarters that to save the regiment it would be advisable for him to leave it. Thereupon his resignation was forwarded.

Col. Smith, when interviewed yesterday, said he knew nothing of any feeling against him in the regiment. "I resigned because my business needed my attention," he said.

Col. Smith could not say who his successor would be. The selection of his successor may result in one of the hottest campaigns that the regiment has ever seen. Many of the officers are favorable to Col. A. S. Bacon.

HAVANA SURFACE LINE UNION.

Electric Railway Company Effects a Consolidation of All Other Interests in the City.

All the street railway interests in Havana were consolidated yesterday at a meeting in the office of the Treasurer of the Havana Electric Railway Company, at 120 Broadway, thus ending a contest begun more than a year ago.

In December, 1898, a group of capitalists, comprising the International Bank of Paris, Hanson Brothers of Montreal, and Col. G. B. M. Harvey and F. S. Pearson of this city, known as the "Harvey Syndicate," acquired all of the existing railway properties. There was in existence at the time one other concession, covering about twelve miles of streets, the title to which was claimed by the American Indies Company. The Harvey Syndicate also claimed to own the true title to this concession. Litigation was begun by the two parties and has been continued through the year without promise of adjustment for some time to come.

In view of this state of affairs, Col. Harvey, on behalf of his company, began negotiations to bring about a settlement, which was finally effected by complete consolidation yesterday.

Under the terms of the arrangement the Havana Electric Railway Company acquires all the rights and shares of stock of the Havana Traction Company, to which the American Indies Company's claims had been assigned, and the owners of the Havana Traction Company become part of the Havana Electric Railway Company. The Electric Company reimburses the owners of the Traction Company for their expenditures and turns over to them a certain proportion of interest in the united company. Work was begun by the Electric Company several months ago, and it is now expected that a complete system of electric traction will be in operation by June 1.

The Board of Directors of the Havana Electric Railway Company is as follows: President—Edwin Hanson; Vice Presidents—William L. Bull and R. A. C. Smith; Secretary and Treasurer—Arnold Marcus. Directors, in addition to those above named, are: P. A. B. Widener, Thomas F. Ryan, Sir William C. Van Horne, William McKenzie, Frederic Nichols, H. M. Perkins, Thomas P. Fowler, E. H. Andronl, William M. Doull, N. Gelats, and G. B. M. Harvey.

The capitalization of the company remains unchanged, namely, $5,000,000 of preferred stock, $5,000,000 of common stock, and a first mortgage representing $5,000,000 of 5 per cent. fifty-year bonds.

MR. COLER'S ASSERTIONS DENIED.

Deputy Superintendent Ainsworth Discusses School Taxes.

ALBANY, Dec. 21.—Deputy Superintendent of Public Instruction Ainsworth to-day was shown Controller Coler's figures with reference to the amount of money paid into the State Treasury by New York County for school purposes, and his implied claim that because the amount paid in largely exceeded the amount drawn out by New York, she has the right to be exempt from State regulation.

Mr. Ainsworth says: "Since 1795 the State tax for school purposes has been levied by the Legislature upon the property of the State. Last year it was .84 of a mill. New York happens to have poured into it the wealth from the rest of the State which is locally taxable there. The result is that she probably does pay into the Treasury more money than Hamilton County; but no good citizen would claim that New York was exempt from a general State law because of her wealth.

"As well might Mr. Vanderbilt or Mr. Rockefeller claim special privileges as a citizen because he pays a larger tax than Controller Coler does. Mr. Coler would object to that. Hamilton County objects to New York claiming a special privilege because of increased wealth.

"This school money is divided among the counties in proportion to their population and teachers employed. New York receives all that her population and teaching force entitles her to, as does Hamilton County. The statement of Mr. Coler might be valuable in considering that the law ought to be from his standpoint. My communication attempted to tell what the law is."

Traveling Man Commits Suicide.

UTICA, N. Y., Dec. 21.—Henry J. Pillmore, traveling agent for Mertens & Co. of Syracuse, took an ounce of carbolic acid in his room in the St. James Hotel, in this city, early this morning, with fatal results. Pillmore's home was in Deposit, where he leaves a wife and one child. His father resides in Western, this county, and a letter was left by the suicide for his father, stating that he was financially ruined, and had learned late last night that another investment which he had made had gone against him.

LIBRARY CLOSING NO THREAT.

J. Frederic Kernochan, President of the Board of Trustees of the New York Free Circulating Library, yesterday denied the charge of Corporation Counsel Whalen that the closing of the libraries on Sunday was intended as "a bluff, a threat, an attempt, in fact, to hold up the city to get more money," and commented upon Controller Coler's announcement that he would favor the administration's making the payment of the appropriation contingent upon the libraries being open daily.

"No such thing as trying to force the city's hand, or a desire to make the reduced appropriation unpopular in the eyes of the public, was contemplated," said Mr. Kernochan. "The principal motive for closing the libraries on Sunday was that of economy. The first thing that occurred to us in this connection was to close the libraries on Sundays. In this way we thought we could save a little money without inflicting any serious inconvenience upon the people, because it is an easy matter for the latter to draw on Saturday any books they wish to read on Sunday.

"I am convinced that the cause of the trouble is that Mr. Coler does not understand the situation, and I realize that the members of the Board of Estimate will require time to study the question.

"I will endeavor to explain the situation. We applied for an increased appropriation on the basis of the work done, and not what we expected to do. Our expenses have increased. In the Spring, for instance, we opened a new branch in Chatham Square. Yet our appropriation of $84,000 has been cut $22,000, thus greatly hampering our work.

"Controller Coler intimates that where the appropriation of large amounts of the city's money is made for an institution that institution should be placed under the control of the city. We agree with him that it is just and proper that the city should exercise control over such institutions. But we don't want the kind of control that would result in transforming the library into a department to be run on the political spoils system.

"The Controller hints that books of a trashy nature, in large type, to be quickly read, are being provided, so that by increasing the circulation we can get an increased appropriation. The simple fact is that we cannot make any demand for an appropriation until our circulation is examined into by the State Board of Regents, and the latter issue the certificate upon which our demand is made only upon the circulation of books of which they approve. It is true that we issue a large number of novels, but there is good reason for so doing.

"Our official critics apparently also find fault with us for not consolidating. This is due to no fault of our own. And let me say in this connection that the present method of appropriations is a deadly blow at consolidation. A generous amount is given upon each book up to 50,000. Above that number, no matter how many there may be, the grant per book is less than the cost of consolidation. This is a direct temptation for libraries to keep apart.

"Another thing it is contended should be done, and that is to merge the circulating libraries with the New York Public Library. That is just what we desire to do, but the New York Public Library does not hold out any inducement.

"There is one more error into which the Board of Estimate has fallen, and that is to assume that the library business ought to be done either wholly or in part by subscriptions of private individuals. For more than ten years we did not receive a cent from the city. Then the work became of such magnitude that private individuals did not feel called upon to meet all the expense, and it became necessary to apply to the city for financial aid. Very soon it became difficult to get yearly subscriptions. It is true that from time to time large sums have been received by gift or bequests in wills. It is the intention of the Trustees to keep these sums in investment as an endowment fund and use only the income to meet current expenses. Then more large sums have been given and will continue to be given with which to erect buildings for branches of the library. But as soon as an enterprise receives public support to meet current expenses, which in this case becomes absolutely necessary, private contributions to meet these current expenses fall off.

"I am not inclined to think that Mr. Coler will accuse us of extravagance in our expenditures, especially in the matter of salaries. His own pet library, over in Brooklyn, took our librarian and cataloguer from us by offering them higher pay."

ASSIGNMENTS OF JUSTICES

PERSONAL WISHES IGNORED

Appellate Division Gives No Notice to the Bench—The Contrast in Other Districts.

The Justices of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, have announced the assignment of Supreme Court Justices for the Trial and Special Terms for the year 1900. Justice David McAdam, of the Supreme Court, when seen at his home last night, said regarding the assignments of Justices:

"These assignments are made by the Justices of the Appellate Division, under power vested in them by the Constitution. There is a statute, however, which permits the Justices of the Supreme Court to assign themselves, in case the Appellate Division fails to make assignments. In this department the Appellate Division, for reasons best understood by the Justices thereof, invariably makes the assignments. Hence that pleasant duty has never fallen on the Justices themselves, and in this department probably never will.

"I am credibly informed that in the three other departments of the State the Justices in those departments make their own assignments, which are approved by the Justices of their Appellate Divisions. In this department the rule is entirely different, and no Justice in this department knows where he is to go until he finds the assignment printed in The Law Journal; nor does he know for which month he is to be assigned; nor are his wishes in that regard ever consulted. He never knows until the assignments are printed how many weeks he is to be engaged during the Summer months, so that he can never make arrangements prior to the publication of the assignments about his vacation for the following Summer.

"As a consequence a Justice may be selected for the month in the Summer most inconvenient for himself; so much so that his Summer vacation may be seriously interfered with. This cannot happen in any of the other departments, because the wishes of the Justices are always consulted in advance. The plan prevailing in the First Department may have merit to commend it, but it is difficult to discover wherein it lies.

"As to the personnel of the assignments, I have nothing to say, for my long service on the bench, which nearly equals that of any other Justice in the State, has qualified me for holding any part of the court from the Criminal Branch down to taxing costs in the County Clerk's office, which is a branch of the court, and one duty would be as congenial to me as another."

The following are the assignments:

Trial Terms—Part I.—Criminal Term; no Justice assigned throughout the year.

Part II.—Referred Causes, McAdam, throughout the year.

Part III.—Beach, throughout the year.

Part IV.—MacLean, throughout the year.

A BILLION IN INSURANCE

New York Life Honors Leadership Which Built It Up.

TO VICE PRESIDENT PERKINS

Complimentary Dinner and Presentation of Plate by Company's Officers at the Waldorf-Astoria.

A complimentary dinner was given last night at the Waldorf-Astoria in honor of George W. Perkins, Second Vice President of the New York Life Insurance Company, by the officers and heads of departments of the company. The dinner marked Mr. Perkins's return from a business campaign extending over last Summer in Europe, and it also recorded a memorial of the day on which the New York Life passed the thousand million dollar mark in paid for business in force. This record was passed May 23 last and yesterday evening was the first time the officers of the company have had an opportunity of celebrating it.

A feature of the programme was the presentation to Mr. Perkins of a magnificent service of plate by a committee of twenty-four, coming from all parts of the United States and Canada and representing the entire working field force of the company. The service was formally presented by E. S. Heyman, head of the Chicago office. It was accompanied by an illuminated address, to which was appended the autographs of all the men who united in the presentation. The sentiment expressed was as follows:

Mr. George W. Perkins: The 23d day of May, 1899, will always be notable in the calendar of the New York Life, but we know as others cannot that the achievement which that day records is greater even than it appears. Most of us had some part in the work of the several six years which immediately preceded that date, but the succession of splendid campaigns which led up to it, the brilliant leadership, the voice of inspiration and command, all these were yours—all these are yours—and in this fashion we testify thereto. We offer you this service in the hope that it may speak eloquently to you and yours of our admiration for your qualities as a leader, our affection for you as a friend. We hope, too, that it may take its proper place among the priceless remembrances which pass from generation to generation, that it may tell its story to your children, and those who follow them bearing your name.

The address closed with the following sentiment, which was signed by President McCall:

The most notable achievement in the history of life insurance—$1,000,000,000 fully paid for and in force on the books of a single company—was duly chronicled on the 23d day of May, 1899. The great satisfaction of the President and Trustees over such an unequalled accomplishment was thus fittingly expressed and their indebtedness to the agents therefor was properly acknowledged. The President has constantly and often commended the enthusiastic efforts of the field men. He is proud, and justly so, of their labors and their loyalty, and he esteems beyond expression the assistance he has received in his executive management from a most incomparable leader, his personal friend, Second Vice President George W. Perkins. The superb gift accompanying the testimonial of the agency staff is worthily bestowed on Mr. Perkins in recognition of his masterly work, unrivalled ability, and high sense of duty. In thus honoring the Second Vice President his colaborers have honored and gratified the President.

The service and illuminated address were both the work of Tiffany & Co., and upon the service the best artists of the house have been at work since last June.

The guests of the dinner included all the Trustees and executive officers of the New York Life, and in addition the following committee, the positions of the members being earned by competition, which was organized in the field force of the company running from Nov. 13 to Dec. 16 inclusive: Lee B. Durstine, Buffalo; C. A. Smith, Chicago; Walker Buckner, Chicago; E. R. Perkins, Philadelphia; W. S. Huntley, Pittsburg; J. T. Boone, Kansas City; Julius Bohm, New York City; R. T. Furman, New York City; R. W. Taylor, Cleveland; W. R. Malone, Toledo; C. T. Whitney, San Francisco; George W. Riggs, Chicago; Robert E. Whitney, New York City; H. A. Appelius, New York City; W. M. Harris, Chicago; J. J. Parker, St. Paul; E. S. Heyman, Chicago; Theodore Well, Chicago; R. Allyn Lewis, Phoenix, Arizona; R. H. Plant, Macon, Ga.; J. G. Morgan, Winnipeg, Canada; B. H. Betts, Scranton, Penn.; Walker Buckner, Jr., St. Louis, and W. R. Noble, Louisville.

President John A. McCall presided, and among the speakers were Thomas B. Reed, Col. A. G. Paine, William B. Hornblower, and D. P. Kingsley. Third Vice President of the New York Life.

NEW THIRD RAIL SYSTEM.

A Road Between Atlantic City and Camden Will Be Built, It Is Said.

The Doty Third Rail Electric Company, which was incorporated yesterday in Delaware, with a capital of $2,500,000, was organized for the purpose of manufacturing and putting into operation a third-rail system which, it is claimed, is not dangerous.

While the system is entirely different, it is said, from the Murphy system, which was tried last Summer at Manhattan Beach, its essential feature is that the rails are "dead" except those directly under the car. There is an automatic switch, and the rail is killed after the car leaves it.

An official of the company states that it will install a plant at once in either Camden or Gloucester, N. J., and has a contract for building 120 miles of its road from Atlantic City to Camden.

TROLLEY CRASH HURT THREE.

Brooklyn Car Collision Due to a Stubborn Brake.

Car 2,139 of the Seventh Avenue trolley line was in collision with Car 521 of the Fifth and Flatbush Avenues, Brooklyn, last Fifth and Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, last night at 8 o'clock. The collision was caused by the brakes on the Seventh Avenue car failing to act.

On the Seventh Avenue car those injured were Charles Hall, forty-one years old, of 592 Vanderbilt Avenue, contusion of the side, and Gertrude Schleelenbeck, fourteen years old, 270 Vanderbilt Avenue, contusions of body and face. They were attended by Ambulance Surgeon Gilmore of Seney Hospital. On the Fifth Avenue car Miss Gall, 805 Bergen Street, was slightly injured. The accident caused much excitement at the time. Two arrests were made.

Erne and O'Brien to Fight.

Articles of agreement were signed yesterday for a twenty-five round bout at 134 pounds, weigh in at the ringside, between Frank Erne, champion lightweight pugilist of Buffalo, and Jack O'Brien of this city. The fight will take place at the New Broadway Athletic Club in this city on Jan. 19, for a guaranteed purse of $5,000 or 50 per cent. of the gate receipts.

Another English Boxer Beaten.

Charley Goff of California met and defeated the English middle-weight boxer, Geoffrey Thorne, in less than two rounds before the Hercules Athletic Club in Brooklyn last night. The men met at catch weights. A blow on the jaw knocked out Thorne.

THE PURITAN ANNIVERSARY

New England Society of Brooklyn Holds Its Annual Dinner.

PRAISE OF PILGRIMS' WORK

Dr. Hillis Says They Are Maligned—Thomas Nelson Page on the Race Problem.

The New England Society of Brooklyn held its twentieth annual dinner at the Pouch Gallery on Clinton Avenue last evening. The occasion commemorated the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock—this year bringing the two hundred and seventy-ninth anniversary of that event—and their descendants gathered to recount the adventures of the hardy band and extol the principles that they represented. About 150 were present, fully half that number being women.

Ex-Justice Frederick A. Ward, President of the Society, presided. With him at the head table were the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, Justice Willard Bartlett, Justice Frederic Adams of New Jersey, Thomas Nelson Page, the Rev. Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, President of Brown University; William B. Davenport, and Tunis G. Bergen, President of the St. Nicholas Society.

President Ward in his introductory remarks caused considerable laughter when, in referring to Puritan principles, he said: "In these days of wireless telegraphy, horseless carriages, loveless marriages, grapeless wine, and churchless Sabbaths it is well that we should reflect upon the times when none of these existed."

In closing, he referred to Puritan valor and ventured the opinion that the same spirit ruled the English in South Africa to-day. "England will not be deterred," he said, "though the Modder and the Tugela run as red as the uniforms of her soldiers."

Dr. Hillis was then introduced to respond to the toast: "Forefathers' Day and the Message of Puritanism to the Republic." He said in part:

"Of late years it has become the fashion to belittle the Puritans and ridicule them. Our pleasure loving generation hurls many a gibe and stinging jest at their high hats and sombre garments, their cold reserve, their solemn habit of thought, and life.

"There is a type of mind that can never think of Puritanism save as a 'mere acrid defiance and sanctimonious sectarianism, or of the Puritans save as a band of ignorant and half crazy zealots.' With blighting sarcasm Hume said 'the Puritans hated bear baiting, not because it gave pain to the bears, but because it gave pleasure to the spectator.'

"When Connecticut expelled a Tory for his disloyalty, he went home to England and palmed off the story of the so-called 'blue laws,' which never had any existence outside of the brain of the man driven out for treason, and yet many an English author refers to the time when the mothers of New England were punished for kissing their husbands or babes on the Sabbath Day, and when the Puritan housewife threw away her vinegar on Saturday night lest the acid should work on Sunday, thus breaking the law against labor on the day of rest.

"Let us confess, then, that the Puritans were men with faults, many and great, but to minimize their errors or magnify their excellence would be alike unworthy of their memory and our inheritance. Their theology was narrow and in practice ceased to satisfy thinking men. Their stern way toward the Hester Prynnes has been succeeded by a certain gentle, loving sympathy.

"After the rocklike sternness of virtue we have had a charity and sweet philanthropy that embodied God's tenderness toward each bruised reed. But faulty as they were, be it remembered that there is some spot on every shaft of marble, some flaw in every pearl or diamond, some disproportioned feature in the loveliest face."

Thomas Nelson Page, who replied to the toast "What Each Section of the Country Owes to the Other," said, in beginning: "It seems to me as though the two sections we have been talking of in the past have been gradually merging into one, and I hope they will never be anything else but one. They say the South became reconciled at the time of the war with Spain. It is not true.

"The South became reconciled after Appomattox, when Lee laid down his arms and accepted the terms of the magnanimous Grant. The North—your great city here—is filled with Southern men, who give all their energies to building up the Union, and at the South we are doing our best to accomplish the same. Mason and Dixon's line is not even laid down in memory. The line we set down to-day is the line that circumscribes this great Union, with all its hopes and aspirations."

Referring to the negro question of the South, Mr. Page continued: "Among the problems which confront us is one that is like the pestilence that walketh in darkness, but the key to it is, in our opinion, is that for the present at least the white race is the torchbearer of civilization, and never again will the white people of the South consent to be dominated by a weaker race. They are standing to-day between you and this problem, but we are ready to-day to do full justice to that people. I have many friends among them, but it is the race I stand against."

The other speakers were Justice Adams, who responded to the toast "The Part of Landing," and the Rev. Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, the subject of whose address was "The Voyage of the Mayflower."

FIRE VISITS WEST BROADWAY.

The iron-front six-story building at 495 West Broadway, occupied by five firms, was with its contents damaged by fire last night to the extent of $40,000. The tenants of the building were: Ground floor, James B. Rowley, restaurant; second and third floors, the Paris Flower and Feather Company; fourth floor, M. Koppelman, manufacturer of clothing; fifth floor, the Archimede Covered Wire Company; sixth floor, Samuel Rosenthal, manufacturer of hats and caps.

Junius Brown, a watchman, who with his family lives on the third floor of the adjoining building, No. 493, first discovered the fire, and gave the alarm by shouting from his window. A policeman sent in the first call. Two subsequent alarms were turned in.

Firemen R. McDonald of Engine No. 30, James Crawford of Engine No. 24, and a fireman whose name was not obtainable, were on the third floor fire escape fighting the fire, which seemed greatest at that point, when a window blew out and they were enveloped in a sheet of flame.

McDonald and Crawford fell to the second floor fire escape. Crawford would have gone to the ground had not McDonald caught him. Both men were then taken down, and were but slightly scorched. Their companion got down safely. It took the firemen an hour to extinguish the flames.

DIED FROM A BULLET WOUND.

Police Record Winslow Robinson a Suicide—Accident, Says Family.

Winslow Robinson, fifty-six years old, died from a pistol shot wound at his home, 19 Harrison Street, Stapleton, S. I., last evening. The police have recorded the case as one of suicide. Members of the family say it was a case of accidental shooting.

Mr. Robinson had been in ill-health for several months, and had been living at Liberty, N. Y., where he recently invested a lot of money. He had been living at his Staten Island home for a month past. Mrs. Robinson yesterday was in Manhattan with her daughter, Mrs. Albert E. Hodges, wife of the secretary to Gov. Delehanty of Sailors' Snug Harbor.

A colored servant girl heard a shot about 6 o'clock last evening, and, running to the front door to call help, saw Mrs. Robinson and Mrs. Hodges approaching the house.

Dr. O'Dea was sent for and the police were notified. Mr. Robinson was found lying upon his bed dead. A revolver was in his right hand, and there was a bullet hole in his right temple. Mr. Robinson leaves a wife, three daughters, and two sons

To Sail After the Holidays.

The agents of the North German Lloyd Company yesterday announced that the steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse would not sail for Cherbourg and Bremen next week, as usual, but would sail on Jan. 4. The reason given was that few passengers desired to spend the holidays at sea, and the passenger list therefore was not large enough to warrant the vessel sailing.

MR. WASHBURN ON CHINA.

Ex-Senator Approves Plan for a Commercial Commission.

Ex-United States Senator Washburn of Minnesota was at the Fifth Avenue Hotel last night. Speaking of the proposed plan to have Congress name a commission to improve American commercial relations in the Far East, particularly in China, he said:

"I want to see such a commission named. We should do a good business with China, and I believe we will if the Government takes hold of the matter in a proper manner. I would like to see at the head of such a commission Col. Charles Denby of Indiana. He spent twelve years in China, and has recently returned from the Philippines. He would be just the man for the place.

"I woul not care to be on the commission as my business affairs in this country require my entire attention. The larger part of China's trade should come to us. We have an advantage in point of distance, and then China is handy to the Philippines."

Ex-Senator Washburn is familiar with China and its opportunities as he spent much time there several years ago, having been interested in obtaining railroad concessions for American syndicates.

Frank T. Bailey Dying.

Frank T. Bailey, Vice President of the Tuttle & Bailey Manufacturing Company, makers of registers and furnaces, with offices at 83 Beekman Street, is dying at the home of his son, H. W. Bailey, 170 West Eighty-fifth Street. He was taken ill with pneumonia on Saturday, and grew rapidly worse. Dr. Janeway and two other physicians held a consultation on Wednesday, and gave his relatives no encouragement. Mr. Bailey's home is at Montclair, N. J.

COTTON.—Conditions at the Cotton Exchange were, for the most part, quite normal. Business was fairly active, but the approaching holidays led to caution. Evening up old accounts was preferred to making new ventures. Still the market was fairly active, and the extreme range of prices was a matter of 8 points. The caution of leaders was increased by the unsatisfactory reports from Wall Street, where money was reasonably easy, while the market for securities showed nervousness and a weak undertone. After opening barely steady at a decline of 4@8 points, following disappointing cables, which showed a subsiding business in Liverpool in spot cotton and a net decline of 2½@3 points in futures, the course of the cotton market here was irregular. The market closed quiet and steady, with prices net 5@9 points lower. Southern spot markets were officially reported by wire as follows: New Orleans, 7¼c; Mobile, 7 1-16c; Savannah, 7¼c; Charleston, 7-16c lower, at 7 8-16c; Wilmington, 7¼c; Norfolk, 7¼c; Baltimore, 7½c; Augusta, 7 3-16c; Memphis, 7 5-16c; St. Louis, 7 5-16c.

FINANCIAL.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company.
OFFICE OF THE TREASURER.
GENERAL OFFICE, PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER 13, 1899.

At a meeting of the board held this day the following resolution was, on motion, adopted:

"Resolved, That, for the purpose of providing a portion of the necessary capital for construction and equipment expenditures, during the year 1900, on the main and leased liner and branches, and for other corporate purposes, the privilege be given to stockholders of the Company to subscribe, at par, between December 27th, 1899, and January 20th, 1900, ON WHICH LATTER DATE THE PRIVILEGE WILL CEASE, for ten per cent. of their respective holdings as they stand registered at three o'clock P. M. on December 26, 1899. The privilege of subscribing may be sold by any stockholder. Payment in full for such stock may be made after January 14th, and must be made not later than January 20th, 1900. Receipts, which will also be negotiable, will be given bearing interest at the rate of five per cent. from January 20th to May 1st, 1900, (being 70 cents per share,) at which time said receipts will cease to bear interest.

"Certificates for the new Stock will be delivered on and after May 1st, 1900, on surrender of the receipts. Receipts covering fractions of shares will be converted into Stock when presented in multiples of Fifty dollars. All receipts must be presented for conversion before January 1st, 1901, on and after which date they will only be redeemed, at par, in cash."

Blank forms, giving the particulars of the payments as above recited, forms of subscription, and allotment of privilege, etc., can be obtained on application at this office after December 20, 1899.

Stockholders desiring their new Certificates for full shares by May 1st must deposit their receipts with the Transfer Department of the Company on or before March 15th, 1900. For all receipts for full shares deposited after that date, and for all fractional receipts, Certificates will be ready for delivery as soon after May 1st as practicable, of which notice will be given.

ROBT. W. SMITH, Treasurer.

N. Y. CENTRAL
Will Sell at 175.
CHES. & OHIO
Will Sell at 40.

Chesapeake and Ohio is the cheapest dividend-paying railway stock on the list. It is earning over 2 per cent. now. Will earn more next year. It is being bought up for control, and will soon sell above 40.

N. Y. Central will sell at 175, and eventually sell higher than Lake Shore.

similar figures. The average for the four years from 1894 to 1897, inclusive, was only about 2,000 miles a year. In 1898 3,265 miles were built, or about 50 per cent. more than in the preceding years.

Discussing the matter, The Gazette will say:

"The State which takes the lead in new railroad building is Iowa, with a total of 553 miles. Next come Minnesota, with 374 miles; Arkansas, 265; California, 209, and Michigan, 178 miles. These five States include one-third of the total new mileage of the year. A notable feature of the new railroad building is its extent over wide areas. Of the fifty States and Territories, only five —namely, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Delaware, Nevada, and the District of Columbia—are unrepresented. Not less than twenty-nine of the States and Territories have added over 50 miles each this year to their railroads, and seventeen, or one-third of the entire number, have added over 100 miles each. Among the Eastern States Pennsylvania stands at the head, with 170 miles. The South is well represented by Arkansas, with 265 miles; Alabama, 161; Louisiana, 149; Florida and Mississippi, each 148; South Carolina, 139; Georgia, 137; Tennessee, 118, and Missouri, 107 miles. Among the Southwestern Territories are Oklahoma, with 135 miles, and New Mexico, 125 miles.

"It is interesting to note the distribution of the new construction among the old lines. At the head of the list stands the Chicago and Northwestern, with a total of 858 miles. Then come the Illinois Central, 196 miles; the Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf, 162; the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, 160; the Seaboard Air Line, 145; the Minneapolis and St. Louis, 102; the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, 98; the El Paso and Northeastern, 90; the Northern Pacific, 88; the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, 86; the Louisville and Nashville, 79; the Great Northern, 78; the Gulf and Ship Island, 73; the Oregon Railroad and Navigation, 71, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, 69 miles.

"With comparatively few exceptions, the larger additions of mileage have been made by the old roads. This is particularly true in Iowa and Minnesota, where there has been a scramble by the old companies to open up new territory. In Pennsylvania the 170 miles of new road are divided among not less than twenty-nine companies. Notable among the longer new lines are the Jacksonville and Southwestern in Florida, 54 miles; the Gulf and Ship Island, with its three extensions, aggregating 73 miles; the El Paso and Northeastern, 90 miles, and the Atlantic, Valdosta and Western, 61 miles.

"Large as the figures are for the year, they would have undoubtedly been larger had it not been for the increase in the cost of materials and the impossibility, in many cases, of procuring rails ordered months before. Altogether, the exhibit is a remarkable evidence of the widespread prosperity that has at last overtaken the country."

BIG DEMAND FOR PENNIES.

Deputy Assistant Treasurer Muhleman says that the demand for pennies on the part of dry goods and other merchants has been unprecedentedly large this Christmastide—so large, indeed, that the Mint at Philadelphia has been unable to supply the demand. On several days orders for 500,000 or more have been made.

The increased holiday trade is said to be largely responsible for this exceptional demand.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—Business on the Stock Exchange to-day started steadier on the announcement that the bank rate was not raised. France sent buying orders, but sellers were too numerous. The market collapsed and the announcement of the rise of the French bank rate led to general disorganization and an avalanche of forced sales. The market closed without recovering.

American securities opened dull with prices below parity level. Stocks were offered freely and prices broke away badly. The close was flat.

FRENCH DISCOUNT RATE.

Bank of France Raises Its Figure from 3 1-2 to 4 1-2 Per Cent.

PARIS, Dec. 21.—The rate of discount of the Bank of France was raised to-day from 3½ to 4½ per cent.

The weekly statement of the Bank of France shows the following changes: Notes in circulation increased 675,000f, Treasury accounts current increased 10,575,00f, gold in hand decreased 4,750,000f, bills discounted increased 45,250,000f, and silver in hand decreased 2,350,000f.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Dec. 21.—Prices on the Bourse today opened firmer, but speedily relapsed. When the rise in the bank rate was announced the rush of realization orders was riotous. Spanish 4s were specially affected; they closed at 64.85. Kafirs fell on London sending selling orders, for which there were few buyers. Prices closed weak. After the close there was another fall in rentes to 98.97. Three per cent. rentes, 99f 12½c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f 39c for checks.

BERLIN, Dec. 21.—Business was undecided on the Boerse to-day. Stocks were under the influence of Paris and New York. Prices were firm all round, on the news that the Bank of England rate was unchanged. Exchange on London, 20 marks 55 pfennigs for checks.

The Berliner Correspondenz says:

"The sensational raising of the bank rate is largely the result of the steady development during the last five years of the economic activity of Germany, where credits are being increasingly strained. The whole movement is traceable to the extraordinary increase of paper investments of the Imperial Bank since 1895, accompanied by a decrease in the stock of bullion. Foreign demands are not an important factor in the increase of the bank rate."

VIENNA, Dec. 21.—Business was quiet on the Boerse to-day. Prices closed firm on the fact that there was no change in the Bank of England rate.

FRANKFORT, Dec. 21.—Business was quiet on the Boerse to-day, speculators showing little spirit owing to the uncertain state of the Western Bourses. Prices hardened in some instances on the fact that there was no change in the Bank of England rate.

The Daily Chronicle's financial expert says he understands the Bank of England has made advances against £2,000,000 gold to arrive from New York, including Saturday's shipments.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

In yesterday's market for outside securities only two or three stocks were at all active. Most of the list was entirely neglected, and in no stock was the day's total large, even compared with recent figures. Liquidation of the urgent kind that led to so many sharp recessions early in the week seemed to have ceased, and in the absence of selling pressure, which brought buyers into the market on account of the relatively low prices at which stocks were offered, there was not enough demand for stocks to give any life to trading. Amalgamated Copper was the most conspicuous stock, speculation as to the dividend leading to considerable fluctuation in that stock, but the rest of the market moved over a narrower range. Closing prices showed much irregularity, net changes including a number of advances but probably still more numerous declines. In the afternoon the market showed a little more life accompanied by increased desire to sell. For a number of stocks offered it was very difficult to find bids, and some were offered down much below recent figures.

AMALGAMATED COPPER.—All day news was awaited in regard to the action of the Directors on the question of the second quarterly dividend, and the price of the stock fluctuated with the varying views taken as to what that action would probably be. That the action taken coincided with none of the forecasts was probably the best explanation of the very sharp reaction which occurred just at the close, when the amount of the dividend was announced. Early in the day, when predictions were made that the dividend would be 3 per cent., or at least that the regular quarterly dividend would be raised from 1½ to 2 per cent., covering by shorts and some buying for the long account forced Amalgamated from 78, the opening sale, to 81½. In the last fifteen minutes of trading the price fell back to 79, and the stock was offered there at the close. Net change for the day was an advance of three-quarters of a point. The regular quarterly dividend of 1½ per cent. and the extra dividend of one-half of 1 per cent. are payable Jan. 22.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA was in demand, and the preferred stock ended the day with a substantial net gain. Sales of this issue were made as high as 21⅝, and it closed at 21¼ bid, against 19⅜ bid at the close of the previous day. In the common stock the top price was 7¼, but it later reacted from this figure and closed unchanged, at 6½ bid. Buying of these stocks was apparently for the account of insiders, but some disposition was shown by others to purchase the preferred stock, the argument in favor of doing so being that the price of the stock has been so greatly cut down by recent declines that a reaction may reasonably be looked for.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS preferred was bid up to 43½ soon after the opening, but it was freely offered later, and the price went off to 41. It closed at 41 bid. The common stock advanced with the preferred early in the day, but declined with it afterward. It lost 1¾ points net.

STANDARD GAS common was offered all day without finding a purchaser. Final offerings of the stock were at 95.

INTERNATIONAL BANKING AND TRUST.—Many offerings were made of International Banking and Trust Company stock, but no sales were effected, as no bidders were found. Latest private sales of the stock were made at 148. Yesterday it was offered down to 132. These offerings were accompanied by rumors of the company being in some difficulty, but this was positively denied by friends of the company. A Director of the company said yesterday that it was in absolutely sound condition, and able to pay off at a moment's notice every cent of its deposits. He attributed the selling of the stock to forced liquidation of a number of loans in which part of the collateral was International Banking and Trust Company stock.

LORILLARD preferred was offered down to 112 without finding a purchaser.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 21.—At a rule to-day's fluctuations were narrow. There was a somewhat firmer tone in the higher-priced home specialties, and not only in these but in lower-priced stocks a great deal of investment buying of small lots was seen. Bell Telephone was up 5, at 345; Mergenthaler was up 5, at 195; United States Oil lost ¾, to 25¼; Parrot lost ¾, to 35½; Amalgamated ran up 2¼, to 81; Centennial lost ½, to 15½, rallying to 16¼; Montana gained 4, to 265; Gold Dredging was off 1, at 2; Chicago and West Michigan fives were 1 lower, at 97; North Michigan fives sold at 89; Boston Elevated yielded 1, to 99; Osceola was off 1, at 67; Dominion Coal lost ½, to 41½; Bingham was up ¾, at 10¾. The market closed dull and generally heavy in tone.

The local banks are all in stronger positions than they were a week ago, and are more disposed to loan on the right collateral than for some time past, although none of them is at all inclined to help out speculative "bargain hunters." All the loans at the Clearing House to-day were made at 6 per cent., and New York funds sold at 16 2-3 and 5 cents' discount.

On call, money rules from 6 to 7 per cent. to the strongest borrowers. Collateral loans of the very highest order are being placed at 6 per cent. for six months and 5 per cent. for a year. Some mercantile paper is being sold to out-of-town banks at 6@6½ per cent. City banks are taking care of their customers at 6 per cent. and upward.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 21.—Renewed weakness was developed in the stock market to-day. Lehigh Valley receded from 24½ to 23¾; Cambria Steel, 18⅝ to 17¾; Electric Company of America, 12 to 11½; Asphalt, 12¼ to 11½; Marsden, 10¾ to 9⅞; United Gas, 147 to 145; Union Traction, 36¼ to 35; Philadelphia Traction, 94 to 93; Weisbach Light, 36 to 35; Choctaw preferred, 42 to 41½; Consolidated Lake Superior, 16¾ to 16; Philadelphia Company, 36 to 35, and Electric Storage Battery, 78 to 62½. The pressure was not severe, but the buying power was extremely limited, owing to the fact that brokers insisted upon purchases being paid for in full. The selling of Union Traction alone was significant. It was believed a big block—probably for a New York holder—was being liquidated.

The close was weak at these bid and asked prices:

PLANS FOR LARGE BUILDINGS.

Rush to File Them Before the New Code Goes Into Effect.

The rush continues to get plans on file at the Building Department before the new Building Code goes into effect to-morrow. The great number of plans that have been placed on record during the last ten days have been, for the most part, for dwellings and tenements, but yesterday's list was noteworthy in that it contained several sets of plans for operations of a more extensive character—two new Broadway buildings, a store and loft structure on upper Park Avenue, and an apartment house on Broadway near One Hundred and First Street.

Frederick Ayer of Boston submitted plans for a twelve-story brick store and office building, to be erected at 599 and 601 Broadway, extending to Mercer and Houston Streets. The building will front 50 feet on Broadway, 50 feet on Houston Street, and 127 feet on Mercer Street. A. J. Manning, architect for Mr. Ayer, says the cost of construction will be in the neighborhood of $500,000.

The southeast corner of Broadway and Thirteenth Street will be improved by the erection of a twelve-story brick and limestone business building for Henry Corn, at an estimated cost of $350,000. Robert Maynicke is the architect. William W. Astor recently filed plans for a similar building, to be built at a cost of $400,000, on the opposite corner, which takes in the Star Theatre.

The block on the west side of Park Avenue, from One Hundred and Thirtieth to One Hundred and Thirty-first Street, will undergo a radical change, in the proposed construction of two six-story brick and terra cotta store and loft buildings by Charles Ward Hall, at an estimated cost of $220,000, from plans by McGuire & Hall. Thomas McLaughlin will expend $120,000 for the construction of a seven-story brick and stone elevator flats, 70 by 90, on the west side of Broadway, south of One Hundred and First Street. The plans are by Architects Neville & Bagge.

Street Openings and Improvements.

APARTMENT HOUSE BURNED

WORK OF SIX MONTHS UNDONE

Duties of the Firemen Performed Under Dangerous Conditions—Street Railway Traffic Blocked.

The large seven-story apartment house in course of construction on the northwest corner of Madison Avenue and Ninety-seventh Street was gutted by fire at noon yesterday. Work that had occupied six months in the doing was undone by the flames in an hour, and it will be necessary to level the building to the third floor, at least. That the fire occurred at the hour it did was fortunate, for the thirty-five workmen engaged in the processes of completing the building had gathered on the ground floor to eat their noonday meal. This made their escape easy. Had the fire started an hour before or an hour later it surely would have been accompanied with loss of life.

It is believed that the fire started from a plumber's furnace. There were several plumbers employed there, and the blaze started back of the tool house on the second floor, where they were working. The house was partly floored and lathed, but yet unplastered, so that the whole structure became a giant flue for the flames, and they tore through it with lightning-like rapidity.

A sudden blast of flame and smoke startled the workmen on the ground floor, where they had just gathered from various parts of the house. They ran into the street, one of their number turning in the first alarm from Park Avenue and Ninety-seventh Street. As soon as the first company responded the firemen turned in three more alarms, making four in all, and bringing out, besides sixteen companies, Chief Croker and ambulances from three hospitals.

The firemen found great difficulty in fighting the flames from the fact that there is no water tower in the neighborhood. Numerous lines of hose were buckled together and dragged to the top of the house, and at various times the firemen found themselves in very precarious positions, especially when the floors were burned away and they were left clinging to the walls that threatened every moment to topple into the street after their supports had been burned away. In an hour, despite the twenty lines of hose and the energetic work of the men in charge of them, the building, which extends 100 feet on both streets, was open to the sky, except at the southwest end on Ninety-seventh Street.

An immense crowd of people watched the conflagration from all points, and the police reserves from the East Eighty-eighth, East Sixty-seventh, and East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street Stations were called out to keep the people in check. At one time the flames threatened to involve the building at 1,408 Madison Avenue, which was separated from the burning building only by a narrow alley. The work of the firemen saved this building, however, but the tenants were afterward ordered to vacate their apartments by the Building Apartment Inspectors on account of the shaky condition of the adjoining walls. So fierce were the flames at one time that they leaped clear across Madison Avenue and burned the fences surrounding the lots there. There are several other uncompleted buildings in the vicinity, but these were not affected.

Not only was the interior of the building destroyed, but the stonework that runs up to the third floor was so badly cracked and scorched that it will have to be replaced. After the fire had burned itself out it was seen that the Madison Avenue wall was dangerously out of plumb, and the north wall abutting on the building at 1,408 Madison Avenue was in danger of toppling over. Strict police lines were at once established at Ninety-sixth and Ninety-eight Streets by Inspector Kane, and neither cars, vehicles, nor pedestrians were allowed to go through. Deputy Building Commissioner Dooner and a force of workmen were soon on the scene, and the latter were put to work taking down and shoring up portions of the walls.

While this is going on traffic on Madison Avenue between Ninety-sixth and Ninety-eighth Streets will be entirely interrupted. The Madison Avenue cars are transferring their passengers at these points up and down town, and travelers have to walk through Fifth or Park Avenue in order to get around the dangerous point and reach the points of transfer. It was said last night that traffic would not be resumed until this morning at the earliest.

Policeman Gordon of the East One Hundred and Fourth Street station was first on the scene of the fire, and helped the tenants of the adjoining building to get out. There was only one casualty. Mrs. Emily Johnson, forty-eight years old, who lived at 1,408 Madison Avenue, was so frightened by the fire that she fainted and had to be carried from her apartments. An ambulance surgeon revived her and she was taken to the house of friends in the neighborhood. Sparks from the burning building flew in the window of the second story apartment at 1,437 Madison Avenue and set fire to some bed clothing which was spread over a chair. Mrs. Levy, who lives in the house, discovered the burning mass and threw it promptly down the air shaft, where it was extinguished by firemen.

The burned building was owned by Morris Mandelstein of 385 Pleasant Avenue, and the damage is estimated at upward of $40,000. Edward Smith of 160 Third Avenue was the builder. On Mr. Mandelstein's order he last night put his workmen to helping the men from the building department in taking down the walls that are deemed dangerous. The loss is covered by insurance, the policies aggregating $175,000.

CHAPLAIN PETERS CRITICISED.

Protest Against Pro-Boer Meeting in Ninth Regiment Armory.

The Sunday sermons instituted at the Ninth Regiment Armory by Chaplain Madison C. Peters, it was reported yesterday, may lead to trouble. Those present at the services last Sunday declare that instead of a sermon there was a pro-Boer meeting, in which Gen. James R. O'Beirne took part, and that in consequence complaint has been made to Gen. McCoskry Butt, who commands the First Brigade, of which the Ninth is a part, by British sympathizers, who declare the Ninth Regiment Armory is being illegally used.

Gen. Butt was asked yesterday whether he had preferred any charges or taken any action against Chaplain Peters in respect to the meeting. "I have not," he said, "and cannot until I have received official notice of a violation of the code in the matter of the use of the armories. Of course, if there has been any violation of the military laws in this case, I should have to see that proper action is taken."

Gen. Butt declined to say what such action would be, but those who know his feelings in the matter say that he would not hesitate to rebuke the Chaplain very sharply.

Chaplain Peters, when seen yesterday, said:

"I had no intention of violating the Military Code. I did not know what Gen. O'Beirne would say when he rose to speak. I knew him as a well-known speaker, and as a soldier popular among soldiers. I had no idea that anything he might say would be disagreeable to anybody. Gen. O'Beirne was the first speaker I had selected to speak at these meetings. Perhaps I made a mistake in not doing all the speaking myself."

"But you are blamed for indorsing his remarks when he had concluded," said the reporter.

"Oh, my remarks were only a bit of pleasantry for the occasion," said Dr. Peters. "They did not carry with them any indorsement of the speaker's sentiments."

Col. Morris said yesterday that he had taken no action in the matter, as he had heard of no complaints. However, the meeting for next Sunday has been postponed, and it is said that perhaps no more will be held in the armory, as there is said to be objection to turning the armory into a church. Dr. Peters says the postponement is only on account of the Christmas season.

Court Clerk Denounces a Fraud.

It was stated by J. Lewis Lyon, Calendar Clerk, Supreme Court, yesterday that he had received intimation from a reputable lawyer that some person had been to most of the lawyers' offices in the down-town district soliciting subscriptions for a Christmas box to be presented to the clerks in the different parts of the court. Mr. Lyon denounced the scheme as a fraud got up for the sole benefit of the individual who has been collecting and altogether without the knowledge of the Supreme Court Clerks or other officials.

LEGAL NOTES.

CONTROLLER COLER IN CONTEMPT.—Justice Beekman, in Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday, granted a motion made to punish Controller Coler for contempt of court for his failure to obey a writ of peremptory mandamus issued on Nov. 29 requiring him to draw his warrant on the City Chamberlain for $134,114.50 to pay a judgment obtained two years ago by Walston H. Brown, as received of Brown, Howard & Co. Justice Beekman said that while in a legal sense the Controller had been guilty of contumacy such as rendered him amenable to the law for a contempt of court, it should be said that his reluctance to comply with the writ had been due to some apprehension that legal complications and possibly loss to the city might result should the warrant be issued, because of a letter he received on Jan. 25, 1898, signed by Oliver J. Ackley, describing himself as attorney for D. D. McBean and Clinton Beckwith, stating that his clients, McBean and Beckwith of the firm of Brown, Howard & Co., had claims and liens upon the judgment, and other judgments against the city, aggregating $125,000. The Controller was notified in the letter not to pay the judgment until these claims were adjusted. Protest was also made in the letter against payment of percentages to an attorney, because they were excessive, and the receiver had no right to agree to them. Justice Beekman says the Controller's apprehension was quite unfounded. If these claims were well founded the redress of the parties, he said, must be against the receiver. Time is given the Controller to obey the writ.

APPEAL AFTER UNANIMOUS AFFIRMANCE.—John H. Cronin, in his suit against William Lord, as executor of his deceased wife, Martha A. Cronin, claimed that at the time of her death his wife owed him $9,000 upon two promissory notes, one for $4,000, dated Nov. 30, 1892, and one for $5,000, dated July 5, 1894. The defense was that Mrs. Cronin's signature, if she signed these notes, was obtained by fraud, duress, or compulsion, and that they were without consideration. A judgment on a verdict in favor of the defendant was unanimously affirmed by the Appellate Division of the Third Department. Upon further appeal the Court of Appeals held, by Judge O'Brien, in directing an affirmance, that the question of law, whether there was any evidence supporting or tending to sustain a finding or verdict on the question of fact submitted to the jury, was not reviewable in the Court of Appeals—the judgment having been affirmed unanimously by the Appellate Division—whatever might be the form of the exception, whether to a ruling submitting the case to the jury, refusing a non-suit, or to a charge that there was or was not evidence, as the case might be, to warrant a finding or verdict on the disputed question of fact as to fraud or duress.

STOCK CORPORATION SHARES BEQUEATHED IN TRUST.—The late Jason Rogers, who died in the Town of Westchester in 1868, bequeathed shares of the capital stock of the Rogers Locomotive and Machine Works, in trust for the benefit of his children during their lives, with remainders to their issue. After this corporation had continued business until 1893, paying large dividends on the stock, it sold its plant, including machinery and its raw materials, to a new corporation, known as the Rogers Locomotive Company. The purchase price was to be paid for in the capital stock of such new company, in the proportion of ten shares of the new stock for one share of the old. After making this sale, the old company remained possessed of other property which it had accumulated of various kinds, amounting in value to about $3,000,000. In a proceeding for an accounting before the Surrogate of Westchester County, by Thomas Rogers and William Cauldwell, as trustees, the Court of Appeals, affirming the Appellate Division of the Second Department, has now decided (opinion by Judge Haight) that the Surrogate had properly held, under the circumstances appearing, that the stock in the new company received on the sale of the plant of the old company, together with the first dividend declared after such sale of 100 per cent., being the amount of the capital stock of the old company, should be retained by the trustees as capital of the trust, and that all of the other property of the old corporation was profits, to which the life tenants were entitled.

QUESTION OF CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE WAS FOR THE JURY.—The Edison General Electric Company, while engaged on Sept. 27, 1892, in furnishing a brewery with an electric light plant, and while its employes were loading a heavy piece of machinery on a freight elevator at the first floor of the building, they allowed a heavy iron roller, which was being used to transfer the machinery from the floor of the building to the platform of the elevator, to fall upon Carl Burk, a young men in the brewing company's employ, who was in the cellar below. The injuries thus inflicted having been fatal, an action was brought by William M. Hoes, as Public Administrator and administrator de bonis non, to recover from the electric company damages for Burk's death. A judgment for plaintiff on the first trial was reversed by the late General Term of the Supreme Court, upon the ground that it was not proved that Burk was free from contributory negligence. An affirmance by the First Appellate Division of a judgment dismissing the complaint on the second trial, has now been reversed by the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Judge O'Brien. The Court held that, as Burk, who used the opening through the elevator shaft as a passageway, had before entering the shaft looked up, and had seen that the elevator was stationary at a floor about thirty-five feet above, his concluding that the passage through the shaft was safe under the circumstances, was not so inconsistent with common prudence as to make his entering the shaft contributory negligence as matter of law, and prevent the submission of the question to the jury. Chief Judge Parker dissented, on the ground that Burk, having, without permission or knowledge of the defendant, unnecessarily and voluntarily placed himself in an obviously dangerous position, should have been held to have assumed the risks incident thereto.

WAR ON DOGS IN THE PARK.

Order to Shoot Them Illegal, Says the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

War à outrance on stray dogs in Central Park has been declared by the Park Board, and is being waged relentlessly with shotguns in the hands of the keepers of the menagerie, two of whom, Head Keeper Peter Shannon and Keeper Snyder, are dead shots, as many an ownerless or prodigal bow-wow has found to his cost during the past few weeks. The shooting is going on despite a warning from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals that this method of ridding the Park of dogs is in violation of the law, and the society purposes to take vigorous action in the matter.

"This dog nuisance," said President Clausen yesterday, "is getting too bad for anything, and it has got to stop. Central Park has become the happy stamping ground for all the stray dogs in the city, apparently. In my early morning strolls I see dozens of them making for the exits, driven by hunger, I suppose, to prowl the streets, but they come back at night. A large number of them have lived so long in the Park that they have practically become wild animals, and are a nuisance and a danger to the public. Their numbers are constantly increasing.

"The reason for this is that since the police were taken from the control of the Park Department they have been lax in their duty in respect to clearing out stray dogs. This was only to be expected. Prior to 1898 we had a pound where all stray dogs were taken to.

"I drew the attention of the Police Captain to the nuisance, and called upon him to do something. Nothing was done, however, and the board finally decided to take the matter into its own hands. I instructed Director Smith of the menagerie to arm the keepers with guns, and make early morning raids. In this way several dogs were shot.

"Then the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals sent an officer to the Director of the menagerie and informed him that he was violating the law. I immediately stopped the raids and wrote to the society requesting them to clear out the dogs. This was two months ago. No reply was received, and no action was taken, so we have organized the battues again, and are shooting the dogs on sight. Not indiscriminately, though. It sometimes happens, of course, that valuable dogs that have been lost make their way into the Park. The keepers know a good dog when they see one, and take charge of it for a time to see if it will be claimed."

Mr. Clausen said that the keepers had been shooting five or six dogs a week on the average.

Superintendent Charles H. Hankinson of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals said: "We were informed that dogs were being shot in the Park, but when we sent to warn the Park officials, they denied the shooting. They have no right to shoot them, and in ordering the employes to do so President Clausen is violating the law relative to the firing of weapons within the city limits.

"The law of the State is that any person who unjustifiably injures, maims, mutilates, or kills any animal, whether wild or tame, belonging to himself or another, or who causes, procures, and permits the injuring or killing of such animals, is guilty of a misdemeanor. The legal definition of the word cruelty is 'any act, omission, or negligence whereby unjustifiably physical pain, suffering, or death is caused or permitted.' The legal definition of the word animal is 'any living creature except a human being.'

"A man came here the other day and complained that a dog had been shot at in the Park, but that the shooter missed it, whereupon a Park employe killed it with blows with a club or some such weapon. If there are dogs there that are dangerous and attack people, or that are alleged to be mad, killing them is justifiable under the law. Still, it has to be done in a humane manner. The fact that dogs may be running about the grass or walks is no justification whatever for putting them to death. The claim that discrimination is used does not excuse the shooting. A low-bred cur that happens to be lost may be prized as highly by its master as any dog of high degree.

"The Park Board has exclusive jurisdiction over the Park, and it is for them to clear the place of stray dogs by capturing them and then turning them over to us. A man who can get near enough to a dog to kill it with a club is near enough to capture it. We cannot catch them. Our wagons are unable to enter the Park under the rules excluding such vehicles. But the authorities have a pound in the sheep fold where stray dogs are taken. There our wagons call to fetch them. If the dogs are as numerous in the Park as is claimed, which I very much doubt, we will send our wagons to the pound twice a day, if asked to do so. We have always sent a wagon when requested to, and, moreover, regular calls are made. There is therefore no occasion whatever for shooting the animals.

"The difficulty about the complaints of shooting hitherto has been the refusal of those who make them to go to the trouble of appearing in court to testify. Besides, they were rendered doubtful by the denials of the Park officials. Since, however, President Clausen himself admits that dogs are being shot, steps will be taken to obtain evidence in a definite case, and then we shall enforce the law with all our energy and power."

NOTABLE LAWYER'S DEATH.

Christopher Fine Was One of the Last Survivors of a Famous School of Attorneys.

Christopher Fine, who died on Wednesday at his residence, 230 West Twenty-first Street, in his seventy-fourth year, was one of the last survivors of a famous school of lawyers in this city. He was a typical advocate, relying for success largely upon a fervid style of oratory, which was very effective with juries. His arguments were aided by his personal appearance, which was dignified and impressive. He was a large man, with a leonine countenance. He wore a great mass of hair, which in his later years was almost snow white in color, as were his mustache and imperial.

Mr. Fine was of Scotch-Irish lineage, and was born at Finesville, N. J., which was named after one of his ancestors. In his young manhood he taught school and acted as tutor to pay his expenses through college. Coming to this city upon his graduation, he entered the law office of McCunn & Moncrief, and, after the prescribed course of study, he was admitted to the bar, about fifty years ago. He practiced his profession continuously from that time until illness and advancing age compelled him, about a year ago, to close his office, at 265 Broadway. For the last nine months of his life he was confined to his bed.

It is a singular fact that the death of the senior member of the firm with which Mr. Fine began his legal studies afforded the opportunity for his most famous victory in the courts. John H. McCunn in time became a Judge of the Superior Court, and was on the bench at the time of the exposure of the Tweed ring. Judge McCunn was accused, together with Justices Barnard and Cardozo of the Supreme Court, of committing various violations of his oath of office in the interest of the ring, and while his conduct was under investigation he died suddenly, under circumstances which indicated that he had committed suicide. He left a will, drawn by himself, which was contested by Mr. Fine, as counsel for the heirs, on the ground that it unlawfully suspended the power of alienation of the estate. The contest was successful, the courts finally declaring the will invalid, and the property, valued at upward of $600,000, was distributed among the heirs. The litigation lasted ten years, and Mr. Fine's fee for breaking the will was $200,000.

It was as the attorney in damage suits for the victims of accidents that Mr. Fine was best known. A verdict of $25,000 for the loss of a man's arm which he obtained, and which was sustained by the Court of Appeals, established a record for that kind of litigation in this State. It is said that he had for many years an annual income of from $20,000 to $25,000 from this class of cases, and that it might have been much larger had he chosen to employ "ambulance chasers" and use other methods now in vogue among some attorneys who make a specialty of damage suits against corporations.

Mr. Fine was for many years attorney for Edward S. Stokes. He never engaged in criminal practice. He was never very active in politics, though he was a member of Tammany Hall for many years. About twenty-five years ago he ran for the Assembly on the Tammany ticket in the Ninth Assembly District and was defeated by the County Democracy candidate.

Mr. Fine is survived by a widow and five married and two unmarried daughters, all of whom reside in this city.

MR. FIELDING ACQUITTED.

After being out only fifteen minutes the jury in the case of Robert Fielding, ex-Deputy Commissioner of Public Works in Brooklyn, charged while in office with auditing fraudulent bills, returned a verdict yesterday afternoon of not guilty.

In his summing up District Attorney Steele denied that there was any politics in the prosecution of the case. The verdict caused very little excitement. Among those who congratulated Fielding on his acquittal were ex-Commissioner of Public Works Theodore B. Willis and Samuel D. Morris, formerly District Attorney. Morris wished Fielding a merry Christmas. Fielding took his acquittal quietly.

BIG ELECTION BET PAID.

Robert Furey's $20,000 Handed to Joseph A. McGarry.

Ex-Alderman Arthur Heaney shortly after noon yesterday walked into the office of Joseph A. McGarry at 186 Remsen Street and laid down a package, on the band about which was written "$34,000."

"There's your money, Joe," said Heaney.

"Thank you," said McGarry.

It was the payment by the stakeholder of the big bet of $14,000 to $20,000 made by McGarry with Robert Furey that the entire Kings County Democratic ticket would not be elected. McGarry, who is a brother of Councilman John J. McGarry, won the bet through the defeat of their uncle, J. Morrissey Gray, the Democratic candidate for Register. It was the largest political bet ever made in Brooklyn, it is said.

The money, as turned over to McGarry, was in one-thousand, five-hundred, and one-hundred dollar bills. He did not count the bills, but redeposited them in the bank. The payment of the bet was delayed until the soldier vote was heard from. Only ten such votes were returned to Kings County.

MEETS HUSBAND'S OTHER WIFE.

Neither Complains, So Policeman Accuses Criscillo of Bigamy.

Owing to his hazy ideas on the matrimonial laws of Italy and the United States, Luigi Criscillo of 63 Sullivan Street was held for trial yesterday in Centre Street Court on a charge of bigamy. Criscillo came to this country nine years ago, leaving a wife and two children in Italy. He was married last January by Alderman Smith to Miss Fortuna Barretto, who lived next door to him on Sullivan Street.

Wife No. 1 arrived from Italy yesterday and Criscillo was sent for from the Barge Office. He was very angry at his first wife for coming over and asked the authorities to send her back again, explaining that he had another wife here and did not want his first one. He was arrested. In Centre Street Court he was confronted by both his wives, who seemed delighted to become acquainted with each other and chatted pleasantly in Italian. Both wives produced their marriage certificates, but refused to make any charges against their husband. Wife No. 2 said that she would resign her husband to his former wife. She said that Criscillo had told her of his previous marriage before he married her, and that she thought the whole transaction was proper.

Policeman Graden charged Criscillo with bigamy.

FOREIGN.—The rush of volunteers to enlist in Great Britain shows no diminution. Sentiment in Germany seems to be veering to Great Britain. Winston Churchill, who was captured by the Boers, and who escaped, has reached Delagoa Bay. A pro-Boer meeting in Paris was broken up last night by the Socialists. The Duke of Westminster, said to have been the wealthiest man in the world, died of pneumonia yesterday at London. Andrew Carnegie has given £20,000 for swimming baths to Dunfermline. The French Chamber of Deputies yesterday sustained the Government policy by voting the provisional appropriation. It is said in Berlin that Prince Arenberg, who was court-martialed in German South Africa for killing a subordinate, fiendishly tortured his victim before he died. Dr. von Wittek has been appointed to head Austria's Council. The expulsion of Czechs from Thuringian States continues. The question of the next Republican candidate for Vice President is arousing interest throughout Europe. Benjamin Francis Conn Costelloe, Chairman of the Local Government Committee of the London Council, died yesterday. Opposition to the Franco-American reciprocity treaty's ratification may come from the French agricultural districts. More than forty Belgian school children were drowned yesterday by the breaking of the ice on the River Lys.—Pages 1 and 6.

ELEVEN CHILDREN KILLED

Burned to Death in a Christmas Rehearsal.

AT LEAST TWENTY-TWO AFIRE

With Costumes Aflame, They Rushed About Among 600 Pupils—Panic in the Auditorium.

Special to The New York Times.

QUINCY, Ill., Dec. 22.—Francis Parochial School, situated at Seventeenth and Vine Streets, this city, was the scene of a terrible disaster at 3 o'clock this afternoon. The school has between 500 and 600 pupils and a number of them had been drilled for a Christmas entertainment by Sister Theotama. This afternoon a dress rehearsal was given, to which all of the pupils of the school and the children of St. Aloysius Orphan Home hau been invited.

Laurena Menke, aged nine years, who was to impersonate a lamb in a tableaux of the birth of Christ, came in contact with the gaslight, and the cotton batting from her costume was at once enveloped in flames, which by running about in her wild frenzy, she communicated to the costumes of other girls, who, in turn, spread it still further among the children.

Father Andrew and the Sisters present rushed to the assistance of the children, and were badly burned, while eleven of their charges were burned to death and as many more may be fatally burned. But for their heroic fight against the fire the loss of life would have been still greater.

The dead are: Eleora Wavering, Carlotta Middendorf, Bernardino Freund, Mamie Feutterer, Mamie Hickey, Mary Althoff, Mena Friburg, Marathe Werner, Olivia Tempo, Wilhelmina Kottendorf, and Josephine Bohne. The probably fatally burned are: Laura Menke, Celia Vonderhaar, Josie Borne, Lena Zeiger, Eleanora Timpe, and Helena Soebbing. Those painfully but not dangerously burned are: The Rev. Father Andrew, Sister Theotama, Sister Ephren, Sister Redulpha, and Sister Ludwiga, Prof. Musholt, and Janitor Koetters. Both Father Andrew and Sister Theotama are suffering from severe attacks of nervous prostration to-night.

The agonizing screams of the children and sisters which came from behind the curtain threw the children in the auditorium into a wild panic, and they immediately rushed down the stairs to the street in a state of wild excitement and gave the alarm in the near-by houses and stores. One boy, Oscar Kathman, aged nine years, leaped to the ground from a third-story window and received no other injury than a broken finger.

As soon as the children's cries were heard an alarm of fire was sent in, and as soon as the fire on the stage was put out the firemen turned their attention to removing the dead and dying from the building. A large number of physicians had been summoned to the scene, and they were closely followed by the hospital ambulances and the police patrol, in which those still living were taken to St. Mary's Hospital, and the dead were removed to the Morgue. The bodies of the dead were charred to a crisp, as were also the bodies of some of those in whom there was still life.

Little Bernardina Freund reached the foot of the stairs with all of her clothing burned off. She ran into the arms of a man she met there, and crying out, "My name is Bertie Freund," died.

Large crowds congregated around the school building in an instant after the alarm was given. The scenes that were witnessed as the bodies were borne out to the ambulances on litters were heartrending. Women fainted and strong men turned their eyes from the awful sights. Parents of some of the unfortunate little ones were present to make the scene all the more painful.

KLONDIKER SUED FOR DIVORCE.

Mrs. Oliver, Wife of a Pullman Official, After a Futile Search for Gold, Is Fighting in Court.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—The wife of W. T. Oliver, assistant auditor of the Pullman Company, because of her husband's insomnia and other ailments, feared he might lose his position, and decided in 1898 to go to the frozen gold fields of Alaska. She arrived in Dawson City Aug. 4 with 45 cents.

The guide of the party, F. G. Danstrum, was stricken with typhoid fever, and lay in his tent without medical aid, as doctors charged $18 a visit. All of the party save Mrs. Oliver left him. She staid with the sick man and nursed him to a partial restoration of his health. It was then too late to dig for gold. She sold what provisions she had for a sum sufficient to pay her way back to Chicago and a guide to help her, who died soon after arriving.

Mrs. Oliver, when she landed at San Francisco, received a letter from her husband, it is said, telling her not to return to Chicago, but she did. Mr. Oliver filed a bill for divorce in the Superior Court. Mrs. Oliver filed a cross bill, asking for separate maintenance. The first count is on trial.

FIGHT FOR SERGEANT AT ARMS.

Belief at Albany that F. W. Johnston of Buffalo Will Win.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Dec. 22.—Frank W. Johnston of Buffalo probably will be chosen Sergeant at Arms of the Assembly of 1900. It is known that a man named Murphy of New York, who was backed by Charles Hess, a brother of Police Commissioner Jacob Hess, endeavored to get the appointment. It was said that Chairman Quigg was one of his supporters, and that Weeks, the Independent New York Assemblyman, would also lend his aid. This turned the current strongly in favor of the Buffalo candidate.

The tentative candidacy of Charles R. Hotaling of Bethlehem, Albany County, for the position is regarded only as a bid for the place of Principal Doorkeeper of the Assembly, which Johnston has held for two years past. Hotaling's chances are also affected according as Assemblyman Coughtry is successful or unsuccessful in getting the insurance Chairmanship.

WANT TO IMPEACH PINGREE.

Legislators Will Base Charges on Municipal Ownership Action.

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 22.—A number of anti-Pingree legislators, including Senators Davis, Atwood, Heald, and Sayre, and Representatives Chamberlain, McCall, and Gordon, held a conference here to-day to discuss the feasibility of impeaching Gov. Pingree for his connection with the McLeod municipal ownership measure.

This is the measure which passed the last Legislature by which Tom L. Johnson and R. T. Wilson of New York hoped to sell the Detroit Street Railway to the city for $17,500,000. No decision was reached, but it is said the plan will not be dropped.

The proposed process of securing an impeachment is to have a resolution introduced in the House preferring charges, and calling on the Senate to make an investigation.

KENTUCKY ELECTION LOTTERY.

Queer Method Provided by the Goebel Law to Determine a Contest Before the Legislature.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Attention has been directed by a Kentucky Republican to certain provision of the Kentucky election law, made by Goebel, who contests Taylor's right to be Governor. These may explain any apparent hesitation on the part of the Goebelites to try the experiment of a contest before the Legislature.

The law provides a strange plan for deciding a contest. When a contest is to be made for Governor or Lieutenant Governor, a board must be formed. The Senate is to select, by lot, three of its members, and the House is to select, also by lot, eight of its members. Of the eleven so chosen seven are to have the power to act. In making the selection, the names of all the Senators and all the Representatives in the Legislature are to be written on separate slips of paper, which are to be rolled in balls and placed in a box, from which, after the contents have been well shaken, the names are to be drawn. The persons whose names are drawn shall be the Election Board to determine who is to be Governor or Lieutenant Governor.

The lottery thus provided for may turn out to be unfortunate for the Goebelites, and they are not quite sure that they would do well to run any risk with it. It is true that the committee or board might be all Democrats, or it might be entirely Republican. If it were all Democratic, the Goebelites would not be sure of a decision in their favor, because all the Democrats are not Goebel Democrats. If it were all Republican, there is no chance that it would decide the case in Goebel's favor.

IS BUTLER A REPUBLICAN?

Senator's Critics Say He Has No Future as a Populist.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Evidently with the purpose of "smoking out" Senator Butler, Populist, of North Carolina, the report has been circulated here that he has about concluded, but has not announced, his determination no longer to affiliate with the Populists or the Democrats in the Senate, but to cast his lot with the Republicans.

Senator Butler could not be found to affirm or deny this story, but those who criticise him say that it has been apparent that he is no longer in sympathy with the Democrats, and has no future as a Populist in North Carolina.

Senator Butler yesterday mailed a circular letter to the Populist National Committeemen, asking them a number of questions the answers to which will determine the plans of the Populists with reference to the campaign of 1900

TO DIVIDE OLD LIBRARY SPACE.

Senate and House May Each Get Fourteen More Rooms.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—It is probable that as soon as Congress reassembles a resolution will be passed by the House to concur with the Senate in the division between the two houses of the space in the Capitol Building vacated by the Library of Congress.

The Senate desires to divide the space equally by a line drawn east and west, and will convert its share into committee rooms. The Committee on Rules of the House has the matter under consideration, and Speaker Henderson, Mr. Payne, and Mr. Dalzell have inspected the place. It is contemplated to fourteen committee rooms could be made for the use of the Senate, and fourteen for the House. The additioned rooms are sadly needed by both houses, and it is thought that a proposition to establish them will be favorably received.

When the Library of Congress moved out it was stipulated in an appropriation bill that the space should be used for no purpose whatever until Congress should dispose of it. In the last session it was proposed to locate the Capitol restaurants in the space, but the plan was not carried out. Another proposition for the utilization of the space is to establish a reference library as a branch of the Congressional Library. This has been recommended by Librarian Putnam in a recent report to the House and Senate.

POSTAL RECORDS NOT WANTED.

The Congressional Library Does Not Want the 12,000 Volumes.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The Congressional Library is about to return to the Post Office Department the old records of that department. These half-forgotten books were disentombed when the department moved to its new building. Nobody knew exactly what to do with them, and it was finally decided that the library authorities might find them of historic value.

They were presented to the library accordingly. The records now occupy a room by themselves. They are packed in a solid mass across the room breast-high. The distance past the pile is 100 feet. They weigh twenty tons, and there are 12,000 volumes in the unassorted mass.

The library authorities received the gift with mingled feelings, and have been wondering what to do with it ever since. A little investigation showed that there was nothing suitable for the uses of the library in the collection, and the room is needed.

FARNHAM MEMORIAL LIBRARY.

To be Erected in Dublin, N. H., by a New York Woman.

Special to The New York Times.

DUBLIN, N. H., Dec. 22.—Mrs. H. P. Farnham of New York, a Summer resident here, has presented the town with a public library building to cost $20,000, to be called the Farnham Memorial Library, in memory of her late husband. A St. Louis architect has designed the building, and work on the foundation has begun.

In it will be placed what books remain of what is said to have been the first free public library in the United States. This was the Dublin Juvenile Library, founded by the Rev. Dr. L. W. Leonard in 1825. The institution was supported by contributions from the several school districts of this town, and was free to all inhabitants.

MAY ADVANCE HAT PRICES.

Eastern Manufacturers Seek to Form a New Trust.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., Dec. 22.—An effort is now being made to induce the leading hat manufacturers of this city, Fall River, Mass., and other Eastern cities to join a trust which will differ materially from any now organized. The object of the trust will be the advancement of prices, but every member of the combination will have full charge of the factory which he now controls and of the profits of the same, but all factories must have a uniform price for goods of an equivalent quality. If the combination is successful, all goods will be advanced from $1 to $3 a dozen, according to quality.

A secret conference of those interested in the trust was held a few days ago in New York. Although those who attended the meeting would not divulge the result, it was ascertained that severe opposition was met with by the refusal of a number of wealthy manufacturers, whose plants are in New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Another meeting will be held within a fortnight, and it is expected that those who have heretofore objected to the project will be brought into line.

Reports of State Banks.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Dec. 22.—The 208 State banks of discount reporting to the State Banking Department their condition at the close of business Dec. 4 have total resources of $366,304,182, as compared with $372,982,538 Sept. 20, a decrease of $6,678,856. The surplus is $18,489,983; undivided profits, $9,785,770; due depositors, $263,571,731.

SUGAR PRICES MAY BE LOWER.

Refiners Have Found It Impossible to Prevent the Most Active Competition.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Sugar refiners admit their inability to uphold card prices, and with the beginning of the new year the "equity" plan of selling the commodity will become a thing of the past. All sugar will be sold henceforth at competitive rather than established rates.

"This information," says The Modern Grocer, "will be a great surprise to the grocery trade throughout the country, for the immense capital invested in the combined sugar refineries has led every one to believe that the position taken by the refiners was impregnable."

The price of sugar has been slashed so mercilessly during the past year that the thinnest kind of a margin of profit is left. Meetings have been held and solemn compacts to make no cuts entered into, but all to no avail.

In all probability in the near future sugar will be sold even cheaper than ever before. Under the new plan, a thirty-day guarantee will be given on all sales made by the refiners.

SHORT ICE CROP IS EXPECTED.

Even in Maine the Rivers Are Still Open and a Moderate Winter Is Predicted.

Special to The New York Times.

BANGOR, Me., Dec. 22.—At this date Winter has not arrived in Maine, and the ground is as bare as in August, while the rivers are entirely free from ice. This is pleasing to the ice dealers here, for they argue that if Maine's Winter is to be short, that of New York must be still shorter, so that there can be but little ice in the Hudson. A failure of the Hudson crop generally means brisk demand for Maine ice at high prices, but this year there is a surplus of about 1,000,000 tons of ice on the Hudson and 450,000 tons in Maine, and that in any event there can scarcely be a repetition of the famine of 1880. Furthermore, the ice trade is now practically controlled by one large corporation, the American Ice Company, which is able to so regulate the amount harvested, the distribution, and the prices that violent fluctuations are not likely to occur except under most unusual and unlooked-for circumstances. The corporation has many houses in Maine and in other States, and thus is able to get a crop in one section, even if there should be no ice at all in other localities.

In times past, as in 1880, ice has sold on the Penobscot as high as $4 a ton, and on several occasions for $2 a ton; but of late years the price has seldom gone above $1 a ton, and this year, with a great stock at all points, sales were made at Bangor of good ice as low as 35 and 40 cents a ton. The average for nine years has been about 75 cents a ton.

PAUPER GETS A PENSION.

Almshouse Inmate to Receive $3,993.60 Back Pay.

WILMINGTON, Del., Dec. 22.—Mrs. Alice McGonigle, who has been an inmate of the Newcastle County almshouse since 1884, today received notice that she had been allowed a pension of $12 per month, with back pay amounting to $3,993.60. Mrs. McGonigle had two sons in the Union Army during the civil war, and the pension is on account of their deaths.

NO MORE WILD WEST SHOWS.

The Government Will Not Permit Indians to be Used in That Way.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—A new departure in the policy of the Department of the Interior is emphasized by unequivocal refusals which have met all recent requests for loans of Indians for exhibition purposes. Secretary Hitchcock and Commissioner of Indian Affairs Jones have determined to stop the abuses of the privileges, and have so stated in a number of communications lately.

Mr. Jones said to-day: "There will be no more Indians permitted to leave their reservations for Wild West Exhibitions purposes. The consent of the Indian Bureau for such exhibitions cannot be secured unless they are planned on lines showing the progress in Indian education. The day when the departments permitted Indians to be let for Wild West shows and such affairs is past. Such shows demoralize the Indians, many of whom would dress in citizen's clothes and would otherwise conform to more civilized ways but for the money there is in continuing in their old customs."

AFTER MAINE LIQUOR SELLERS.

League Formed to Enforce the Prohibitory Law.

Special to The New York Times.

BANGOR, Me., Dec. 22.—The constituted authorities of Maine not having made much progress lately in the enforcement of the prohibitory liquor law, an organization known as the Maine Civic League, composed chiefly of clergymen and active men and women of their congregations, have taken the matter up and entered upon a vigorous warfare against the saloons. In Bath, Lewiston, Rockland, Waterville, and other places the movement has gathered considerable headway, and it is the avowed intention of the leaders of the league to carry the campaign into every city and town in the State. Many arrests have been made.

The usual punishment is a fine of $100 and costs, and in nearly every case the respondents appeal from the sentence of the municipal courts, taking the matter to the Supreme Court. By this means they secure a long delay in settlement, and sometimes a reduction of the fine.

Liquor law enforcement has been tried at intervals in every city in Maine, and to some extent the business is stifled in Portland and Lewiston—that is, driven under cover. In Bangor there has been no pretense of enforcing the law since 1878. There are about 185 open bars here, but very little drunkenness.

A PLUMBERS' SUPPLY TRUST.

After One Failure, Present Attempt Seems a Success.

Special to The New York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 22.—Negotiations are pending in New York which will probably lead to the absorption of the Ahrens & Ott Manufacturing Company by a gigantic combine of manufacturers of enameled bathtubs and plumbers' supplies in the United States. Theodore Ahrens, representing the Louisville firm, is now in New York at a conference of the leading manufacturers. There was a report current today that the firm had sold out for $1,000,000. When asked about the reported sale, Charles Ahrens said: "There has been no sale. The price is not large enough."

Mr. Ahrens admitted that the deal for a combine was on, saying:

"This is the second time the manufacturers have tried to get together. Five months ago we thought everything had been arranged, when suddenly the bottom dropped out. The present negotiations indicate that the combine will be effected. I have heard nothing to-day from our representative in New York, however."

Some time ago the Ahrens & Ott Manufacturing Company sold its solder pipe plant to the Central Foundry Company.

FIND DEATH IN THE SEA

Italian Hotel, Monastery, and Villas Slide Into the Water.

DEBRIS SINKS FOUR VESSELS

Rock Upon Which Buildings Stood Became Detached and Caused the Disaster—Loss of Life Is Heavy.

ROME, Dec. 22.—A terrible disaster took place this afternoon at Amalfi, the popular tourist resort on the Gulf of Salerno. About 2 o'clock an enormous rock, upon which stood the Cappuccini Hotel, slid bodily into the sea with a deafening roar, and without a moment's warning, carrying with it the hotel, the old Capuchin Monastery below, the Hotel Santa Calerina, and several villas.

Many people were buried in the debris, which crushed four vessels to the bottom of the sea, destroying their crews. The mass of earth which slipped was about 50,000 cubic yards.

The population is in a state of terror, fearing fresh calamities. Troops have arrived upon the scene and begun rescue work.

It is believed that the loss of life is heavy, including a number of monks and the occupants of the hotel. As yet it is impossible to ascertain the exact number.

Amalfi is a small but lively town of 7,000 inhabitants, situated at the entrance of a deep ravine, surrounded by imposing mountains and rocks of the most picturesque forms.

The Capuchin Monastery was founded in 1212 by Cardinal Pietro Capuano for the Cistercians, but came into possession of the Capuchins in 1583. The building, which stood in the hollow of the great rock that rose abruptly from the sea to a height of 230 feet, contained fine cloisters and a charming veranda, and offered magnificent points of view.

The town is mentioned for the first time historically in the sixth century, when it enjoyed the protection of the Eastern Emperors. In the twelfth century the sea began gradually to undermine the lower portions, and a terrible inundation in 1343 proved still more disastrous.

DROWN ON A HOLIDAY.

More Than Forty Belgian Children Break Through the Ice.

BRUSSELS, Dec. 22.—More than forty school children were drowned this afternoon in an ice accident at Frelinghem, near the French frontier. The school children of the district had been given a holiday, with permission to play on the frozen River Lys. When the merriment was at its height the ice broke suddenly and the children disappeared. A few were rescued half dead, but the majority were drowned. Thirty-six bodies have been recovered, but others are still missing.

The catastrophe spread consternation through the town, where nearly every family suffered loss.

CHRISTMAS GIFT FOR EMPLOYES.

American Express Company Will Give Each a $5 Gold Piece.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 22.—The executive officers of the American Express Company in this city have received instructions from the head office to make every person in the employ of the company a Christmas present of a $5 gold piece. There are 207 employes connected with the Boston office, but the Christmas gift is said to extend to all the employes of the company in the United States, of which there are about 30,000.

DIAMOND MATCH CHANGES.

One Director Resigns and Another May Follow His Example.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Clarence Buckingham has resigned his position as a Director of the Diamond Match Company. The resignation was accepted, and he has been succeeded by Mr. W. M. Graves, the general manager of the company.

The office of auditor was created, and the Secretary, H. C. Cranz, appointed to the position. The Assistant Secretary, R. E. Wirt, succeeds Mr. Cranz.

The retirement of Mr. Buckingham is publicly announced to be because of numerous other engagements. His friends say he was not dissatisfied with the management of the company.

It is now probable that George H. Webster may leave the directory at the end of the year.

GEORGE B. McCLELLAN'S CHUM.

Representative Stallings of Alabama His Constant Companion.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Representative McClellan, who has a companion in Congress with whom he is almost as intimate as he formerly was with Ermentrout of Pennsylvania, may lose him. His friend is Representative Stallings of Alabama, who aspires to be Governor of his State, and who may get the nomination if Gen. Shelley does not run off with it.

An observant writer for The Washington Times says of the acquaintance existing between McClellan and Stallings:

"Stallings and McClellan are like Damon and Pythias. They are inseparable. They walk together, they manage to sit side by side in the House, and they almost invariably dine together. There is only one time when they separate, and that is when McClellan enters society. Stallings does not care for society. While the New Yorker is dapper and always dressed in the height of fashion, the Alabaman is anything but a swell. His soft hat is as big as Bailey's or Champ Clark's, and he invariably wears a double-breasted sack coat. Stallings has a peculiar faculty of getting people out in the street when they talk with him—clear off the sidewalk and into the middle of the road. This is believed to have been acquired by his campaigning down in the Montgomery district, where the roads are narrow."

Swindler Sentenced in Norwalk.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Dec. 22.—Two young men were arrested here to-day on a charge of attempting to swindle local storekeepers. They gave their names and addresses as Thomas Reardon of 190 Broad Street, and Joseph A. Callahan of Clarence Street, Bridgeport. Callahan was sentenced to jail for thirty days. Reardon was discharged for lack of evidence.

IMPOSED ON SENATOR CULLOM.

Bill to Rehabilitate Deserters Was Introduced Before He Read It—Now Denounces the Measure.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Senator Cullom of Illinois is a man of generous impulse, prone to be too willing to oblige anybody who comes to him on behalf of "comrades" of the war of the rebellion. He introduced a bill at the very beginning of the session proposing to give an honorable discharge to all soldiers who had served sixty days and who were borne on the records as deserters. When asked about the bill, the appearance of which created a certain surprise, he expressed an opinion to the effect that after so long a time it seemed to be about right to let up on the deserters, particularly if they were in suffering or distress.

When it was explained to him that there are about 160,000 deserters to be accounted for, and that his bill gave the deserter who should be rehabilitated an advantage over the man of honest and continued service, in that all others except deserters must have served ninety days in order to be eligible for pensions, he thought, and his thinking worried him when it was stimulated by letters from hundreds of soldiers protesting against such an unjust and uncalled for discrimination in favor of deserters and bounty jumpers.

Now the Senator gives a different account of how he came to introduce the bill. To begin with, he denounces it and declares that it shall have an early and adverse report. He says that as he was entering the Senate Chamber some one handed him a bill with the request it be introduced. The Senator casually glanced at the measure, and, not realizing its scope, sent it to the desk. Later his attention was called to the matter, and he made a statement on the floor of the Senate in which he frankly admitted he had made a mistake, and he notified the members of the Military Committee he did not favor the bill and asked an unfavorable report on it.

This statement was not given wide circulation, and the Senator has received a quantity of protests from the old soldiers throughout the country, who claim the bill opens the way for bounty jumpers, deserters, and other dishonorably discharged soldiers to have their names placed on the pension rolls.

"THE TWILIGHT OF THE GOD."

Play Presented by Mrs. Gould Without the Consent of the Author or the Publishers.

While the private performance of "The Twilight of the God" in Mrs. George Gould's private theatre at her handsome home at Lakewood may not create any further sensation beyond the pale of society, the feelings engendered through the use of the play without the consent of either the author or the publishers, who have copyrighted the book of which "The Twilight of the God" forms a part, will not readily disappear. The book, which was originally published in Scribner's Magazine, is copyrighted by Charles Scribner's Sons. In its present form it is called "The Greatest Inclination," and has had quite a vogue.

Charles Scribner said yesterday afternoon to a reporter in reply to a query: "The play is the same that we have copyrighted, and it is true that our permission to produce it was not asked. If it had been we most assuredly would have given it, for the performance was an amateur one and given privately. We certainly would not have withheld our consent if it had been asked, and we believe that the failure to ask it was an oversight. It is said that Mrs. Wharton is annoyed because she was not invited to the function, but I can hardly believe that is so, for her position in society is fully as good as that of Mrs. Gould. I believe that she is surprised to learn that her work was performed without consulting her, that is all.

"This book, which we published last Spring, is not her first literary venture. Previously she, in collaboration with Mr. Codman of Boston, wrote a book entitled 'Decoration of Homes.'"

Mrs. Edith Wharton is an intimate friend of Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, who was a prominent figure in the cotillion at the Lakewood function, and one of the leaders of the ultra-fashionable set of Newport. She said last night that the fact that she was ignored by Mrs. Gould in the invitations did not concern her in the least, but that she felt hurt that her work was produced without her knowledge or consent, which could have been obtained without the slightest difficulty. Mrs. Wharton received credit for her work on the printed programme.

EXPENSES IN THE KLONDIKE.

Hospital Charges Are $35 Per Day—Milk Costs $4 a Quart.

SUFFERN, N. Y., Dec. 22.—David Fox, Jr., son of the proprietor of the Mountain View House, has just returned from the Klondike. He brought with him a few nuggets which are valued at $150 and a quantity of gold dust, the value of which cannot be estimated until it is assayed. Mr. Fox formed the first surveying and engineering company in Dawson City, under the title of Fox & Barwell, the latter being a Dominion land surveyor.

Mr. Fox was ill with typhoid fever at Dawson, and treatment in a private hospital cost him $35 per day. He was obliged to pay $4 per quart for cow's milk. He will return to Dawson in February, remaining there until June, when he will go to Cape Nome and engage in the surveying and mining business, and also look after the property interests he has there.

POLITICAL TANGLE IN ALABAMA

Man Who Under Peculiar Conditions Gave Up Office Wants It Back.

Special to The New York Times.

GENEVA, Ala., Dec. 22.—A peculiar political tangle has developed here. Several weeks ago the Probate Judge was handed the resignation of Circuit Court Clerk Purtis, and he notified the Governor's office accordingly. This was followed by applications for appointment to the office. Two or three weeks later the Probate Judge notified the Governor to withhold appointment, as there was no vacancy.

It now is alleged that a citizen who wanted the office plied Purtis with liquor and induced him, while under its influence, to leave the country by representing to him that he had killed a man. Purtis signed his resignation, so the story goes, received $300, and went to Florida. When he learned how he had been tricked he took steps to recover his office. The case has been referred to the courts.

Escape Death on a Trestle.

Special to The New York Times.

LAWRENCEBURG, Ind., Dec. 22.—Frank Gaines and his little child, while crossing a Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern Railway trestle, 200 feet long, heard the whistle of a locomotive, and the next instant saw a train coming around a curve, a short distance away. Two feet away was a cross-beam, which extended about a foot beyond each side of the trestle. Standing on the extreme end of this beam he steadied himself and the child while the train swept past.

SCHOOL BILL'S NEW FOES

GOVERNOR'S WISHES IGNORED

Strong opposition it is reported has developed within the Republican State organization to the proposed plan of the Unification Commission, of placing the public school system of the State under one head, which is favored by Gov. Roosevelt. The Governor is reported to be greatly interested in the idea, and wants to see it realized at the coming session of the Legislature. He will not find this an easy matter, as, according to a well-grounded report which was in circulation last night, Senator Platt and the organization leaders had determined to oppose the passage of the measure.

The plan proposed has for its object the placing of the schools under a Chancellor of the State Board of Regents. Should it become a law, it would affect the tenure of office of many employes in the office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction. Superintendent Charles R. Skinner and Deputy Superintendent Danforth E. Ainsworth are both organization men, and their friends are opposed to the passage of the proposed bill.

Gov. Roosevelt was the guest at dinner last evening of President Seth Low of Columbia University. The name of President Low has been mentioned in connection with the post of Chancellor of the State Board of Regents in case the plan proposed by the Unification Commission should pass the Legislature. The Governor and President Low had a talk over educational matters last night. The latter is an advocate of the plan.

Opposition to the plan on the part of the Republican organization will be somewhat of a surprise to the Governor's friends who favor its adoption. It has received favorable consideration from many of Gov. Roosevelt's advisers, who are not affiliated with the Republican organization, and

...ood energy, and an officer whose administration has coincided with the largely augmented usefulness and honor of the university.

Prof. Dewey has held the office of Secretary of the State Board of Regents of the University since 1888. The office, in conjunction with that of financial officer of the board was worth $5,000 per annum. Previous to his appointment he was Chief Librarian of Columbia College, in this city. When he assumed charge of the State Library he introduced a system of arrangement and indexing the volumes that became known as the Dewey system. The effect of his work was felt not alone upon the library but the entire power back of it, the Board of Regents and the university. Under his management it has grown to be one of the most stable, practical, and valuable working institutions of its kind in the world.

Prof. Dewey was born in Adams Centre, Jefferson County, N. Y., on Dec. 10, 1852. He was graduated from Amherst in 1874, where he was Acting Librarian from 1873 to 1876. He then took up a residence in Boston and devoted himself to library work and a system of simplifying and systematizing it; also the work of introducing the metric system of weights and measures.

He has been a contributor to various magazines in the advancement of his ideas and edited The Library Journal from 1876 until 1881. He also filled the editorial chair of Library Notes, Metric Bulletin, The Metric Advocate, and Spelling Reform Bulletin. He became manager of the Library Bureau in 1883 and Professor of Library Economy at Columbia College Library School in 1887, where he remained until he accepted the position from which he has just resigned. Fifteen years ago he founded the New York Library Club, and was for a period its President. He was also one of the charter members of the Association of State Librarians that was organized in California in May, 1888, with a representation from twenty-eight States.

TEACHERS' SALARIES CUT.

Edward L. Stephens, Superintendent of Schools for the Borough of Queens, has notified all the school Principals in the borough that the salary of every teacher, with the exception of those whose pay was not increased by the Ahearn law, and those whose salaries are $650 or less, will be reduced from 15 to 20 per cent. after Jan. 1, and that the reduction will continue through the school year from that date. Unless this cut is made Superintendent Stephens says, the force of teachers will have to be greatly reduced.

There are 730 teachers in the borough, and only 108 are benefited by the Ahearn law. More than 300 other teachers are receiving salaries in excess of $650, and all of them will be subjected to the cut. The Superintendent advises the teachers to obtain transfers to other boroughs.

JOINT COLLEGE EXAMINATIONS.

Steps toward the organization of a joint college admission examination board were taken yesterday afternoon at a conference held at Columbia University between representatives from colleges of the Middle States and Maryland.

The institutions represented at the conference were Barnard College, Bryn Mawr, Columbia, Cornell University, New York University, Princeton University, Rutgers College, Union College, the University of Pennsylvania, Vassar College, and the Woman's College of Baltimore. The secondary schools were represented by Dr. Julius Sachs of New York, Principal Edward J. Goodwin of the mixed High School of this city, and Principal Wilson Farrand of the Newark Academy. President Low of Columbia University presided, and Prof. Nicholas Murray Butler, the author of the resolution adopted at Trenton Dec. 20, was also present.

It was voted unanimously to establish a College Entrance Examination Board. This board will consist of a representative from every college in the Middle States and Maryland having a freshman class of fifty or more students that is willing to adopt the plan. The secondary schools will have five representatives on the board. The board will appoint each year a staff of examiners. The examinations will be held at a number of convenient points throughout the Middle States, and it is agreed that certificates issued by the board shall be accepted by the colleges in lieu of their independent entrance examinations, although the latter will be continued for the present.

A committee of five, of which Prof. Butler will act as Chairman, will be appointed today by President Low to complete the details of administration.

CITY COLLEGE BOYS STRUGGLE.

Students of the College of the City of New York made matters decidedly lively in the Tenderloin last night. There was a joint debate at Chickering Hall between members of the Clionian and Phrenodosian Societies, at which more than 2,000 persons were present. The subject for discussion was: "That the recent attitude of Great Britain is unjustifiable," the Clionian Society sustaining the affirmative. Dean George Chase of the New York Law School, Dr. Thomas Hunter of the Normal College of the City of New York, and Abraham Gruber, the judges, decided in favor of the affirmative after a very long consultation.

Meanwhile the representatives of the two societies became wildly demonstrative. When the meeting adjourned the students made matters as lively as they knew how, and until long after midnight Fifth Avenue, Madison Square, Broadway, and West Twenty-third Street were packed with people. The boys were aggressive and enthusiastic, and finally the police had to interfere. The students, for a while, paid no attention to the bluecoats, but when some of them who had already had their optics put in mourning were threatened with a night in a cell, they quieted down.

BIG STATE PROGRAMME.

The Republican legislative programme for the approaching session will be finally settled this morning at a breakfast to be given by Gov. Roosevelt at the home of his sister, Mrs. Douglas Robinson, 422 Madison Avenue. The following persons have been invited to be present: Senator T. C. Platt, leader of the Republican State organization; B. B. Odell, Jr., Chairman of the Republican State Committee; Dr. Albert Shaw, Nicholas Murray Butler, Gen. Francis V. Greene, Chairman of the Canal Advisory Commission; Charles Stewart Smith, John Harsen Rhoades, and Capt. J. Norton Goddard.

Some of the invited guests have not been friendly toward Senator Platt, and the State organization in the past, and the result of the conference is admittedly awaited with interest by the politicians, who are speculating as to the attitude of the organization toward proposed legislation which comes from outside its councils.

The questions to be discussed this morning and which are expected to be settled are:

Revision of the educational laws and the appointment of a Chancellor should the plan proposed by the Unification Commission be adopted.

Question of a successor to Louis F. Payn, State Superintendent of Insurance.

Question of a successor to Avery D. Andrews, Adjutant General, who has resigned.

Designation of Supreme Court Justices for duty in the Court of Appeals.

Composition of proposed Charter Commission.

Amendments to the city charter to be passed at the next session.

Further expenditure on improvements on the canals.

Revision of the tax laws.

Senator Platt and Chairman Odell would like to see Superintendent Payn retained at the head of the Insurance Department, but the Governor's friends say he will not reappoint him. Superintendent Payn publicly declared last week that his friends in the Senate would refuse to confirm any nomination other than his own, which might be sent in by the Governor.

Gov. Roosevelt said yesterday that his annual message to the Legislature was completed. It will be elaborate and of more than ordinary interest, according to those who know what it contains. Certain sections of the message have been submitted to specialists on the subjects to be treated.

It was reported at the Fifth Avenue Hotel last night that Frank W. Johnson of Erie County will be elected Sergeant at Arms of the Assembly in place of James C. Crawford, deceased. Mr. Johnson was principal doorkeeper of the Assembly last Winter. Garret J. Benson of Albany is understood to be the organization's choice for Sergeant at Arms of the Senate to succeed Harry Jacquillard of Brooklyn, who has signified his intention of resigning. Benson was defeated last year for the place.

Bids of Gas Companies Higher.

Bids were opened for the lighting by gas for the year 1900 of the streets and buildings at the office of Commissioner Kearny, in the Park Row Building, yesterday. There were thirty-two bids. The Consolidated and the Amsterdam Gas Companies' bids are the same, 92½ cents per 1,000 feet for gas in public buildings. The Standard Gas Company did not put in any bids. The bids for the gas lamps in the streets are $17.50 per lamp. These bids include the maintenance of the lamp. Commissioner Kearny said that he was surprised that the gas companies had gone up in their prices. He added that the contracts would not be let for some time.

NEW ENGLAND TO THE OLD

Descendants of the Puritans Cheer for the British Arms.

DEMONSTRATION AT A DINNER

The ninety-fourth annual banquet of the New England Society in the City of New York, held in the grand ball room of the Waldorf-Astoria last night, was declared by many old members of the society to be the most elaborate in their recollection. It was remarkable, too, as being made the occasion of a pro-British demonstration on the part of the majority of the 528 members and guests at table.

The ornate room, with its grand ceiling, depicting Music and the Dance, had been profusely decorated with flags, bunting, and evergreens. In the rear of the table of honor the wall was decked in the centre with the seal of the society, surmounted by trophies of American flags and draped below with a large flag. It was flanked on the left by a four-starred Admiral's flag and on the right by the jack. From these, curtainlike, two British flags were draped. Over all were the arms of the United States, and to right and left of this main scheme were the arms of the various New England States, set off by flags. The double tier of boxes around the room were hung with American flags that were set off by a mass of banked and trailing evergreens. These boxes, when the speaking began, were filled with handsomely dressed women. The decorations of the seventeen tables were roses and smilax.

The souvenir was a pretty rustic well, with sloping red tile roof and a tiny bucket hanging from the windlass over a mirror representing water. A verse of "The Old Oaken Bucket" was pasted on tiles. The menu card was ornamented with an etching illustrative of E. J. Rankin's lines:

"Through snowy wilds devout they walked
With book and gun in hand."

AT THE TABLE OF HONOR.

Henry E. Howland, President of the society, presided. At the table of honor also were Rear Admiral William T. Sampson, Gov. Roger Wolcott of Massachusetts, Major Gen. Wesley Merritt, John Barrett, ex-Minister to Siam; Capt. French E. Chadwick, United States Navy; Col. Charles A. Woodruff, United States Army; Prof. William R. Terrett, the Rev. Dr. William H. P. Faunce, President of Brown University; the Rev. Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, Prof. W. Gordon McCabe, Augustus Thomas, Justice Morgan J. O'Brien, President of St. Patrick's Society; George Gray Ward, President of St. George's Society; Frederic de Peyster Foster, President of St. Nicholas Society; Julien T. Davies, President of St. David's Society; Robert B. Roosevelt, President of the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution; Frederic A. Ward, President of the New England Society of Brooklyn; Tunis G. Bergen, President of the Holland Society; Milton I. Southard, President of the Ohio Society; Dr. William M. Polk, President of the Southern Society; the Rev. Dr. Edward H. Krans, President of the Canadian Society; Frederic J. de Peyster, President of the Huguenot Society; Daniel F. Appleton, President of the New England Society, 1877-79; Horace Russell, President of the New England Society, 1885-87; Cornelius N. Bliss, President of the New England Society, 1887-89; J. Pierpont Morgan, President of the New England Society, 1889-91, and Charles C. Beaman, President of the New England society, 1895-97.

Others present included Thomas F. Wentworth, William Dean Howells, Dr. Henry F. Walker, Richard T. Davies, Francis M. Bacon, Lawrence Godkin, E. C. Stedman, G. E. Stedman, George H. Story, Robert M. Gallaway, John H. Starin, Robert C. Ogden, George W. Van Siclen, Charles S. Smith, Gen. Francis V. Greene, William E. Dodge, Morris K. Jesup, E. V. W. Rossiter, C. L. Rossiter, Ashbel P. Fitch, William F. Havemeyer, Frederick D. Kilburn, James M. Varnum, Joel B. Erhardt, Horace E. Deming, George Henry Sargent, Collis P. Huntington, Charles R. Flint, Cephas Brainerd, George Wilson, and E. B. Treat.

CHEERS FOR THE BRITISH.

President Howland, in his opening address, which teemed with humorous anecdotes, made a reference to the Boers and the British that was productive of the pro-British demonstration, in which the spectators in the boxes participated. President Howland, alluding to the early colonists, said that, unlike the Boers in the Transvaal, they had given later comers a chance, a remark that was greeted with cries of "Good! Good!" "That is so!" and cheers.

"Our hearts," he went on, "beat with a quicker throb at the recollection of the achievements of these last pregnant years; the eye lights with enthusiasm at the sight of the flag whose fluttering folds have witnessed such scenes of danger and inspired such daring deeds, and our voices shout in unison of acclaim the achievements of what a wondering African called 'the angry Saxon race.'

"The American regular has shown in his stern resolve, his self-control, his obedience to orders, his contempt of danger, that while he leads a forlorn hope in war he is the advance guard of liberty and justice, law and order, peace and happiness.

"The gallant officers, who, true to the spirit of the service, stood up on the firing line in Cuba and the Philippines, charging heights, wading rivers, and storming the trenches at the head of their men, have shed new glory upon the American army, and none more illustriously than that splendid soldier, Major Gen. Henry W. Lawton, who, after a distinguished and brilliant service of nearly forty years in two wars and continuous Indian fighting, has received the soldier's summons on the field of battle.

"Such men have their counterparts in the very pink and flower of the chivalry of England, who face their foe standing and are now charging full front and fearlessly into the storm of shot and shell that awaits them, deeming it, in the language of young Hubert Hervey, 'A grand thing to die for the expansion of the empire.' [Loud applause.]

"The pride of England in its navy is justly matched by that of every American in his own. Its record from the days of John Paul Jones to those of Dewey and Sampson is unsurpassed in the history of the world." [Applause.]

TO PRESIDENT AND QUEEN.

Judge Howland then called upon the company to pledge "the nation's representative head, the Commander in Chief of its army and navy, the President of the United States."

The toast was drunk standing, the orchestra plying "The Star-Spangled Banner," in which the company joined enthusiastically.

When quiet had been restored, Judge Howland continued: "In the past year, when the friendship between the mother country and this has been so strongly cemented, I wish to say that in her hour of trouble it would be well to drink to that august lady, the Queen of England and the Empress of India."

This toast was drunk with equal enthusiasm, the band playing "God Save the Queen."

"It is sometimes said that the Puritan was narrow, that he was a religious bigot, that he cared for nothing but his fantastical religion," he remarked, "but that was a mistake. He cared for almost all the great things of the world. The Puritan knew little of sculpture or of painting. He did as Lincoln advised—he did the great things first. I have often thought that after the Puritan had finished the regeneration of the world he might have turned his attention to art and science, and there is no reason why he might not have succeeded in both.

"In him was enough of tragedy, of agony, of rapture, and of glory to furnish themes for a century of poets and thinkers. The Puritan failed in much, but he failed most illustriously. The great failures of the past are the foundation of the present. It is the men who have dared and failed greatly who have made civilization possible to man."

Prof. W. Gordon McCabe, a veteran of the Confederate Army, was called upon to speak to the toast, "Our Reunited Country." He said that he was puzzled that nearly all the orators had insisted that the Pilgrims really founded and shaped the destinies of the Nation, and invited his hearers to come down to Jamestown when they met there to celebrate the anniversary of the first permanent English settlement in America, as a blending of the two points of view would give a truer perspective as to the National development.

"What you call the Puritan spirit, of which you are justly proud," he said, "has never been confined to New England alone, nor do I believe that Virginia can claim exclusive heritage in the gracious and generous qualities of the cavalier."

SOUTHERNER HITS AT BRYAN.

He referred to the probability of Bryan leading the Democratic forces in the coming Presidential campaign as "our great American version of the Passion Play of Obergammergau," and said that during it he expected to hear some hard things said about his solid section. "I trust," he said, "that when the swelling clouds of next November sweep him from the public ken, he may find his consolation in the remembrance that every cloud has a silver lining," and then, in a drawling, sarcastic tone, quoted the closing sentence of the famous "crown of thorns, cross of gold" speech.

In conclusion, Prof. McCabe said: "Should war come, men of the North should hear the tramp of the Southern legions as they wheel into line to touch elbows with the stalwart sons of New England, eager to keep time with cadenced step to the music of the Union, and to hedge round with stubborn steel that Starry Banner that symbolizes once more to us as to you the majesty of American citizenship and the indestructibility of American institutions."

Col. Charles A. Woodruff spoke to the toast "The Army." "There are those," he said, "who speak of the army as though its members were a class different and distinct from the honest, law abiding citizen; not moved by the same warm impulses of patriotism and respect for civil rights and laws; ever ready and eager to oppress the people. This is simply bosh, pure demagogy.

"If a republican form of government is synonymous with anarchy and lawlessness, then our army, which under the most trying circumstances has ever been found upon the side of law and order, is dangerous; but if a republic means a government subject to laws made by the people, then an army formed, as is ours, from the people, and of the people, and by the people, is a necessity.

"Every American who loves valor, justice, and honor should be proud of the record of our regular army, in war and peace, from 1701 to 1899."

Rear Admiral Sampson, in rising to respond to the toast, "The Navy," was warmly greeted. He confined himself to thanking the company for the welcome accorded to him and his confrères.

The toast to "The Old Commonwealth" was responded to by Gov. Wolcott, who dwelt upon the glorious history and traditions of New England.

LAWTON'S MESSAGE TO AMERICA.

Ex-Minister Barrett announced the toast to "The New Pacific." He vigorously protested against the calumnies and arguments of the anti-expansionists, "the anti-responsibility party," as he called them, and continued:

"In my hand I hold an unread warning and message to the American people—for I hope through the medium of the New England Society that they may go to all his mourning countrymen—which came to me last month in the form of a letter from Gen. Lawton, who has just fallen in the struggle to maintain without faltering America's honor, prestige, and influence in the new Pacific. Had he lived his official position would have prevented giving publicity to these sentiments. He has gone, but his influence still lives, and it is good that they should be heralded throughout the land. He wrote:

"'I would to God that the whole truth of this whole Philippine situation could be known by every one in America as I know it. If the real history, inspiration, and conditions of this insurrection, and the influences, local and external, that now encourage the enemy, as well as the actual possibilities of these islands and peoples and their relations to this great East, could be understood at home, we would hear no more talk of unjust "shooting of government" into the Filipinos, or of hauling down our flag in the Philippines. If the so-called anti-imperialists would honestly ascertain the truth on the ground and not in distant America, they, whom I believe to be honest men misinformed, would be convinced of the error of their statements and conclusions, and of the unfortunate effect of their publications here. If I am shot by a Filipino bullet it might as well come from one of my own men, because I know from observations, confirmed by captured prisoners, that the continuance of fighting is chiefly due to reports that are sent out from America.

"Who can question the honesty of opinion voiced by this fearless, noble soldier, whom all the Nation mourn? With the impending consideration by Congress of the Philippine question, it is well that there should be a clearing of the atmosphere and unprejudiced effort to reach the truth and do what is right in our responsibilities."

Col. Woodruff at this point announced the receipt of the following telegram from Adjt. Gen. Corbin:

"I have just asked Judge Howland to request the New England Society to help us to provide for Gen. Lawton's widow and children. Please help us in your own way, which will be better than any I can suggest."

Augustus Thomas spoke to the toast "The New Englander and the Land."

THE BOSTON BANK FAILURE.

Shawmut Bank Offers to Advance Depositors of Globe National 50 Per Cent. of Their Accounts.

BOSTON, Dec. 22.—Another day of unrest in Boston's financial circles went by without incidents of a startling nature. The receivership for the Globe National Bank took nearly every banker and broker by surprise, and before business in the money market began, forebodings were dire. But prophesying and fears were not realized, for the situation to-night was considered as good if not slightly better than at any time for a fortnight.

Business men learned the news only this morning, and a number of out-of-town customers, who came to draw money for Christmas were considerably upset by the information that the bank was closed. One man in his excitement threatened to "pump lead" into those who had ruined him.

During the forenoon the National Shawmut Bank made public the following notice: "That there may be as little inconvenience as possible to the depositors of the Globe National Bank and others the National Shawmut Bank offers to advance to-day to all depositors in the Globe Bank against their deposits 50 per cent. of the net amount of the same."

At a meeting of creditors of the John P. Squire Company, Mr. Chaplin, the assignee made a denial of the reported indebtedness of the firm to the Globe National Bank. He stated that the firm was represented as owing more than $1,000,000 through the falsifying of the books of the bank.

This was done, Mr. Chaplin explained, by charging the notes and collateral loans against the firm without crediting the collateral, so that every loan was made to appear twice as large as it should. An explicit explanation of the facts caused the overdraft to disappear.

The Globe Bank's New York correspondents were the National City Bank and the National Bank of North America. It had a credit balance at each.

To Continue Business of Squire & Co.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 22.—The creditors of the John P. Squire & Co. corporation, at a meeting to-day, voted to continue the business of the firm under an assignee subject to the assistance and approval of a committee of three representing the creditors.

OPERA 'BUS TEAM RUNS AWAY.

A handsome large opera 'bus belonging to Emanuel Einstein of 45 East Seventy-second Street, driven by Edward Murphy, was wrecked about 11:30 o'clock last night at Forty-first Street and Fifth Avenue. The driver was thrown off and his skull was fractured and one of the horses attached to the 'bus had a large gash cut in his side and may have to be shot.

The team took fright at Fifth Avenue and Forty-fifth Street while going to the opera for Mr. Einstein and his party. The horses ran to Forty-first Street, where the 'bus struck a public cab, driven by Frank Courtney. The cab driver jumped and escaped injury, but the driver of the 'bus was thrown to the pavement. He was removed to Flower Hospital.

Miss Potter's Trouble.

Miss Jennie O'Neil Potter, elocutionist, was taken to Bellevue Hospital yesterday suffering, according to the report of the examinging physician, Dr. F. W. Robertson, from bronchitis, which threatened serious developments. Miss Potter had been previously arraigned in the West Side Police Court before Magistrate Deuel charged by Samuel E. Harris of 342 Manhattan Avenue with being insane. She lives at 134 West Ninetieth Street in the building owned by Mr. Harris, who said in his complaint that she had been acting in a peculiar manner. He also alleged that she was addicted to the morphine habit and had been in Bellevue before.

Mrs. Sanderson Is Acquitted.

MARSHALL, Mich., Dec. 22.—The jury in the case of Mrs. Sanderson, charged with killing her husband by feeding him ground glass, returned a verdict of not guilty to-night.

HOW YOUNG ROBERTS DIED

BRAVERY OF OTHER OFFICERS

British Soldiers Fought Until Cut Off by the Boers, and Even Then Declined to Surrender.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—The Daily Telegraph has a special from Chieveley, dated Dec. 16, which tells how Lieut. Roberts, son of Lord Roberts, fell at Tugela River. It says:

"The horses of the Fourteenth and Sixty-sixth Batteries had been killed, and Lieut. Roberts, Capt. Schofield, and Capt. Congreve of the Rifles attempted, with gunner volunteers, to drag out the guns. Capt. Schofield succeeded, helped by a Corporal and some men.

"Lieut. Roberts was hit badly by a shell. Capt. Congreve was struck repeatedly and wounded slightly. After awhile Capt. Congreve, Capt. Foster, and Major Baptie brought Lieut. Roberts from the open into a little ravine, where he lay hidden from the enemy's terrible fire.

"Fourteen gunners, fourteen men of the Devonshire Regiment, and —— men were with Col. Bullock. When the retirement was ordered these men, with isolated parties of Devonshires and Scots Fusiliers, together with some of the Queen's, were cut off and captured. Many fought until late in the afternoon, a part of the Irishmen running the gauntlet of the Boer Mausers from hiding places along the river bank.

"At 5 P. M. forty Boers approached the ten abandoned guns. On espying Col. Bullock, Capt. Congreve, and the officers in the ravine, they called upon the British to surrender. Col. Bullock declined and threatened to shoot, although his party had only fourteen rifles.

"The Boers retired from the guns, and a parley ensued. Then a hundred Boers rode up to within a few yards of the party, but Col. Bullock swore he would not be a prisoner, whereupon a Boer knocked him down with his rifle butt.

"Afterward the enemy gave our wounded water and cordials. Then, having taken all their arms, ammunition, and field glasses, they let them return by our ambulances.

"Col. Bullock, Col. Hunt, Major Walter, and Capt. Goodwyn were taken prisoners. The Scots Fusiliers lost nearly two companies captured."

A dispatch to The Daily Mail from Chieveley, dated Dec. 17, estimates the casualties in Gen. Buller's repulse as 1,150, including 332 missing. It announces that "a portion of the British troops has returned to Frere."

A correspondent at Modder River, under date of Dec. 17, describing the changes in the art of warfare, says:

"It would be almost impossible to take such a position as Magersfontein by assault. The modern battle, owing to the length of rifle range, will last six days, where formerly it would only have lasted a few hours.

"The Boer trenches, which are rather like underground dwellings than trenches, always provide a safe means of retreat. They are very wide and deep and are casemated at intervals, allowing the concentration of defenders at any given point without danger to themselves.

"The British here are anxious that the Boers should attack them; and the belief is prevalent that treachery is largely responsible for the underestimate placed upon the Boer forces by the cavalry scouts."

The Chieveley correspondent of The Standard, who attributes the whole disaster involved in Gen. Buller's repulse to the mistake of Col. Long in taking the artillery too close to the river, says:

The Cape Town correspondent of The Times, under date of Dec. 17, says:

"The Boer fighting line is very thin, and a single British success might crumble it completely. The real danger, however, is not the military situation, but the likelihood of a Dutch rebellion, which would make the area of war so vast that an additional 50,000 men would be easily swallowed up in maintaining the enormous length of British communicatinos."

Referring to the tardy acceptance of assistance from local forces, the correspondent says:

"Gen. Buller undoubtedly at the beginning displayed a certain self-sufficiency and unwillingness to accept local advice and assistance, which events rapidly modified."

Owing to the gravity of the situation, the War Office officials will not remit their duties during the Christmas holidays.

The War Office has issued an official warning against British subjects or foreigners in British territory trading with or supplying the Boer Republic, either directly or indirectly, with any kind of merchandise whatsoever. This is regarded as showing that the Government has good evidence of the existence of such traffic, and that even some English firms have been supplying the enemy, perhaps unintentionally, through foreign consignees.

It is announced that two battalions of the Guards will be included in the Eighth Division.

Lord Kitchener will join Lord Roberts at Gibraltar. The Earl of Erroll, Hereditary Lord High Constable of Scotland, will accompany the Commander in Chief in special service.

Victor Christian Cavendish, member of Parliament for West Derbyshire, and heir apparent of the Duke of Devonshire, has volunteered to go to the front.

A Cape Town dispatch, dated Dec. 17, reports that Commandant Diedericks of the Boer forces was killed in a recent engagement, but no details are given.

Advices from Naauw Poort describe everything as quiet there, and the only fresh news from Arundel concerns the weather, which is excessively hot.

Gen. Methuen's complaint about the rudeness of his opponent is the latest surprise of this surprising war, and, judging from the tone of some of the comment, Gen. Methuen's peevishness is more distasteful to many people in Great Britain than his continued silence would have been.

There is no diminution of the enthusiasm among the volunteers. All kinds of offers are reaching Lord Chesham, who is to command the mounted volunteer force. Members of the Stock Exchange have already promised one hundred horses from their stables, and an offer of an Irish contingent of 115 hunting men was accepted this morning.

Prince Francis of Teck, younger brother of the Duchess of York, sailed for Cape Town to-day with a detachment of the Royal Dragoons.

Lord Salisbury and Gen. Roberts had a conference with the Queen at Windsor this afternoon.

A dispatch from Cape Town, dated Sunday, Dec. 17, says that Gen. Methuen's primary object in crossing the Modder River appears to have been to establish searchlight communication with Kimberley, which is believed to be still on full rations. The water in the mines is plentiful. On the other hand, in spite of their usual tactics, it is considered possible that the Boers have been compelled to assume the offensive, the commander having arranged for the disposition of the forces and anticipating difficulty in maintaining food supplies in the present positions. Moreover, it is said there is a growing desire among the Free Staters to return home, which is testified to on many sides and may tend to precipitate an action on the part of the Boer commands.

In spite of the delay of Gen. Methuen in advancing, he is regarded as largely the master of the situation, and his entrenched position is believed to be unassailable. In the event of the Boers attacking Kimberley Gen. Methuen would be enabled to make a counter move with his artillery and cavalry. Consequently, such a movement on the part of the Boers, it is said, is not contemplated. It is apparent, therefore, that to "make haste slowly" is the truest policy at present. In accordance with Gen. Methuen's dictum, the army should not advance faster than the slowest ox-wagon.

A War Office dispatch from Pietermaritzburg, Natal, gives a list of casualties, Monday, Dec. 18, of seven men killed and fourteen wounded, all non-commissioned officers and men. The names of the regiments concerned indicate a hitherto unrecorded sortie from Ladysmith on that date.

GEN. MILES ON BOER TACTICS.

Says They Are Not Similar to Those of the Indians—Their Success Not Surprising.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 22.—Major Gen. Nelson A. Miles to-day, in expressing his opinion regarding the South African war, said to a reporter:

"The struggle between the British and the Boers is a very serious war. There have been some severe losses, and I believe there will be more serious encounters before it is ended. As to the probable results, I, of course, cannot predict. If the British are defeated, is it likely to involve Europe in serious complications? It might, and it might not.

"As to the tactics of the contending armies, both seem to be pursuing what is termed 'open-order' methods. It is a mistake to compare the tactics of the Boers to those of our Indians. Their tactics are the white man's tactics.

"The outcome, of course, depends upon the skill of the commanders, as it does in every war. The Boers have been preparing for it for the last ten years. In view of the circumstances, I do not think their showing so far is in the nature of a surprise.

"The Boers have had no difficulty in procuring ammunition. The people in the Transvaal are accustomed to the use of powder in mining operations. There they know how to manufacture cartridges. Besides, they had plenty of money to buy necessary war materials beforehand and store them away for use when needed.

"To succeed in war is to get ready before you commence hostilities."

GERMAN SENTIMENT VEERING.

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—A gradual veering of public opinion in Germany regarding the war in South Africa is becoming apparent. The change is led by the inspired section of the press. To-day several articles appear pointing in the new direction.

The Cologne Gazette argues strongly against the "folly of demonstrative Anglophobia." It says:

"Germany's real interest is to maintain absolute neutrality in sentiment. It is wise to retain England's good-will if Germany intends to develop colonially."

The Berliner Post contains an obviously inspired article in which this argument is made:

"South African confederation is impossible without harbors and the seashore. England, as a great power, is necessary for the maintenance of the world's political equilibrium; and Germany's policy will be to keep friends with England."

The Kreuz Zeitung also contains to-day a paragraph meant to be Anglophile.

There is no doubt that the Government is beginning to bring the weight of its influence on the press to bear in favor of England. The same is true regarding the army, navy, and official world.

Emperor William's influence is now strongly exerted in an Anglophile direction. It is said, on reliable authority, that he has repeatedly expressed himself during the week in the following vein:

"We must not repeat last year's mistake. Right or wrong, we must continue friends with England."

RIOT AT A PRO-BOER MEETING.

PARIS, Dec. 22.—A pro-Boer demonstration convened this evening at the Tivoli-Vauxhall by the Executive Committee of the Jeunesse Royaliste ended in a riot.

The Socialists entered in force and broke up the meeting, amid indescribable uproar and shouts of "Vive la Social revolution" and "A bas Déroulède," which were met with counter cries of "Vive Déroulède" and "Vive l'Armée."

Several Nationalist Deputies who were present endeavored to speak, but they were quite inaudible. A free fight ensued, and the proprietor of the hall turned off the gas. The combatants then lighted newspapers and continued the fight, smashing the fittings of the hall and using them as weapons. Finally, the police cleared the room; but they were compelled to charge several times before order was re-established.

PORTUGAL FEARS THE BOERS.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The Lisbon correspondent of The Daily Mail, discussing the Boer importation of food, munitions of war, and recruits by way of the Portuguese port of Lorenzo Marquez, says:

"Portugal is undoubtedly doing her utmost to check the transit of war material for the Boers through Delagoa Bay, although Great Britain would do well to make a demand for greater watchfulness. Portugal, however, is in constant terror of a Boer raid on her African possessions, and cannot stop the passage of volunteers for the Transvaal.

WINSTON CHURCHILL IS SAFE.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—Lady Randolph Churchill has received a cable dispatch from her son, Winston Churchill, who was captured by the Boers in Natal and taken to Pretoria, and whose escape from there was announced Dec. 14.

He has arrived safely at Delagoa Bay.

The following press dispatch has been received from Lorenzo Marques, under date of Dec. 17, regarding Mr. Churchill's escape:

"Mr. Churchill wrote Gen. Joubert on Dec. 9, asking to be released on the ground of being a war correspondent. Gen. Joubert on Dec. 13 replied that Mr. Churchill had been detained because he had been represented as a combatant assisting an armored train to escape. He added that Mr. Churchill was unknown to him personally, but he would accept his assurance that he was a non-combatant and would order his release.

"The order arrived at Pretoria ten hours after Mr. Churchill had escaped, leaving behind him a letter expressing gratitude for the treatment he had received."

BULLER'S WOUNDED REMOVED.

CHIEVELEY CAMP, Natal, Dec. 17.—The camp which was pitched to the left of the position taken up by the Union Brigade was shifted from that point this morning to Chieveley.

The wounded are being entrained for Pietermaritzburg. Most of the wounds are in the arms or legs. Dr. Treves is operating on the wounded. Sir William MacCormack attended at the railway platform, and several assistant Surgeons are giving every attention.

MAY USE JACKSON AS A MODEL.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The Daily News sees immense significance in the fact that Lord Roberts has appointed on his staff Lieut. Col. Henderson, author of a life of Gen. Stonewall Jackson, the Confederate leader, and a man who has closely studied the history of the American civil war, especially as he has not served under Lord Roberts before and is but little known to him personally.

The appointment is regarded by The Daily News as proving Lord Roberts's belief that what is wanted in the war in South Africa is a strict application of Jackson's principles. It also connects the appointment with a rumor that Gen. Joubert served under Gen. Stonewall Jackson.

BOERS HEAVILY REINFORCED.

STERKSTROOM, Cape Colony, Dec. 16.—The Boers have been largely reinforced since Gen. Gatacre's reverse at Stormberg. The country north of that point is in arms, and the farms of the loyalists are being taken by the Boers, who reap the crops.

Boer accounts of successful engagements are printed for distribution throughout the disaffected districts.

Dutch Protest Against "Cruelties."

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 22.—A committee has been formed to draw up a protest against cruelties alleged to have been committed by the British in South Africa. A manifesto will be issued to the people of England and the Continent reciting instances.

Consul Hay Prepares for Duty.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—Adelbert S. Hay, the new United States Consul at Pretoria, formally received at the United States Embassy to-day a number of wives and other relatives of British officers who came to make special requests regarding the prisoners at the Transvaal capital.

BOERS' STRUGGLE APPROVED.

Just before the Board of Aldermen adjourned yesterday afternoon Alderman Ledwith (Tam.) called an attendant and sent a resolution to the desk. Alderman Muh, who was in the chair, ordered Clerk Martin to read the document, and the latter began:

"Whereas, A state of war exists between the republic of the Transvaal—"

"I move it be referred to the Committee on War," interrupted Alderman Woodward, (Rep.)

The Chairman banged the desk with the gavel, and demanded that the board be in order, and the Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

"Whereas, A state of war exists between the Republic of the Transvaal in South Africa and the monarchy of England; and

"Whereas, The people of South Africa are defending their homes and firesides from the incursion of the foreign invader, who, for the lust of gold and the acquisition of power, are endeavoring to deprive those God-fearing people of their inalienable rights, chief among which is the right to govern their own country in their own way and for the benefit of their posterity; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, enjoying the blessings of freedom and representative government, desire to place on record our hope for the success of the Boers, those noble, stalwart farmers now repeating at the close of the nineteenth century the struggle which our forefathers underwent at its dawn against the same common enemy; and we pray that the God of Battles will give success to their arms, so that they and their children may enjoy in perpetuity the greatest of all endowments, the power of making their own laws and of governing themselves without the dictation or suggestion of any country or power on earth."

"All in favor of the resolution will say 'Aye,'" said Chairman Muh.

Several "ayes" were heard, and then the Chairman declared the resolution adopted, without putting the negative. A few spectators who sat in the gallery applauded.

PRESIDENT'S CRITIC HISSED.

An audience that filled the large hall of Cooper Union listened to an address last night by Gamaliel Bradford of Boston on "Our Philippine Problem." The meeting was one of a series of four conducted by the People's Institute, in which the colonial policy of the Government is to be discussed from different viewpoints. At the close of the address an opportunity was offered to those present to ask questions.

There were signs of disapproval, and at one time, when the speaker asserted that the only hope for the country was in the success of the Democratic Party next year, there was a regular storm of hisses. Charles Sprague Smith presided.

Mr. Bradford began his address by referring to the success achieved by Great Britain in dealing with her colonies in the Malay Peninsula, and contrasted with them the condition of Sumatra, where Holland has had a war in progress for twenty-five years.

"Our methods," said Mr. Bradford, "are likely to be those of the Dutch, the Spanish, and the French, I fear."

Mr. Bradford said that so far as commerce is concerned the cost of the Philippines would exceed the profits of twenty years of trade. If there were any profits, too, they would go chiefly to the syndicates. He prophesied that if America should keep the Philippines there would be a war over China soon. He continued:

"Mr. Roosevelt says there is no more danger in a standing army than in the police. I would recommend to His Excellency that when he retires from office, and can spare time from his gymnastic exercises, he should spend a little time reading some first lessons in history. Mr. Root says that a standing army should be maintained so as to be prepared to go to war. That means the beginning of military rule. There are plenty of wealthy men who would not object to having this city put under military rule at once.

"The personality of Mr. McKinley is the real issue. Our only hope now is in the Democratic Party. [A storm of hisses, which the Chairman suppressed.] The Democratic Party to-day stands for the rights of the people. If McKinley is re-elected, the fate of the Republic is sealed. McKinley is not a big enough man to overthrow the Republic himself, but the people would then have approved his policy, and a military dictator could not be far distant."

BRITISH STEAMER DISABLED.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—A dispatch received here says the British steamer Appomattox, Capt. Foall, which sailed from London Dec. 16 for Newport News, passed Kinsale today bound for Queenstown, with the British steamer Nasmyth, Capt. Braithwaite, in tow.

The Nasmyth sailed from New York Dec. 3 for Manchester, and after covering more than half her voyage her shaft broke. She was then sighted and picked up by the Appomattox.

NEW SHIPBUILDING PLANT.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 22.—The Murphy Iron Works of this city has just demonstrated the fact that steel and iron ships can be built here. Up to a short time ago no local firm had the boldness to attempt such a departure, and when the Murphy

GAGE ON PUBLIC FINANCES

GOVERNMENT AND THE BANKER

Functions of Each Discussed with Reference to the Needs of the Country's Business.

ORANGE, N. J., Dec. 22.—The annual Forefathers' Day dinner of the Orange New England Society was held this evening in Upper Music Hall. The hall was tastefully decorated, the National colors and Christmas greens predominating. About 300 sat down to the tables. President C. J. Kidder presided and acted as toastmaster.

The principal speaker of the evening was Secretary of the Treasury Gage, whose topic was "Some Aspects of the Public Finances." The other speakers were the Rev. Dr. Walter D. Buchanan of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, whose theme was "Forefather's Day"; Justice William W. Goodrich of the New York Supreme Court, who spoke on "The Modern Puritan," and Severo Mallet-Prevost of this city, who was a member of the Venezuelan Boundary Commission, who told of "The Paris Tribunal of 1899."

Secretary Gage began his address with a reference to his earliest New England ancestor, who settled at Yarmouth, on Cape Cod, about fifteen years after the landing of the Pilgrims, and who was not very much of a Puritan, as he once went fishing on Sunday and was duly fined for it. After paying a serious tribute to the Pilgrim Fathers the Secretary took up the theme assigned to him, and said, in part:

FIVEFOLD FINANCIAL PROBLEM.

"Among the many problems which are thrust upon us, from which, until rightly solved, we must ignorantly suffer, the problem of Governmental and public finance is not among the least, and it is upon this particular problem that I venture to take your time. The problem is fivefold, or, rather, it is one under five principal divisions, and may be thus classified:

"First—The independent Treasury—its desirability as a measure of safety to the public funds, and its economic evil as an absorbent of that portion of the capital circulating in the form of money.

"Second—The effect and influence for good or evil of Government issues of legal-tender money.

"Third—The money standard.

"Fourth—Banking and currency.

"Fifth—The public debt and taxation.

"As to the independent Treasury, we witness a strange inconsistency. The Congress of the United States formulates a great banking system, and endows it with multiplied checks and guards calculated to give safety to its operations. The Government assumes over the institutions organized under the law—now some 3,500 in number—a close and vigilant supervision. It appoints special agents clothed with large powers of jurisdiction. It allows the institutions thus under its patronage and protection to take under their control some two thousand millions of dollars of the people's money, while in its own fiscal operations the Government itself will not trust the best of them to the extent of one dollar. In direct opposition to Governmental methods abroad, which have for generations transacted their financial operations through banking agencies, it takes up into its own strong box the fruits of the taxation it imposes.

"If general prosperity appears, the products of human industry increase in quantity, or improve in price. Then the proceeds of taxation are, pari passu, larger. As a consequence, the supply of money, increasingly necessary to more active conditions, through the effect of Government action, is at that important period diminished in volume by being withdrawn from public use. On the other hand, and quite to the contrary, when business depression comes, or activity diminishes, prices fall. Then the public revenue declines and becomes relatively less than the public expenditure. The public hoard, which might have been useful under reverse conditions, is then freely poured out into channels where it cannot be profitably used. I offer these comments to excite reflections. I do not suggest a present remedy.

LEGAL-TENDER PAPER MONEY.

"I might speak after a similar fashion in regard to the legal-tender paper money issued by the Government. Really a debt obligation, they are, through their legal-tender feature, given in certain directions the potentiality of money itself. In the bank reserves they are recognized by law as equal in efficiency to gold. Now, banking reserves are in a particular sense the foundation upon which the large superstructure of credit reposes, and upon the verity and quality of these reserves the immediate solvency of the credit structure depends.

"One does not have to look long to see a vital difference of quality between standard money itself—gold—and the Government's promise to pay money. If the latter were supported by a deposit—dollar for dollar of gold—in the Public Treasury, this criticism would not exist. The sign or promise of the thing would be, substantially, the thing itself. Such, however, is not the condition of things. Behind some $440,000,000 of Government legal-tender paper there is held $100,000,000 in gold. To make good this great difference the Government has no convertible value in hand. It must, either by borrowing from others or by taxation upon those who have, secure the means to make good the difference.

"But, quite aside from these weaknesses, there has been developed in the general public mind a conviction more evil, perhaps, in its final effects than are those to which I have just alluded. The conviction is that the law makes money; while the truth is deeply founded in the nature of things that the law can do no such thing. It can recognize and give sanctions; it cannot create.

"But I am not going to take up your time in any argument for immediate change or repeal, either as to the independent Treasury, or the law which establishes Government legal-tender paper money. In my opinion, it would be a waste of time to attempt this. Prejudice and preconceptions are too deep-rooted. Time and a large knowledge are essential to their cure. Let me pass to the third question—the standard of money.

"Here we come to a question of immediate and practical import. It has been the occasion of much heated debate, as well as of calm and deliberate study. Political parties have formulated propositions concerning it, and embodied these propositions into the body of their political doctrines. Agitation and doubts, excited by the long debate, have disturbed business, adversely affected industry, and brought disaster and ruin to thousands.

RESTORATION OF CONFIDENCE.

"Three years ago the voice of the people decreed a period of rest. That voice declared for the preservation and perpetuation of that form of metallic money which has long been in use by us, as the ultimate measure of value, and the standard of future payments. The welcome assurance that for at least four years the base of our commercial exchanges would remain undisturbed, operated to restore confidence, to stimulate enterprise, to revivify public and private credit, to put labor into larger employment, and to increase the rewards of both labor and capital.

"We have had the demonstration clear and forcible that the fear of instability in the money standard works evil and tends toward industrial paralysis. We have had demonstration, complete and convincing, that confidence in the stability of the standard brings life and activity with their rich harvest of benefits to all the people. What, then, is the duty of those who possess the power to furnish guarantees for the future? Manifestly, it is to put such guarantees into form, and to give them body and substance. The one word most important in our commercial affairs is stability—stability of conditions; and the most important feature to that stability is an established money standard, and so established that it cannot be subverted or changed by any hasty or ill-considered action.

"It has long been the desire and hope of many intelligent and patriotic citizens to secure needful and enduring stability in the money standard by an international agreement in regard to gold and silver, which would be effective to that end. The realization of that desire and hope now seems too remote to justify present consideration; but if those who still cherish it shall offer it in objection it is a sufficient answer to say that stability on the gold standard is the only stability now possible to us, and if the time should some when international agreement offers a safe and desirable substitution, the freedom of our representative form of government will give to our people the liberty of choice.

"If it be true, as true it undoubtedly is, that gold is now our standard of money value, the future needs only the assurance that it will so continue to be, until at least the people shall be so united in their desire for a change therein as to be able to direct the voice of both houses of Congress and secure the approving signature of the Chief Executive.

"I must now ask your attention to the fourth proposition, banking and currency. While stability in the standard is of commanding importance, flexibility in the volume of the circulating medium of exchange is most desirable, if not indispensable.

MONEY IN TRADE.

"Now, it is a fact as familiar to us as the most common affairs of life that trade is carried on, goods exchanged, and wages paid, in much the larger part, not with money—real money—but with credit substitutes, in the form of book credits, notes of hand, checks, and drafts, and what is popularly named paper money. It is, of course, vitally necessary to economic health and soundness that all these substitutes and intermediaries should have such a relation to real money—standard money—as to be certainly convertible into such money at the will of the holder. Thus qualified and secured, they add enormously to the power of society, and become a vast economizer in the use of real money. Money—real money—is a form of real capital, and like all capital, must be produced, at the cost of sacrifice and labor. Credit and credit instruments, on the contrary, are created without cost, and, within the limits of a prudent safety, are agents of the highest social and commercial value. It is the province of credit to transfer capital, without the condition of an immediate equivalent in exchange. Without the function which credit performs, the use of capital would not be possible except to the man who had capital. One form of capital could indeed be exchanged for another form of capital, but it would still be on even terms of so much capital for so much capital. First get your capital, then exchange, if you please. Credit gives to character and ability the use of capital, upon the promise of payment hereafter, and thus the tools of production are passed into the hands of the capable and wise, who could not otherwise enjoy their use.

"I have indulged in this too brief analysis of credit in order that the principles exhibited may be applied to what I have still to say. Since men entered upon civilized and orderly society these principles have influenced their action.

"Our own trade with foreign people aggregates two thousand millions per annum. Is it carried on with money? Certainly not. The fact that only $122,000,000 in money has crossed the oceans to and from our shores ($37,000,000 going out and $85,000,000 coming in) within the year proves absolutely that it was not money that moved the comerce. It was effected by the mechanism of exchange, under the varying forms of credit; the gold passing to and fro represented only the final adjustment in the credit settlements.

THE BANKER INDISPENSABLE.

"I now make another proposition, which will be readily recognized and conceded by this company of business men. It is this: The office and function which the banker performs was indispensable to the efficiency of the credit instruments through which the great trade was accomplished. If that is true as to our foreign trade, it is more forcibly true as to our domestic operations. The exchange and re-exchange of raw products, labor services, and finished goods, within our own borders, amounted during the year now closing, to more than fifty thousand millions, yet the total of standard money—gold—was less than one thousand millions; and even as to this the bulk of it remained stationary in Government vaults or bank reserves. How was all this trade effected? Evidently with the credit machinery employed. That machinery consisted of book credits between merchants, or promissory notes, checks, drafts, and paper money, so-called, all rendered fluid and effective to the end designed by the banking agency.

"It is not my purpose to laud the banker, or unduly magnify his importance. He is a needful factor in our industrial system. So also is the merchant and the miller. The motive of action for each is not the love of philanthropy, but the hope of gain. Their respective services are not therefore the less useful. If the banker discharges his function honorably and justly he, like the miller, who grinds the grist with equal fineness for all, and takes his just toll, may claim appreciative praise from those he serves; simply this, and nothing more.

"Now, of all the instruments of credit, there seems to be one especially important and necessary in the multiplied smaller affairs of life, such as the payment of wages, the purchase of commodities in small quantities at isolated points in the interior, and in the small, retail purchases at the shops, the expenses of travel, &c. The particular credit instrument the most effective for these purposes is paper money or metallic coin of small denomination.

"For all the larger transactions of business life the bank check or bank draft best serves; but in the matters to which I have just referred, they are substantially useless.

THE BANKER'S FUNCTION.

"I must speak more specifically of the banker's natural function. There is a lack of understanding of this point. It ought to be made clear. It is popularly supposed that he is a dealer in money. Well, he does, indeed, keep money by him, but that is only to meet such demands as may from time to time be made upon him for the debts he owes. That necessity is an occasion of loss and expense, not of profit. If he were a money dealer he would be ruined by his expense, since he receives it and pays it out at the same price and without charge.

"He is really a dealer in credits and in exchange. Stated more simply, still, he swaps his credit, well known and effective as it ought to be, for the credit obligations of his customer, which, for lack of public knowledge, would be ineffective in the market. The transaction is evidenced by the note of the customer, with or without security, as the case may be, while in return the banker gives his customer an open credit upon his books, against which the latter may draw his checks or drafts, as occasion may require.

"But it often occurs that the customer's purpose cannot be thus served. He desires to pay wages or to go to the frontier to buy lumber or cattle or corn. He must have a medium of exchange different from his own check or draft. They are not well enough known to be available. In such a case the well-known banker's notes of hand in suitable denomination will exactly suit his needs. Society, left in a state of comparative freedom, has by slow steps worked out for itself those tools and appliances and methods best suited to its needs. The practice of banking is as natural an evolution as is the locomotive or the steamship, and in its relation to modern industry and commerce it is hardly less important and serviceable. Note issuing was a development of the natural function of a bank that function being to make private credit effective to commercial and industrial needs. What the bank credit does in a large way, with the aid of checks and drafts, the bank note does in a smaller but equally necessary way.

THE LAW ON NOTE ISSUES.

"I now raise the question toward which all I have said concerning banking and currency has been tending. That question is this: How far shall the power of the law limit or inhibit what we have now seen to be a powerful natural agency, evolved through the outworkings of the industrial and trade relationships of men to each other?

"The answer depends upon our theory of the rights of the citizen under the law. There is a theory that men have no rights other than those derived from or conferred upon them by the law. Those who hold to this may justly claim that the power to assume and discharge the function of banking, with its concomitant of note issuing, is a privilege conferred by the law, and that this privilege should be granted only within such limits as the lawmaking power may be convinced that the inexorable requirements of society demand.

"The other theory is that men are endowed by nature with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. They who hold to this theory may justly claim that society itself knows by experience what tools, methods, machinery, customs, and arrangements best suit its needs, and is entitled to possess and enjoy them. The principle, if a true one, holds good in banking, as everywhere else, subject only to the counter principle that legal restraint is justifiable at the point where the action of the citizen, alone or associated with his fellows, is or may be inimical to the rights of others.

"This principle, as distinguished from its opposite, will, I think, be recognized by the majority as in perfect harmony with American ideas and the genius of our Constitution. Applied to banking, it would leave to the banker and his dealer the arrangement of their mutual credit undertakings. It would allow the banker to extend his credit through his notes of hand, or by an open credit on his books, as might best suit the convenience of his dealers.

"But we can also clearly see the propriety of such limitation and restriction as will save the general public from the injurious effects of a reckless use of such a liberty.

CIRCULATING NOTES OF BANKS.

"The circulating notes issued by the banker should be conditioned by safeguards adequate to protect the note dealer from loss. Upon this point I do not want to be misunderstood. Ample safeguards for the protection of the holders of such notes must be provided. Whether such safeguards should consist of specific security deposited with the Government in trust, as now required, or whether they should be furnished in some other adequate form, is a question of expediency. The question as to what is truly expedient is, in this connection, an important and many-sided one, and I have not the time to consider it. Certain it is that, under the present limitations and requirements of law, our currency system is rigid, expensive, and incapable of properly meeting the public requirement. Nor is this a new discovery. Nine years ago Mr. Windom, then Secretary of the Treasury, in his report to Congress used the following language:

"'The demand for money in this country is so irregular that an amount of circulation which will be ample during ten months of the year will frequently prove so deficient during the other two months as to cause stringency and commercial disaster. * * * The crops of the country have reached proportions so immense that their movement to market, in August and September, annually causes a dangerous absorption of money. The lack of a sufficient supply to meet the increased demands during these months may entail heavy losses upon the agricultural as well as upon other business interests.'

"The truth of Secretary Windom's statement has been many times demonstrated. It is recognized and enforced by President McKinley. In his late message to Congress he said: 'Increased activity in industry, with its welcome attendant—a larger employment for labor at higher wages—gives to the body of the people a larger power to absorb the circulating medium. It is further true that year by year, with larger areas of land under cultivation, the increasing volume of agricultural products, cotton, corn, and wheat, calls for a larger volume of money supply.'

"The President continues: 'In its earlier history the National Banking act seemed to prove a reasonable avenue through which needful additions to the circulation could from time to time be made. Changing conditions have apparently rendered it now inoperative to that end. The high margin in bond securities required, resulting from large premiums which Government bonds command in the market, or the tax on note issues, or both operating together, appear to be the influences which impair its public utility.'

BANKS MAY LOAN ON NOTES.

"Many have been led to believe that the issue of circulating notes by National banks is a monopolized privilege, from which they derive enormous profit. The facts may be briefly presented, and they best refute the common error. Under the most favorable circumstance, the profits now derivable from this source to a bank with a capital, say, of $100,000, using 4 per cent. bonds as a basis for circulation, is less than $295 per annum, where the loaning rate for money is 4 per cent. per annum. Where the rate of interest is 6 per cent. the result is a loss of $98 per annum. Where the rate of interest is 8 per cent. the annual loss is $495.

"Do not these results sufficiently account for the fact that banknote circulation has gradually diminished in volume, while the general needs of the country have steadily grown? We may congratulate ourselves that a majority of the people are gaining a comprehension of the truth, and that both houses of Congress appear to be ready to amend the laws.

"Measures have already been introduced into both Senate and House which have for their clear purpose the placing of secure foundations under that money standard which, practically for more than sixty years, and by expressed statute for more than twenty-five years, has measured the relations in value in all our commodities, and in the many diversified forms of labor and service.

"The measures proposed reach even further than this. They propose certain modifications in the National Banking act, which, if adopted, give promise of curing, to a degree, the obstruction, inconvenience, and embarrassment of a rigid currency system, which has proved its incapacity to respond to public needs.

"It would be profitless now to inquire whether bond-secured banknote circulation can ever be the ideal system which the true economic laws demand. Here, as in other departments of life, habit and preconceptions must be taken into account by those who fix public opinion into law. Certain it is that, until we know the truth and follow it, in all the items of our economic relationship, we shall not be free—free from the disabilities and losses which inevitably follow false opinions and false methods. Nature is, on the whole, a kind but an inexorable mistress. She entices us into the paths of wisdom by alluring whispers of reward, while she follows with a punitive whip the laggards and the indifferent who will not hear her voice."

AMERICAN COAL FOR ITALY.

Expected that Large Shipments Will Be Made from Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 22.—Orders have been given for the Spanish steamer Onton, now in port, to load coal here for Genoa. She arrived several days ago from Bilboa, Spain, with a cargo of iron ore. As soon as possible the steamer will be taken to the coal wharves, and the amount she will take aboard will be about 3,700 tons. This cargo, it is believed, will be the first to go direct from here to Italy. The Italian steamer Hercules, which sailed from this port a few weeks ago, with a cargo of coal for Gibraltar, for orders, has reached the latter place, and it is reported she will proceed to Genoa to discharge.

Philadelphia coal merchants, who ship both from here and Virginia ports, have of late been invading ports in Europe which formerly were supplied by Cardiff. So great are the exportations expected to be in the future that the question of building American steamers for its transportation is being discussed in shipping circles. It is now pointed out that these vessels, for return cargoes, could get iron ore at ports in the Mediterranean, from which a very large amount is to come next year, contracts having been made already by the iron and steel companies. In this way, it is said, American-built and manned steamers could be made to realize handsome profits. Announcement was made yesterday of the chartering of several more steamers to bring ore to this port from Greece.

DEATH IN A RAILROAD WRECK.

C. V. Halsizer Killed and Body Burned —Other Passengers Hurt.

HIGH BRIDGE, N. J., Dec. 22.—A railroad wreck, in which one person was killed and several injured, occurred at this place last night. An eastbound milk train, standing at the station of the High Bridge branch of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, was run into by an eastbound coal train. The engine had cut loose from the coal train and had gone to the station for orders. The loaded cars started down the heavy grade crashing against and forcing the engine into a passenger car, which was attached to the rear of a milk train. The passenger car and two other cars were wrecked and took fire.

Christopher V. Halsizer, forty years old, a grocer of High Bridge, was killed. The injured were Peter Eick of Dowestown, left arm broken, badly bruised; Miss Emma Maxwell of Annandale, sprained ankle; Frank Grant, baggage master, bruised, and later burned in searching the wreck, and a man named Holcomb of Somerville, slightly hurt. Halsizer's body, which was crushed between the seats, was badly burned.

TRIED TO POISON A DOCTOR.

Physician Took Food from His Own Cellar and Found Arsenic in It.

ROCHESTER, Dec. 22.—A special to The Post-Express from Brockport says:

"Nathaniel Davis, a well-known resident of this place, was arrested yesterday on a warrant sworn out by Dr. Wyllis A. Sillman of Clarkson, charging him with attempted murder by mixing poison with food.

"Davis until recently had been employed by Dr. Sillman and boarded at the latter's house. A short time ago Davis asked permission to get some fruit out of the cellar which he had left there. A few days after Davis's visit the physician went into the cellar in the dark and took several spoonsful of honey out of a jar and swallowed it. Almost immediately he was taken violently ill. As soon as he recovered he made an examination and had the honey analyzed. It proved to be mixed with arsenic. Davis was then arrested and placed in jail."

Ex-Judge Piper Arrested.

BUFFALO, Dec. 22.—A dispatch from Lockport says that ex-Judge Charles Piper of Niagara Falls has been arrested on a sealed indictment, charging suboration of perjury. He gave bail in the sum of $1,000. He is accused of encouraging Eugene Ramstein, executor of the Grandcolin estate, to make a false statement to the Surrogate in accounting. Ramstein is in Auburn on his own confession.

R. J. Knox Found Guilty of Swindling.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Dec. 22.—Robert J. Knox, alias J. B. Bennett, who was arrested in New York as one of a gang of swindlers operating in various cities, was placed on trial to-day on a charge of forgery and found guilty. He was remanded to jail, and will probably be sentenced to-morrow. Knox is well connected, and formerly lived in Elmira, N. Y., where he was a member of the bar.

DEFICIENCY IS $51,000,000.

Of This Amount the Army Is Behind $45,007,871 and the Navy $3,143,740 for the Year.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The war has cost a pretty penny, but it is necessary to look below the daily reports of the expenditures for war purposes to find out what the cost really is or will be for the year. The Urgent Deficiency Appropriation bill, which is nearly ready to be reported and which will be about the first bill for appropriations on the calendar, will call for about $51,000,000, of which over $45,000,000 will be for the War Department and for the army. With this amount provided, the War Department will have had allotted to it for the year nearly $200,000,000. The estimates submitted a year ago called for $144,000,000. Congress appropriated $80,000,000, and also reappropriated $70,000,000 appropriated before December last, which, with the $45,000,000 now asked for, will bring the total up to $195,000,000.

Up to the close of business to-day the War Department had expended during half of the fiscal year more than $76,000,000. At this rate the expenditures would be $153,000,000 at the end of the year. This will be $11,000,000 more than the amount estimated as necessary in December last, but less by $42,000,000 than the amount made available by Congress.

As some steps have been announced to be taken in the way of reduction of war expenditures, the large urgency appropriation asked for seems puzzling to some of the members who have heard of the proposed appropriations. The expenditures by the War Department in 1898-9 were about $230,000,000, so that if all the money now asked for is appropriated and used the reduction will amount to about $35,000,000 a year after the war closed.

Among the larger items asked for for the War Department are:

For transportation, troopships, &c.	$20,000,000
Subsistence	3,000,000
Pay, &c., of the army	15,188,832
Quartermaster's supplies	1,500,000
Other amounts are:
Temporary employes, War Department.	150,000
Signal service, for apparatus, war balloons, &c.	165,000
Balloon house at Fort Myer, Va.	18,500
Horses for cavalry and artillery	230,000
Barracks and quarters	1,000,000
Clothing, camp and garrison equipage.	2,000,000
Bringing home remains of officers and soldiers who died abroad	100,000
Manufacture of arms	200,000
Ordnance supplies	330,000
Medical and Hospital Department	500,000
Deep-Water Commission, for surveys for waterways between Great Lakes and Atlantic	20,000

The $15,188,832 already enumerated for pay account includes $3,197,149 for pay of enlisted men, $4,000,000 travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge, $1,500,000 clothing allowance on discharge, and $4,524,715 additional 20 per cent. on pay of enlisted men.

The main Navy Department items are as follows: Ordnance $230,000; coal and other equipment, $370,000; preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks, &c., $2,500,000; Naval Academy, electric light plant, $43,740.

The other departments and bureaus also have urgent deficiency items as follows: Treasury Department, $1,740,060; Interior Department, $196,317; Library of Congress, $47,654; observation of total eclipse of the sun, $8,000.

Favors a River and Harbor Bill.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Representative Berry of Kentucky, a member of the River and Harbor Committee, said to-day that he did not agree with the view of Chairman Burton of the committee, that there would be no River and Harbor bill this year. Mr. Berry thinks it most desirable that the bill should be framed at the present long session, and he is of the opinion the committee will take this view.

Congress Is Flooded with Bills.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The officials of the House of Representatives have struck a balance on the recent deluge of bills, showing that up to the recess the record stood: Total bills introduced, 5,015; joint resolutions, 95; simple resolutions, 65; grand total, 5,176 measures of all kinds.

BALTIMORE'S RAILWAY DEAL.

It Is Said Eastern Roads Are After the Western Maryland.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 22.—Recent moves in the negotiations concerning the intended sale by Baltimore of the Western Maryland Railroad indicate that the acquisition of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal and the Western Maryland Railroad is part of the big deal between the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

The New York syndicate negotiating for the controlling interest of the State of Maryland in the canal and Baltimore's interests in the Western Maryland represents capitalists who, besides holding large interests in the big trunk lines, own immense coal fields in Ohio, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania. By securing the canal and the Western Maryland, the combination will absolutely control every seaboard outlet of the coal fields, and rates can be maintained at whatever figure the combination sets.

The Western Maryland Company owns valuable franchises in Baltimore, including a right of way through the city to tidewater. It has been learned that President James J. Hill of the Great Northern and also one of the heaviest stockholders in the Baltimore and Ohio is a member of the syndicate that is bidding for the Western Maryland.

Great opposition has developed to letting either the Baltimore and Ohio or the Pennsylvania secure the Western Maryland, lest competition be destroyed.

Bernard Carter, now and for many years counsel for the Pennsylvania Railroad in this city, is the new City Solicitor. He says the Pennsylvania is not a bidder for the road.

CHICAGO RAILWAY COMBINE.

Union Traction Company Absorbs the Yerkes Suburban Roads.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—The first legal step toward uniting the property of the Chicago Consolidated Traction Company with the property of the Chicago Union Traction Company was taken when a circular was sent all stockholders of the former company announcing the terms on which the change of control would be effected. The circular notified the stockholders that they could turn in their stock and receive in exchange the bonds of the Chicago Consolidated Traction Company, guaranteed by the Chicago Union Traction Company.

The Chicago Consolidated Traction properties are located in the north and northwest parts of the city and suburbs. The lines were built under the Yerkes management as feeders for the North Chicago Street Railroad Company and the West Chicago Street Railway Company, and Mr. Yerkes retained control of them when he sold out his other surface interests to the Chicago Union Traction Company.

FOUND MURDERED IN HIS HOUSE.

Old Man Killed While His Wife Was at Church, 100 Feet Away.

HUBBARDSTON, Mass., Dec. 22.—Asa Bennett of this place, eighty years old, was found dead in the kitchen of his house late last night by Mrs. Bennett. She attended a prayer meeting in the Congregational church, about 100 feet from the house, and when she returned home found her husband's body on the floor of the kitchen, the head badly beaten by an iron bolt, which was found near by.

Robbery was apparently the motive for the crime, but it is not considered probable that a large amount of money was obtained. The robbery theory is thought to be borne out by the fact that an attempt was made to set fire to the house, as shown by several charred spots on the floor. Suspicion has been directed to William Bennett and William Fraser, and the authorities of several cities have been notified to apprehend them if found.

WORCESTER, Mass., Dec. 22.—William Bennett, the alleged murderer of Asa Bennett, has been arrested in this city.

J. H. Sanders Kills Himself.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Dec. 22.—J. H. Sanders, founder of The Breeders' Gazette of Chicago, committed suicide at a hotel here to-day. Mr. Sanders is the father of A. H. Sanders, one of the United States Commissioners to the Paris Exposition from Illinois.

Anti-Negro Law in Georgia.

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 22.—Gov. Candle has signed the bill prohibiting the sleeping car companies operating in the State from furnishing berths to negro passengers, except in coaches used especially for the accommodation of negroes. The measure is now a law.

THE DAY IN WALL STREET

BIG INTERESTS AVERT PANIC

Movements of American Sugar and Brooklyn Rapid Transit — Produce Exchange Trust Co.'s Affairs.

A great wave of liquidation swept over the stock market yesterday, knocking away the calculations of all those persons in Wall Street who believed that the bottom had at last been reached, and for a time depressing prices so appreciably that in not a few instances the quotations were several points under the figures of Monday when panic prevailed. Fortunately about 2 o'clock, when the speculative element in the Street was beginning to show premonitory signs of another panic, substantial interests came to the rescue as purchasers, with the consequence that in the last hour a rally took place, and much of the loss of the earlier day was recovered.

At the opening of the market signs were not lacking that the day might bring forth sensational developments. The failure of the Globe National Bank in Boston, and the consequent liquidation there; London's weakness, due to the dread of what the fortnightly settlement might bring forth and to the exaggerated reports of further alarming news from South Africa, and, last of all, many unfounded rumors of trouble among bankers and Stock Exchange brokers here—one and all had their depressive influence. As a result the opening showed declines of over 1 point in Burlington, Manhattan, Rock Island, Metropolitan Street Railway, Missouri Pacific, and Federal Steel, while the drop in American Sugar was a full 2 points.

About 10:45 o'clock a rally set in, but it was short lived, and when the decline began again, prices went steadily down, not even generally recognized standard stocks being excepted. At one time St. Paul, Atchison preferred, New York, Ontario and Western, Pacific Mail, Burlington, Rock Island, and Delaware and Hudson showed a decline of over 2 points; Manhattan and Missouri Pacific of over 3, while many of the industrials showed marked declines, also.

As on recent days, American Sugar common was the most conspicuous, and yesterday easily the most erratic of any of the stocks. At one time the low price of 114½—the lowest of the year—was reached, while the close was at 118, a net loss for the day of 3½ points. Even the highest price of the day, 119½, was 2 points below yesterday's best figure. All sorts of stories were in circulation as to the property, but the one evident fact was that the stock was still under bear pressure and had been adversely influenced by the announcement that the Arbuckles had made a flat sugar rate after Jan. 1, which is equivalent to a cut under the prices of the American Sugar Refining Company. At the same time it was said that Boston was a heavy seller of the stock, and that one embarrassed holder of a large block of stock had been obliged to part with it, and that it would be thrown on the market.

Not unnaturally, in the light of its recent decline, the movement of Brooklyn Rapid Transit was watched with some concern, and when it was seen that, in spite of the weakness of the general market, the stock held fairly steady, Wall Street speculators came to the conclusion that the generally expressed belief that the bear drive against the stock was at an end was correct. The speculation in the stock continued throughout the day on an enormous scale, but the final quotation showed only a fractional loss. It was remarked that Standard Oil people were again heavy buyers, together with Vanderbilt and Flower interests, and this led to the report—which seems to be more or less credited—that the property is now under the control of the Flowers, the Vanderbilts, and the Standard Oil people.

The officers and stockholders of the company, indignant at the rumor circulated, hinting at a receiver for the company, have offered a reward of $25,000 for information furnished to the counsel of the company, Sheehan & Collin, leading to the discovery and conviction of the persons responsible for it.

Mr. Sheehan, in company with ex-District Attorney De Lancey Nicoll, appeared in the Criminal Court Building yesterday morning, and Mr. Sheehan went before the Grand Jury. It was reported that the visit was in regard to preparing an indictment against the authors of the report of a Rapid Transit receivership.

Other stocks had more or less activity and irregularity, but after the rally of the afternoon the losses which they at one time sustained were considerably reduced. All told, over 750,000 shares were traded in.

That Wall Street Stock Exchange brokers as a class believe that, after yesterday's decline, the bottom has finally been reached, is borne out by the letters sent to their customers at the close of the day's business, in which, with but one or two exceptions, purchases of the better class of railroad and industrial stocks were for the first time in several weeks confidently recommended.

GEN. THOMAS'S PROPOSAL.

Produce Exchange Trust Company, It Is Believed, Will Resume Business—Meeting of Trustees.

There were meetings at 26 Broadway yesterday afternoon of the full Board of Trustees of the Produce Exchange Trust Company and of the special committee, of which Edwin Gould is Chairman, which took charge of its properties and affairs. On adjournment no Trustee would discuss the meetings or the affairs of the company on the plea that by resolution all had pledged themselves to absolute secrecy in the matter until a definite result had been reached. This official statement was, however, promulgated:

At the meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Produce Exchange Trust Comany, held this afternoon, a proposition was made by Gen. Samuel Thomas to advance the money necessary to pay the depositors in full, provided that upon an examination of its affairs by his representative they should be found by him to be in such condition as to justify him in assuming the responsibility. It was understood that in the event stated Gen. Thomas would accept the Presidency of the company, and that such changes of officers and Trustees should be made as he should determine. The board thereupon adjourned to Wednesday next to await the result of such examination.

The special committee in charge has in contemplation the making of a dividend to depositors at an early date. Almon Goodwin, William Nelson Cromwell, Counsel.

The proposition made by Gen. Thomas was, it was admitted, that which Thomas A. McIntyre made to the Trustees. The announcement that the declaration of a dividend is contemplated was accepted as an indication that the affairs of the company are likely to be adjusted, and that it will resume business.

Gen. Thomas has many corporate interests, and is a well-known railroad man. He won his military title in the civil war, and was born in Ohio. He began life as a mining engineer and went to the war as First Lieutenant of a company he had recruited among the employes of the Keystone Iron Company. He saw service under Grant and Sherman, was in the "march to the sea," and was promoted to be Brigadier General on the recommendation of Major Gen. George H. Thomas. After the war he was an Assistant Commissioner for Mississippi and Adjutant General on the staff of Gen. O. O. Howard.

He entered railroad service in 1878 as Vice President of the Sunday Creek Valley Railroad, and has been an officer of the New York, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad, East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railway, the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, the Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic Railway, the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railway, the Bedford and Bloomfield Railroad, and other systems. He was an intimate friend of the late Calvin S. Brice.

Of corporations of which he is a Director or officer are the International Silver Company, the Manhattan and Metropolitan Trust Companies, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, the Rapid Transit Ferry Company, the Richmond Borough Company, and the Welsbach Commercial Company.

RUN ON A PORTLAND BANK.

About $125,000 Paid Out—Doors Will Open Again To-day.

PORTLAND, Me., Dec. 22.—A rumor of unknown origin concerning the solvency of the Portland Savings Bank started a run on the bank to-day. Deposits were turned over as fast as the books were presented, most of the payments being in gold. The crowd reached such proportions early in the afternoon, however, that officials of the bank concluded to guard against running short of ready cash by taking refuge behind the means provided by law.

A statement issued says the bank has a surplus of $1,250,000 invested in Government securities. About $125,000 was paid out to-day, and the bank will reopen in the morning prepared to meet any and every demand.

The Attractions of Our Stores Are Their Low Prices.

Macy's

R. H. Macy and Co.

Both sides of 14th St. (Running from 13th to 15th St.), Sixth Ave.

Many Holiday Presents at Half Value.

We have reduced prices on thousands of things that are included under the general term "Holiday Merchandise." The aggregate quantity is very large—but there are not many of a kind, and for that reason it would be unwise to enumerate them.

This Sale Means the Final and Thorough Depletion of All Our Christmas Stocks.

It is in complete harmony with the long established Macy policy of never carrying goods over from one season to another. Come, select what you want and save big money.

Special Notice Concerning Deliveries.

In addition to our large and regularly organized delivery service we will have over a hundred special and quick messengers on duty Saturday until 10 P. M. All purchases made up to that hour are guaranteed to be delivered on or before Christmas morning. The foregoing applies to Furniture and other bulky articles, as well as small parcels.

State Bank Examiner Timberlake gave out a statement for publication, saying that the disturbance grew out of the failure of Woodbury & Moulton and the alleged connection of the bank with that firm. While the bank had loaned money to Woodbury & Moulton it had collateral nearly sufficient to secure it from any loss.

Gift News Told Briefly

STORE closes at 7 o'clock this evening.

We will be prompt enough with everything to suit even Santa Claus.

Our 'phone number is 3170—18th, if you need make an inquiry. Be cautious, but let us do the worrying.

What a glorious time it will be. It seems as though this store alone had sold enough to make a Christmas for every one.

And, so, Monday being the day, and the store closed of course, we take this time to wish you all

A Very Merry Christmas

and to thank Our Public for its appreciation of The Wanamaker Store, and our employees for service that has been in the main courteous and satisfactory. That our force is profit sharer in the Christmas business and next week's business, as well, rather increases the heartiness of our good wishes, which are added to your earnings and not given as empty thanks.

Men's Shoes, $1.75 instead of $3.50

Only twenty-one hundred pairs—mostly double-sole shoes, for winter wear, but a sprinkling of lighter sorts. The uppers are of calfskin, russet finish, and ninety per cent. of the shoes are full $3.50 values, but tan shoes are not of the most extreme stylishness.

Selling starts this morning and will end as soon as we can transact the business of selling them. Plenty of help—no scrambling. This is a store, not a trough.

Boys' Black Leather Shoes, $1

Stout sewed soles; satin-finish oil tan leather; all the shoes have heels. Sizes 12 to 4. Only three hundred and ten pairs.

Fifth floor—Reached by express elevators.

Gloves Choose gloves for men at 25c, for some of Scotch wool, up to those of finest fur at $20. And for women at 50c to $2.75. The Princess May at $1 and the Royale at $1.50 cannot be excelled at those Prices. Children's gloves at 25c to $1.50.

Tenth street.

Goatskin Rugs White or gray or black—deodorized—all of first quality. $2.50 for the black; $1.75 for the white or gray.

Third floor.

Imported Novelties of Leatherette

Hundreds of really artistic pieces—necktie boxes, glove and handkerchief boxes, photograph cases that look like sets of books; portfolios with pad and pen and inkstand and stamp box (these 75c). These and many of the pieces have picture backs—the effect heightened by a cover of bolting cloth. But this is talk enough. Every piece is reduced just half, or as near half as the prices could come without oddness. 10c to 75c now. We found all of these things in Vienna last summer and ordered liberally. The shipment was delayed and a week's work must now be done in a day.

Large selling space on Fifth floor. Three tables-ful on Second floor.

Furs What shall the gift be? A diamond, an emerald, or a piece of fur? It seems only fair to link furs with jewels—women love them both.

Much or little—as to price. Here are some for little, as really meritorious furs go—

$5 and $7.50—Cluster Scarfs of Alaska sable.

Second floor, Broadway.

Silk Waists and Others Fresh as the morning—these new Silk Waists. Those you saw here yesterday are sold and gone. Prettily made; liberally corded; flare cuffs and all the kinks of newness. Full lined. $5. Let's spell that out, you may think the figure is wrong—Five Dollars. Black and colors—each waist prettily boxed to make it gift-like.

Waists of neat shepherd's plaid stuff. Full front, with ten folds of black sateen; yoke and plaits in back. 95c.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Women's and Girls' Mackintoshes The stock is a large one—the garments the best that could be found, the prices very reasonable. Those for women, stylish as well as thoroughly good, at $4 to $10. The mackintoshes for girls just like those for adults—except in price, $3.75 to $5. Put up in pretty boxes for giving.

Second Floor, Broadway.

Umbrellas Why giveable? Because we've made them more than mere rain-sheds. The handles are wrought in all sorts of elegant, and queer, and quaint designs. Even the lower priced ones are prettily finished, or they can't get in here.

Other sorts for more, but these, the popular prices for this hurried day, are in fine assortment—even though we've been doing such umbrella selling as we never dreamed of before.

At $5—Umbrellas for men and women, all the handles.

At $3.75—For men and women; pure silk; 26 and 28 in.

A good assortment of walking sticks, too.

Broadway.

Fine Fans Exquisite affairs of painted ivory at $95; of real shell and point lace at $73; of shell and amber, in peacock designs, at $35, and many another beautiful kind at $5 or $3 or $2 or $1.

Broadway.

Pocket-Books There's a pocket-book and card case of seal leather for women at $1. It has sterling silver corners and chamois lining—a good value, we're selling many of them. Many elegant sorts at $3.50, $4.50, $6.50. Shopping and Chatelaine Bags from 50c. upwards.

Broadway.

Men's Neckwear Very giveable—for each scarf is neatly boxed. 50c, $1 and up to $4. We know no store that watches London and Paris styles so closely. Once in a while you'll see a man who turns up his nose at the idea—but he buys the scarfs. Not all are imported—we tell you candidly which is which. But the styles are right.

Men's Goods—Ninth street side.

Men's Suspenders The finer suspenders have buckles and mountings that will last for years and years. We undertake to remount them on new elastic as needed. The expense isn't much—and a fellow comes to think a heap of his old buckles. $2 to $6 for these everlasting sorts. Usual good-looking suspenders at 50c to $1.75.

Men's Goods—Ninth street side.

Men's Bath Robes Turkish Robes, washable, at $3.50 to $8. Others of soft, warm, luxurious blankets in wholly new designs—$3.75 to $8.

Men's Store, Ninth and Broadway.

Women's Handkerchiefs All linen or all silk always. Not a thread of cotton in the large stocks. Hemstitched and embroidered, 35c each. Many beautiful patterns. Some finer and more elaborate handkerchiefs at 50c, 75c and $1 each.

Broadway.

Cameras Never so popular for gifts as this season. Here are kodaks, approved generally, at $3.75 to $23.25. And the Wizard, $6.67 to $35.

Basement.

Games Crokinole at 75c—a remarkably low price for this style. La Lutte has caught public favor—$10. Manhattan tables—$65.

Basement.

Optical Goods A pair of gold spectacles for mother or father at $3 to $10—lenses fitted at your convenience. Lorgnettes, of shell, at $2.75 to $6.50; of silver, $4.75 to $5.50; of gold plate, $5.50 and $6.50.

Broadway.

Big Books for Gifts For some good reason or another, we got these books much below their value. None the worse for it—good trading, not bad books. Will you get one or two to-day?

Famous Parks and Public Buildings of America; 14x11 in.; $2. Our price, $1.

Two Book Stores—the annex is opposite the permanent store—74 E. Ninth.

Guerlain Perfumes One buys Guerlain perfumes as paintings by certain eminent artists are bought. There is an indescribable bestness about them. He has let us have certain odors that come to no other store in America. The Little White Store on the Rue de la Paix makes him almost a neighbor to us in Paris.

Queen Mary Perfumes are made in our own laboratory. Maybe we'll tell you sometime how the sweets are transferred from the blooms to the bottles. We guarantee the purity and excellence of everything sold under our registered trade-mark—"Queen Mary."

Tenth street side.

Cashmere Wrappers Prices start at $3.75; they stop at $20. The simplest ones we have are quite pretty—in solid colors; yoke back and front; plaited back, full front; bretelles over shoulders; touched off with braiding. These are the $3.75 ones.

Second floor.

Girls' Flannel Waists A few pretty garments—good as they're pretty—at reduced prices. One style, at $1.75 instead of $2.25, copied from the latest model for grown-ups. Another at $2.50 that would be good value if priced $3. At $3, good quality flannel in various colors, with small white polka dots.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Children's Outer Wraps---Reduced

We counted noses yesterday—and wraps. The census proves we've none too many Jackets, Reefers, Gretchens and Capes for the girls of 4 to 14 years, but the last one of them should be making some little girl happy.

In the natural order of things what stayed here till after New Year's would be reduced in price. But, better than that, we mark every one of them this morning.

A Fourth Cheaper than Ever

As we write, the cheapest reefer here is $4. But by the time you read it shall have been reduced to $3. And so on, all through, even to the finest.

Second floor, Broadway.

Clothing for Boys

Two hundred and fifty of the scarcest sort of Boys' Overcoats—the best thing of the season is apt to grow scarce—Frieze Overcoats, brown, blue and Oxford gray, for boys of 4 to 16, Five Dollars. Whoever else has any charges $6.50 even though the garments are not as well made.

Certain lines of Sailor Suits are to be closed out, hence Five Dollars instead of $6, $7.50 and $8.50.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

DWIGHT L. MOODY IS DEAD

Succumbs at His East Northfield (Mass.) Home to Overwork.

HE MEETS HIS FATE CALMLY

When the End Was Near He Said: "The World Is Receding and Heaven Opening"—His Career.

EAST NORTHFIELD, Mass., Dec. 22.—With the words "God is calling me," Dwight L. Moody, the Evangelist, died at his home here at noon to-day. His passing was as gentle as could be wished for. His family were gathered at his bedside, and the dying man's last moments were spent in comforting them. Besides the family there were present also Drs. Schofield and Woods and the nurse.

Early in the day the Evangelist realized that the end was near, and talked with his family at intervals, being conscious to the last, except for a few fainting spells.

Once he revived, and with a wonderful display of strength in his voice, said in a happy strain: "What's the matter? What's going on here?"

One of the children replied: "Father, you have not been quite so well, and so we came in to see you."

ADVICE TO HIS SONS.

A little later Mr. Moody talked freely to his sons, saying: "I have always been an ambitious man, not ambitious to lay up wealth, but to leave you work to do, and you're going to continue the work of the schools at East Northfield and Mount Herman and of the Chicago Bible Institute."

Once the stillness of the chamber was broken by the anguished cry of Mrs. A. P. Fitt, his daughter, in the words, "Father, we can't spare you."

The reply, so characteristic of the man, was, "I am not going to throw my life away. If God has more work for me to do, I'll not die."

As the noonday hour drew near, the watchers at the bedside noted the approach of death. Several times Mr. Moody's lips moved as if in prayer, but the articulation was so faint that the words could not be heard.

Just as death came Mr. Moody awoke as if from slumber, and said, with much joyousness: "I see earth receding; Heaven is opening; God is calling me," and a moment later he had entered upon what one of his sons described as "A triumphal march into heaven."

The death of Mr. Moody was not unexpected, although hope for his temporary recovery from illness was hoped for. In the family there was fear that death was not a long way off. The cause of death was a general breaking down of his health, due to overwork. His constitution was that of an exceedingly strong man, but his untiring labors had gradually undermined his vitality until the heart showed signs of weakness. His exertions in the West last month brought on the crisis, and the collapse came on Nov. 16, during the series of meetings at Kansas City.

RETURNED TO HIS HOME.

An early diagnosis by eminent physicians made it evident that Mr. Moody's condition was serious, and, canceling his engagements, he returned to his home, in East Northfield, so near the greatest achievements of his later life. On reaching his home the family physician, Dr. N. P. Wood, took charge of Mr. Moody, and for some days bulletins as to the patient's condition were issued, all having an encouraging tone, seemingly, but unerringly pointing to the fact that the evangelist's work on earth was about finished. Last week a change for the worse prepared immediate friends for what was to come.

This week, however, the patient improved steadily until yesterday, when he appeared very nervous. This symptom was accompanied by weakness, which much depressed the family, who were anxiously watching the sufferer. Last evening Mr. Moody appeared to realize that he could not recover, and so he informed his family. During the night the patient had spells of extreme weakness, and at 2 o'clock this morning Dr. Wood was called, at the request of Mr. Moody, in order that his symptoms might be noted. A hypodermic injection of strychnia caused the heart to become stronger. Then Mr. Moody requested his son-in-law, Mr. Fitt, and Dr. Wood to retire. Mr. Moody's eldest son, Will R. Moody, who had been sleeping the first of the night, spent the last half with his father.

At 7:30 o'clock this morning Dr. Wood was called, and when he reached Mr. Moody's room he found his patient in a semi-conscious condition. Then it was that the family was called to the bedside, where they remained until death came.

The arrangements for the funeral have not as yet been fully completed, but the services will be held next Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Congregational Church. The burial will be on Round Top.

This is a spot on the seminary grounds, near Mr. Moody's home lot, which has become famous in connection with the Summer meetings, and on which hundreds of students' gatherings have been held, many of them conducted by Mr. Moody himself. On this account it seemed to the family fitting that the burial should be at that spot.

TO ACCOMMODATE GUESTS.

The Northfield, the Summer hotel connected with the Moody schools, will be opened for the accommodation of friends coming to attend the funeral services, the hour of holding the latter being governed by the time of the arrival and departure of trains.

All three of the Moody schools are at present closed for the Christmas vacation.

Telegrams and other messages of sympathy have been received by the family from friends, admirers of, and co-workers with Mr. Moody, in all parts of the country.

Mr. Moody is survived by his wife and three children—two sons and one daughter. Two of the children are married, namely, William R. Moody and Emma, who is married to A. P. Fitt. William R., Mr. Moody's eldest child, lives with his family at Northfield, is a graduate of Yale, and is managing editor of The Record of Christian Work, which is published in Chicago and gives a general record of Christian work in the United States and Great Britain. William R. Moody has had three children, one son and two daughters. The son died about a year and a half ago, and the daughter died last Summer. The death of this granddaughter, who was a great pet of Mr. Moody, had a great effect upon him. Since then another daughter has been born to William R. Moody, the only living grandchild of the evangelist by his eldest son. This babe is only about six weeks old.

Mrs. Fitt has only one child—Emma—about four years old. Mr. Moody's youngest surviving child is Paul Moody, now a student in his second year at Yale. A. G. Moody, a nephew of the evangelist, is manager of the seminary at Northfield.

CAREER OF THE EVANGELIST.

Started Life as a Shoe Clerk and Began His Church Work in the City of Chicago.

Dwight Lyman Moody was born in Northfield, Franklin County, Mass., Feb. 5, 1837, of Puritan stock. He was the sixth of a family of nine children. His father, Edwin Moody, owned a comfortable little farmhouse and a few acres of land, which he cultivated in his leisure hours, although following the trade of a stonemason. He died suddenly in 1841, when his son Dwight was four years old. At the age of seventeen the latter left Northfield, with his mother's permission, to seek employment in Boston, where his uncle was in business as a shoe merchant. That relative engaged his country nephew with some reluctance and on two conditions. The lad agreed to be governed by his advice and to attend regularly the Sunday school and services of the Mount Vernon Congregational Church.

BASHFUL AS A BOY.

At Northfield young Moody had attended with his mother the Unitarian Church and he was not well grounded in evangelical teachings. His bashfulness in the presence of cultured Christians and his poor command of words in which to express his thoughts led his Sunday school teacher, Edward Kimball, through whose personal efforts he was converted, to say of him:

"He is very unlikely to become a Christian of clear and decided views of doctrinal truth, still less to fill any extended sphere of public usefulness."

After his conversion young Moody applied for membership in the church, but was kept waiting a year, being admitted in 1856. Even after his admission to the Church his attempts to defy the brethren by remarks in the prayer meeting were of such a character that his pastor, the late Rev. Dr. Kirk, took him aside, and suggested to him that he might serve the Lord in some other way more acceptably. Others, too, advised him to keep silence. In the Fall of 1856 he left Boston for Chicago, where he became a salesman in the shoe trade. He entered the Plymouth Congregational Church, and showed his earnest spirit by renting four pews, which he kept filled with young men and boys. He asked that he might become a Sunday school teacher, and was told that he could if he would bring his own scholars. Next Sunday he marched into the schoolroom at the head of eighteen ragged boys whom he had collected during the week. Later he started a mission of his own in an empty tavern in North Chicago. His school grew so much that North Market Hall was occupied, and John V. Farwell supplied benches for the scholars and became its Superintendent. Largely through Mr. Moody's personal canvassing, sixty teachers were obtained, and the average attendance of scholars was kept up to 650. There can be little doubt that had his desire been simply to get on in the world his extraordinary tact, energy, and business capacity would have made the road to success an easy one. He became known among his acquaintances for years as "Crazy Moody," but, though an enthusiast, he imported into the work of evangelization the very qualities which made him successful in business and which never for a moment deserted him during his whole public career. He gave up business in 1860 to devote his whole attention to religious work. He reduced his expenses to a minimum, doing without a home and sleeping on a bench in the Young Men's Christian Association rooms. In a short time he became a city missionary, and was able to assist others. In August, 1862, he married Miss Emma C. Revell, a sister of Fleming H. Revell, a Chicago publisher, by whom he had two sons and a daughter. Aided by his wife, he worked hard for his mission, and in 1863 a church building was erected. Two years later he was elected President of the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago.

FACES PECUNIARY TROUBLES.

For a long time Mr. Moody was beset by pecuniary difficulties. One morning, some time after his marriage, he said to his wife: "I have no money, and the house is without supplies. It looks as if the Lord had had enough of me in this mission work, and is going to send me back again to sell boots and shoes." A day or two later he received contributions sufficient for his immediate wants.

As most of his converts were previously members of no religious denomination, he early found it necessary to assume the pastorate of the congregation himself, which he did as a member of the Congregational body. Though destitute of private means, he declined all offers of a regular salary, resolving to trust for his maintenance solely to such contributions as might be voluntarily made by those interested in the work. During the interval between 1865 and 1871 he traveled in the interest of Sunday school and Young Men's Christian Association work, attending conventions, delivering addresses, and organizing societies for promoting the spread of the Gospel.

In 1871, during the great conflagration, the chapel in which his congregation met for worship was destroyed. Mr. Moody was forced to flee with his family and leave everything behind. The family found temporary shelter in the house of a friend. The calamity only served to incite the evangelist to fresh and greater efforts, and never was his indomitable energy exerted to better purpose. Within a month a temporary building had been erected, and this was speedily replaced by a fine structure that cost $70,000, and afforded accommodation for nearly 4,000 people. A debt of $20,000 remained on the building. Funds, in the estimation of the evangelist, did not come in quickly enough. One Sunday night after a stirring address, he astonished his large audience by upbraiding them for what he called their "stinginess," and declared emphatically that unless the debt were paid off by the following Sunday night the church would be closed and kept locked up until the money was forthcoming. That very evening $14,000 was subscribed, and the balance was received long before the time of probation had expired.

HIS FIRST CHURCH.

The edifices mentioned, however, were by no means the only ones that Mr. Moody was instrumental in having erected. Major D. W. Whittle, his friend and associate in Christian work, recently wrote as follows concerning the monumental result of the evangelist's efforts:

"The first building he erected was the Illinois Street Church, in Chicago, erected about 1858, for the shelter of his mission school and the church which grew out of it. His second building enterprise was the Young Men's Christian Association Building in Chicago, erected in 1866, the first commodious edifice for Young Men's Christian Association purposes in this country. His third enterprise was the re-erection of the first Young Men's Christian Association building, destroyed by fire, both known as the Farwell Hall. This also was destroyed in the great fire of 1871 and again rebuilt, mainly through Mr. Moody's efforts. The fourth and present beautiful edifice, the finest perhaps in the world, stands partly upon the original site on land given by John V. Farwell. At the dedication of Farwell Hall Mr. Moody confessed his faith that, by the Lord's blessing, a religious influence was to go out from there that should extend 'through every county in the State, through every State in the Union, and finally, crossing the waters, should help to bring the whole world to God.' The other Young Men's Christian Association buildings in America for which money was raised by Mr. Moody and in whose erection he was more or less conspicuous were at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Baltimore, and Scranton. In addition to these are twenty more buildings at Northfield, Mass.; the Chicago Avenue Church, and Bible and Institute Buildings, Chicago.

"In Great Britain these buildings were erected by Mr. Moody's personal efforts or from the inspiration of his works: Christian Union Buildings, Dublin; Christian Institute Building, Glasgow; Carubber's Close Mission, Edinburgh, the story of which is not only interesting but romantic; Conference Hall, Stratford; Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, London, and the Young Men's Christian Association Building, Liverpool."

NORTHFIELD INSTITUTIONS.

At his beloved Northfield no fewer than three institutions were under his direct supervision. These are the Northfield Seminary for Girls, which was erected in 1879, and comprises a dozen buildings; the Mount Hermon School for Boys, opened two years later, and a Bible Training School, established in 1890.

The seminary was established primarily for the daughters of the farmers of that section who could not afford to send them to existing educational institutions. The idea had been conceived as early as 1875, when Mr. Moody had resolved to make Northfield his permanent home. Driving through the country, he came, one day, upon a poor home before which he saw a mother and two daughters braiding straw hats. The father was a paralytic, and helpless. Deeply affected by the evidences of privation and of the narrow life and meagre opportunities to which the young women were subject, but examples of many, he decided that his efforts should be directed toward securing for them better things.

The founding of the school followed. He first purchased a few acres of barren farm land in front of his own house on which to erect a suitable building for his school, but without waiting for this improvement he opened a school in his own home with eight pupils quartered in an extension which he built to his house. Soon he had twenty-five pupils. From that the school has grown to 350 students. There are 210 acres of land, eight dormitories, a gymnasium, a library, a recitation hall, an auditorium, and farm buildings. Over 2,300 students have been trained in its halls. So great are the demands upon it that many pupils are annually turned away.

Many of the students leave the seminary to engage in missionary work at home and abroad, while others take a course preparatory for university work, but a large proportion, of course, return to their homes after a term or two at the school, and they have made the name of Northfield a familiar one through a wide section.

HIS SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

The establishment of the school for boys next engaged Mr. Moody's attention, and the beautiful home of the institution at Mount Hermon followed. This started on a larger scale than had the seminary. It now boasts of a recitation hall, science hall, chapel, dormitories, and twelve cottages, with a farm of 800 acres. Its faculty numbers twenty-six, and the students about 325 annually, many of whom are fitted for Yale, Harvard, and other New England colleges, while others are fitted for missionary work. As with the girls, the majority receive their final training here.

Courses in Bible study, dressmaking, and cooking are given at the Bible Training School. In addition to the arduous duties the care of these enterprises involved, he superintended the famous Summer conferences in Northfield, attended by thousands from all parts of the United States and many other parts of the world; spoke at revivals all over the country, and exercised personal supervision over his Bible Institute in Chicago.

Wherever he went he attracted vast audiences, and often stirred them to the highest pitch of devotional fervor. His great campaigns of former years in this city, Cleveland, Chicago, San Francisco, and other centres, in conjunction with Ira D. Sankey, are well remembered.

In their evangelistic campaign, in 1875, Moody and Sankey held meetings which packed the old Madison Square Garden and attracted attention which made their fame world-wide. Moody had a rapid delivery, and the reporting of his talks was a sore trial to the most expert of stenographers, who were compelled to take down as many as 230 words a minute. But so incisive was Mr. Moody's method that it was not difficult for the mind of the hearer to absorb the flow of his oratory.

The effect of their work here was a repetition on a larger scale of their triumph in Great Britain, and while not all of their hearers went to hear the Gospel, but only to hear and see the evangelists who were attracting so much attention, their work was attended with equal religious success.

Two years ago he held revival meetings at Carnegie Hall. As late as last October he journeyed to Brooklyn to help along the revival movement started by the Rev. Dr. Carson. He spoke twice a day for a week at various churches, and on each occasion hundreds were unable to gain admittance, so great was the crowd.

Mr. Moody went abroad several times. His first trip to Great Britain was made in 1867. His sojourn on that occasion was brief, and his evangelistic methods occasioned more surprise than anything else. Soon after the great fire in Chicago he again crossed the Atlantic and preached in several parts of England, in co-operation with Philip Phillips, the author of the "Singing Pilgrim," who was then making a tour of the United Kingdom.

His most memorable visit, however, was in 1873. It was protracted through a period of nearly three years, and he was accompanied by Ira D. Sankey, with whom for many years his name was inseparably associated.

Moody had first met Sankey at a Young Men's Christian Association Convention in Indianapolis, and, being impressed with his vocal powers and his methods of Sunday school work, induced him to become his associate in Chicago.

WORK IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Moody and Sankey were invited to undertake a series of evangelistic services in Great Britain by a clergyman of the English Church and a prominent Christian layman, both of whom resided at Newcastle-on-Tyne. A striking coincidence occurred in the death of both the clergyman and layman while the evangelists were on their way to Newcastle, which was to have been their starting point. Much perturbed, but not discouraged, they went to York, where their labors created such an impression that ere long invitations began to pour in upon them from all sides. They went to Edinburgh and other parts of Scotland, and created a furor. Despite adverse influences they succeeded in arousing the clergy of all sects, who had been astonished at their success, to join in the work of evangelization. In London they encountered opposition and were subjected to hostile criticism on the part of some of the newspapers. The "illiterate American evangelists," as they were called, however, went ahead, and attracted ever-increasing multitudes to their meetings, made up of all classes, until the power of their methods had to be acknowledged. They preached through the provinces and in Wales and Ireland. On their return to this country, Sankey's health broke down and he was unable to co-operate with Moody. They returned to England again in 1883, and on that occasion went to Paris, where they held services in an American church for the benefit of the Anglo-American colony. They also visited Canada on several occasions.

At the outbreak of the civil war Mr. Moody became an active lieutenant of George H. Stuart of the Christian Commission, and on several occasions went to the front, but his main work was in Chicago as head of the local branch. Again, during the war with Spain, Mr. Moody carried his work into the ranks by going down to Tampa, where in a large tent his voice was raised in his evangelistic work.

Mr. Moody never allowed anybody to run things for him. He always insisted upon having the services conducted in his own way, no matter in whose church he might be, and he was always careful to see that ample accommodation for reporters was provided. He was a firm believer in the efficacy of publicity. "The more publicity given to evangelistic meetings and addresses the better," said he during his recent visit to Brooklyn. "There is no medium of propagation like the press. While what I or another man can say is heard only by one or two thousand people—and that's a large audience—the essence of the sermon is often conveyed to two or three hundred thousand in a single newspaper."

In addition to the many printed accounts of his meetings and reports of his addresses, Mr. Moody published a number of pamphlets and books written by himself, including "Heaven," "Secret Power," and "Way to God and How to Find It."

IRA D. SANKEY ON MR. MOODY.

The Singer Talks of His Dead Associate—Dr. A. C. Dixon Gives His Estimate of the Man.

Ira D. Sankey, the singer, who was at one time associated with Mr. Moody, received a telegram at his home, 148 South Oxford Street, Brooklyn, yesterday, notifying him of Mr. Moody's death. Although Mr. Sankey knew that Mr. Moody was seriously ill, the news of his death was a surprise, as he had been led to believe that his friend was improving. Mr. Sankey will leave Brooklyn for East Northfield this evening, to be present at the funeral.

He said last evening:

"Mr. Moody's death comes upon us with a suddenness that is very trying, as we have been receiving letters every day from Northfield speaking of his improvement, as indicated by his sleeping and resting better. One letter spoke of his telling his son-in-law a little story of how he and I were caught on one occasion by the incoming tide near Sunderland, on the north coast of England, and of how we had to wade through the water and climb a high cliff to reach the land. Had we remained a few minutes longer our escape would have been cut off.

"I mention this just as one instance of Mr. Moody's frame of mind, as described in these recent letters.

"I went to see him a week ago to-day, but as he was very weak I refrained from going into the room where he was. Had I thought then that there was so great danger of his dying, I would have gone in to have a last word with him.

"We were connected in revival work for twenty-seven years. We began our joint work at Indianapolis in 1870. He and I were delegates to a Young Men's Christian Association convention there, and we then became acquainted. Mr. Moody urged me to give up the Government position I then held and join him in religious work in Chicago. I did so after six months' persistence on his part. Until he spoke to me about it I had never had any idea of engaging in th's work.

"The story that we ever separated is without the slightest foundation. It is true that I have been holding meetings, singing and speaking both, but this course met with Mr. Moody's entire and hearty approval.

"We last appeared together at Dr. Storrs's church last Summer. The last time I spoke to Mr. Moody was on the last Sabbath he was presiding in Dr. Hall's church. I called upon him at the Murray Hill Hotel, and we had a long talk. I have not seen him since then. The last letter I received from him was just as he was starting on his trip to the West. He wrote to me that he would stop at the Murray Hill Hotel while in New York on his way West, and would be pleased to see me there. I was in Rochester at the time. As soon as I received his letter there I telegraphed him that I would start that night for New York and would call upon him. I arrived at the Murray Hill Hotel the next morning, but Mr. Moody had already gone West to the meeting where he was taken ill.

"What was the greatest meeting we ever addressed? The one in Agricultural Hall, London, during our first visit abroad in 1874. We had an audience of 17,000. Our biggest meeting in the United States was in the Wanamaker building in Philadelphia in 1875.

"In my opinion, Mr. Moody was one of the greatest men of this century in the marvelous common sense he exhibited, in his earnestness in his life work, and in his desire to help people and to do good. He was the most unselfish man I ever knew, and I believe he died without one dollar of money belonging to himself. He cared nothing of money for himself, but raised large sums for others.

"He was the greatest revivalist of his age. Tens of thousands have professed conversion under his preaching in this and in the old country. He appeared in every city in this country and in every State, from California to Maine, in Winter and in Summer, in sunshine and in shadow, and never had to give up an appointment on account of ill-health. Mr. Moody's health had been running down for years. He knew it. The doctors five years ago told him that he must cut down the number of his sermons from three to two a day."

Among Mr. Sankey's callers last evening was his venerable neighbor, the Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, who dropped in on his way to evening services to express his deep regret at the news of Mr. Moody's death.

The Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon of the Hanson Place Baptist Church, who was actively associated with Mr. Moody in his revival work at Cooper Institute, Carnegie Hall, and elsewhere, in this city, spoke of Mr. Moody at the prayer meeting in his church last evening. He will preach to-morrow morning on "Moody; the Man and His Message."

Dr. Dixon said that as an evangelist Mr. Moody was second to none. As an educator he was, though himself not an educated man, unique.

"He was one of the truest and loveliest men I ever met," said Dr. Dixon, "simple as a child in faith and as full of fun as a boy on proper occasions. He was one of the greatest leaders of men. Had he commanded Grant's army he would have got it into Richmond long before Grant did."

Tributes Paid at Plymouth Church.

The death of Dwight L. Moody, the evangelist, was discussed with deep regret at the weekly prayer meeting in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, last evening. Both the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, the pastor of the church, and the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, the former pastor, who was present, paid high tributes to the dead evangelist.

His Songs Sung in Many Languages.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 22.—Bishop I. N. Joyce of the Methodist Episcopal Church, said in regard to the death of Mr. Moody: "Mr. Moody's Gospel songs have been translated into nearly all languages and have had a marvelous effect. I have heard his songs sung by natives in their own tongue in China, Japan, and Korea. The cause of Jesus Christ has lost one of the most effective workers it ever had."

BANQUET TO GEN. BROOKE

Gen. Wood and Others Express Respect and Good Wishes.

WILL LEAVE FOR TAMPA TO-DAY

The Patria Newspaper Suggests that the Present Generation Is Unfit to Govern Itself.

HAVANA, Dec. 22.—Sixty-five persons were present at the farewell banquet tendered to Gen. Brooke to-day at the Paris Restaurant. Gen. Mario Menocal presided, and Ernest Lee Conant acted as toastmaster. Señor Llorente, in proposing the health of Gen. Brooke, said:

"Gen. Brooke was called upon to govern Cuba under the extremely difficult conditions of transition from the old, narrow system to the new, liberal régime, and he did so without injuring the rights of any one. Cubans will always remember him with gratitude and love."

Major Gen. Wood, who spoke briefly in response to words of welcome, said:

"The United States is in Cuba in the person of representatives who intend to carry out a great work and to fulfill strictly the promises of the United States Congress. As for myself, I can only do what the President has sent me to do, but I hope to enjoy the esteem and confidence of the Cuban people as Gen. Brooke has enjoyed them."

Gen. Ludlow said: "Those American officials who remain behind may count themselves fortunate if, when the time comes for them to leave the island, they are followed by the respect and good wishes of those whom they in turn leave behind, as Gen. Brooke is about to do. The Cubans have had no better friends than the American officers."

Gen. Brooke, in responding, said in part: "I shall always remember the long hours of toil in Cuba, but I shall also ever recall the kindness shown me by all Cubans, especially by those who realize that the Americans are their best friends."

Gen. Brooke will leave to-morrow for Tampa. A squadron of the Seventh Cavalry and a battery of the Second Artillery, with a band, will escort him from the palace to the wharf. A Major General's salute will be fired from Cabanas as the steamer leaves the harbor at 3 o'clock.

A Governor General's salute will be fired in honor of Gen. Wood.

The Patria says: "Cubans were formerly accustomed to say that the Autonomists forfeited all right to be called Cubans by the shameless manner in which they abused their short term of office, giving all the good billets to their own kinsmen and friends. But after the shameful way in which the first revolutionary government has wound up its term of office, having made and given all the billets it could to its own friends, Cubans are forced to realize that Spanish corruption has contaminated the heart of the present generation. We must look to the schoolmaster to build up a generation of honest citizens."

At to-day's meeting of the Municipal Council a motion was made to send an address of thanks to President McKinley for his candid references to the Cuban people and the future of Cuba in his recent message to Congress. The motion was rejected on the ground—as asserted by the principal speaker in opposition—that the message contained nothing new, but merely reiterated a former promise.

MONEY FOR THE LAWTON FUND.

Committee Asks for Contributions as Christmas Presents—Success of the Movement Is Assured.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The committee engaged in raising a fund for the relief of the widow and four young children of Major Gen. Henry W. Lawton is gratified with the generous response to its appeal, and now suggests through the press that all those feeling able and so disposed make a Christmas offering to promote the work in hand. It is proposed to cable Mrs. Lawton on Monday the result, as evidence of the appreciation of her husband's splendid services and the sympathy and regard in which she is held by her countrymen.

The Riggs National Bank has been designated as depository of the fund. Remittances should be made to Gen. H. C. Corbin, Adjutant General, Washington; Gen. John F. Weston, Acting Commissary General, Washington; Major Gen. W. R. Shafter, San Francisco, and Gen. William Ludlow, Havana, Cuba.

Adjt. Gen. Corbin to-day deposited checks and cash amounting to $2,443, representing contributions received by him for the benefit of the widow and children of Major Gen. Lawton. The total contributions to this fund to date amount to $4,534, including $1,000 promised by the citizens of Milwaukee.

Gen. Corbin and his associates are satisfied that the main object of the fund, which is to raise the mortgage from the family estate, at Redlands, Cal., and provide for the future of the family, will be accomplished. He has been notified by the Western Union Telegraph Company and by the Postal Telegraph Company that they will carry free all telegraphic matter relating to the Lawton fund.

NEW YORK CONTRIBUTIONS.

The Bankers' Trust Company, at 10 Wall Street, has been named by the committee having charge of the raising of a fund for the widow of Gen. Lawton as the depository of contributions received in this city and vicinity. All contributions forwarded to the Bankers' Trust Company will be duly acknowledged. The following contributions were received yesterday:

ON GEN. LAWTON'S DEATH.

Board of Aldermen Adopts an Appropriate Resolution of Eulogy.

The Board of Aldermen yesterday adopted by a rising vote this resolution, which was offered by Mr. McCall, the Tammany leader:

"Whereas, Dying in the battle front, his face to the foe, Major Gen. Henry W. Lawton of the United States Volunteers met the death of a brave and valiant soldier, and by his abrupt leaving of this life the United States of America has lost one of her most gallant, noble, and patriotic sons; and,

"Whereas, His intrepidity upon every battlefield where he served from the time of the civil war until he was killed at Manila proved him a born soldier, a hero who was as prompt in obedience as he was daring in command; and,

"Whereas, In private life he was upright, manly, generous, and honorable, and in all respects represented the highest type of American manhood; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the members of the Municipal Assembly of the City of New York, deplore the death of Gen. Lawton and tender to the surviving members of his family our sincere sympathy in their irreparable bereavement."

Arkansas Citizens Respond.

HELENA, Ark., Dec. 22.—Money is being raised in this city to be sent to Washington for the fund to pay the mortgage on Gen. Lawton's home. Subscriptions have been limited to small sums and money is being received from almost every citizen in this vicinity.

WILL ERECT A LAWTON MONUMENT.

Indiana Men Meet to Raise Funds—Mrs. Lawton Accepts.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 22.—An afternoon paper to-day cabled Mrs. Lawton, Manila:

"Will you accept monument from the people of Indiana?"

The following reply was received from Lieut. Col. Edwards, Chief of Staff, acting for Mrs. Lawton, and who has been designated to bring the body to this country:

"Yes. Arlington."

It is believed from this that Mrs. Lawton

In addition to $950 raised in this city for Mrs. Lawton, there has been subscribed $525 toward a monument for Gen. Lawton. Bass Post, G. A. R., at Fort Wayne, to-night set a day for a mass meeting for popular subscriptions to the monument fund, and formulated a request to Mrs. Lawton, asking that the body be buried at his old home there.

A call was issued to-day by the President of the Indianapolis Board of Trade for a meeting of the Board of Governors to-morrow, when formal action on the Lawton memorial will be taken, and a committee will be named to act in conjunction with the committee named by President English of the Commercial Club.

At Richmond a mass meeting was held to start a movement to raise a fund for the erection of a monument in Indianapolis. All the Grand Army of the Republic posts of the city met last night and adopted resolutions, nearly all of them voting subscriptions either to the monument or aid fund, or both.

From the general interest evinced in the two movements, it is believed Indiana will raise $25,000 for the monument in a week or more, and a sum over half as large will be raised for Mrs. Lawton.

FUNERAL OF GEN. LAWTON.

His Body Now Lies in the Paco Cemetery Chapel.

MANILA, Dec. 22.—Gen. Lawton's remains were placed in the chapel in the Paco Cemetery this morning. Private services were held at the residence, and the body was carried to the cemetery by members of the General's staff and escorted by Troop 1 of the Fourth Cavalry.

Public services will be held later.

PHILIPPINE PAPER SUSPENDS.

The Democracia, a Pro-American Organ, Objects to Orders Issued by the Provost Marshal.

MANILA, Dec. 22.—The newspaper Democracia, the organ of a coterie of Filipinos, including the Supreme Court Judges, favoring American control in the Philippines, to-night announces that it has been decided to suspend publication. The paper was started at the suggestion and under the patronage of the Philippine Advisory Commission, headed by Prof. J. G. Schurman.

The Democracia prints a single page, in big type. In the statement accompanying the announcement of its suspension, the editor says he has been directed by the Provost Marshal to retract certain criticisms of the Clerical methods adopted in regard to the management of schools, and adds:

"Recognizing the authority of the Provost Marshal, we have no recourse except to comply, and have decided to suspend publication until the present extraordinary conditions regarding press matters disappear. When we know what laws rule us, by what mode we are judged, and to whose jurisdiction press matters are amenable, the Democracia will reappear."

The paper has generally been a warm supporter of the Administration. The Provost Marshal recently threatened to suppress it for publishing an editorial asserting that Manila streets were in a worse condition under the American than they had been under Spanish administration.

The Manila Times was also recently warned, with an intimation of imprisonment and confiscation, for printing an editorial recommending the creation of a Board of Charity Commissioners to control the charitable institutions, on account of rumors of mismanagement of charitable funds by the Church authorities.

The newspapers complain bitterly that the authorities exercise a paternal supervision, threatening suppression, they claim, for trifling errors in the publication of news not connected with public matters. They also say the censorship handicaps newspaper enterprise by suppressing cable dispatches, received from respectable agencies, whose transmission is of an exceedingly costly character. The matter suppressed includes reports of Government actions, among them being Philippine and American occurrences which might give the Filipinos an unfavorable opinion of the United States.

PHILIPPINE CASUALTIES.

The New Orleans Arrives at Manila.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—The New Orleans arrived at Manila to-day, just two months out from New York.

TO REFIT THE CONSTITUTION.

Bill Drafted to Turn "Old Ironsides" Into a Training Ship.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Secretary Long has addressed letters to Senator Hale and Representative Boutelle, who look after naval legislation in the Senate and House, relative to the plan of refitting the historic old craft Constitution as a naval training ship. The Massachusetts State Society of the Daughters of 1812 propose to pay for the refitting through popular subscriptions, and Secretary Long refers to this as a worthy purpose, inspired by patriotic impulse.

At the request of Mr. Hale, the Secretary has drafted a bill to cover the plan, providing:

"That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to cause the United States frigate Constitution to be repaired at the Navy Yard, Boston, and restored to a serviceable condition, in order that she may be again placed in commission and used as a training ship or otherwise, the expenses of such repairs and restoration to be paid from funds to be raised by popular subscription under the auspices of the Massachusetts Society United States Daughters of 1812. Provided, that such repairs and restoration shall be made under the supervision and control of the Navy Department, and shall not be undertaken until an amount sufficient to defray the cost thereof shall have been subscribed and guaranteed by the said society."

GEN. MILES INSPECTS NEW GUN.

Army Commander Pleased with the Brown Segmental Cannon.

Special to The New York Times.

READING, Penn., Dec. 22.—Gen Nelson A. Miles, in company with Capt. C. B. Wheeler, Lieut. I. N. Lewis, ex-Congressman J. H. Outhwaite of Ohio, and George H. Powell, members of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, were in Reading to-day, and inspected the big Brown segmental tube wire gun constructed at the Scott Iron Works. They spent over an hour examining the gun, and Gen. Miles declared that he was greatly pleased with its construction. He added that he has always been partial to the wire-bound guns, because they were exceptionally true and distinctive.

The big gun inspected at the Scott Works here to-day is thirty-seven feet in length, and it is expected that it will throw a six-hundred-pound missile twelve miles. It was made at a cost of $33,000, appropriated by Congress for the purpose, and is intended for the defense of New York Harbor.

RELIGIOUS NEWS AND VIEWS

More Churches Than Usual Will Observe Christmas This Year.

PRESBYTERIANS TO TAKE PART

At All the Masses for Roman Catholics There Will Be Collections in Behalf of the Orphans.

Christmas this year will be very extensively observed by the churches of various denominations. This unusual observance of Christmas obtains among Presbyterians in particular. Services will be held in the Brick Presbyterian Church, Central Church, West Fifty-seventh Street; West End Church, Old First Church, Fifth Avenue and Twelfth Street; Madison Avenue Church, and Fourth Avenue Church. Appropriate music will be rendered at each service.

The Collegiate churches will hold a union service in the Fifth Avenue Collegiate Church, at 11 A. M. The Rev. Dr. E. B. Coe will be assisted by the entire clergy staff of the Collegiate Church, consisting of ten ministers. The following Baptist churches will hold Christmas services: Fifth Avenue Church, Calvary Church, Madison Avenue Church, and the Church of the Epiphany.

All the Episcopal and Catholic churches will hold some sort of a service. The Moravian Church, Lexington Avenue and Thirtieth Street, will hold a service on Christmas Eve, in which the children of the Sunday school will take part. In the Catholic churches a collection will be taken up for the orphans. Archbishop Corrigan will celebrate high pontifical mass in the cathedral on Christmas morning.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Notes on the International Series Selection for Dec. 31.

Copyright, 1899, by John R. Whitney.

SUBJECT.—Review.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits.—Psalm 103, 2.

The lessons of the last quarter have covered somewhat less than a century of time. They have all directed our attention to the relation of God's people to Himself, and to the obligations growing out of that relationship. They were His restored people. Our studies, therefore, have had nothing to do with His relation to the heathen or with their relation to Him, and but very little to do with His own people in Babylon. As "the Jews" they had rebuilt the temple in Jerusalem, and by its significant services entered into covenant with their God. How He dealt with them and how they dealt with Him have been the great subjects brought before us. Spiritually they stand for the children of God in every age who profess to love and serve Him, who have at least in name been built up as "living temples," and in whom He is supposed to dwell. The historic character and conduct of such people have therefore a spiritual value for all time.

At the outset of our studies, in the one hundred and twenty-second Psalm, these people are presented to us as filled with joy and gladness at their restored relationship to God. They "go up unto the Testimony of Israel to give thanks unto the name of the Lord." Now "The Testimony" was "The Ark," which contained the law of God, and which was covered with "The Mercy Seat." It was the completed type of the atonement by Jesus Christ, whereby we are brought nigh to God and receive forgiveness of sins.

This is the one foundation of every believer's joy and hope. (Rom., v., 11.) When he first enters into this relationship by faith he "mounts up with wings as eagles." (Isa., xl., 31.) He has entered into a new life of fellowship with God, a life of joy and peace in believing. Then he sings from a full heart with the Psalmist, "Lord, Thou hast been favorable unto Thy land. Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of Thy people." For "mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other." (Psa. 85.) "When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream. Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongues with singing, for the Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." (Psa. 126.)

But blessed and joyful as this restored condition is, it is not one of unmixed joy and peace. It does in very truth fill the mind and heart with a "peace which passeth all understanding," but it is not the peace of the world, or with the world, or with one's self. It is, however, "the peace of God. (Philippians, iv., 7.) and with God. But it is peace in the midst of war. When the believer enters into this restored condition, then he realizes, as never before, the character and the power of sin, and a lifelong fight against it begins. (Romans, vii., 23.) "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh—and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would." (Galatians, v., 17.)

THE FIGHT AGAINST SIN.

This condition of conflict was very clearly brought before us in the story of Esther. Under the law of Haman, God's people suddenly awoke to find themselves condemned to death. But when the new law of Esther was made known, they were commanded to fight against every adversary, and all the resources of the King were pledged to give them the victory. So they were delivered. So the law of condemnation by sin must ever be met—even in the most penitent, sincere, and mature believer—by the law of conflict with sin, and the reward is given only to "him that overcometh."

For this warfare the Word of God is the guide. It points out the enemies and their modes of attack. It declares what weapons are to be used and how they are to be handled. It is itself "the sword of the Spirit." (Ephesians, vi., 17.) But it must be diligently studied and carefully obeyed, as set forth by the work of Ezra.

He was introduced to us at just this point in our studies as "the priest—the scribe—even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the Lord, and of His statutes," who "prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments." (Ezra, vii., 10.) 11.) The one great anxiety of Ezra for the people who had entered into this conflict was that they might be instructed in "The Law of God." It was for this purpose that he solicited and obtained permission to go up to Jerusalem. And the summing up of his commission was, "And thou, Ezra, after the wisdom of thy God that is in thine hand, set magistrates and judges, which may judge all the people that are beyond the river, all such as know the laws of thy God, and teach ye them that know them not. (Ezra, vii., 25.) Thus every struggling believer needs constantly to be instructed in the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make him wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. (Second Timothy, iii., 15.)

In very close connection with this work of Ezra, our lessons brought before us the work of Nehemiah. While the anxiety of Ezra was to instruct the people, that of Nehemiah was to build the walls around Jerusa'em and to set up the gates. As long as this was left undone, the great body of the people were exposed to assaults from without and were weak within. The Temple which they had built would not protect them, but, on the contrary, was itself in danger of pillage, if not of destruction.

This condition of things troubled Nehemiah. It was a reproach to the people of God. While others were ignorant or indifferent, he was filled with an earnest desire to remove the reproach and strengthen his brethren. So he made it the burden of his prayers that God would open to him the opportunity and give to him the means of accomplishing this great purpose. In due time his prayers were answered, and he went forth on his errand for the glory of God and for the good of man. With consummate ability, energy, patience, and skill the work was accomplished. In fifty-two days the walls were set up and the gates closed. Then all their enemies "were cast down in their own eyes, for they perceived that this work was wrought of God." (Neh., vi., 15, 16.)

BUILDING OF THE WALLS.

Now building the walls was very different work from either building the temple or conflict with sin. Each of these was a personal work. But building the walls was work for those who had first built the temple and who had entered into this conflict. So it is always spiritually, for the temple signifies—God dwelling in the struggling believer; the walls—God's grace toward all men. For we find that Isaiah, the prophet of God, had long before declared of Jerusalem: "I will make thy officers peace and thine exactors righteousness. Thou shalt call thy walls Salvation and thy gate Praise." (Isaiah lx., 17, 18.)

Building the walls and setting up the gates was therefore, spiritually, a significant fulfilling of our Lord's command: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." (Mark xvi., 15.) The material work of Nehemiah was the spiritual work of St. Paul as he earnestly and faithfully labored to put around men the walls of Salvation, and to open to them the walls of Praise. This is a very important consideration. For not only must the child of God fight against sin, but while he is fighting he must labor to spread abroad the knowledge of God and of His Gospel.

This he cannot truly do, however, unless he himself is thoroughly grounded in the great truths of God's salvation, and as anxious that others should know them as Nehemiah was that the walls should be built. In fact, his appreciation of God's grace toward himself will be indicated and measured by his efforts to extend a knowledge of that grace. And by these efforts he not only glorifies God, but he also attains to a fuller spiritual growth and the Kingdom of God upon earth is enlarged and strengthened. But to do this work the same difficulties and dangers that beset the personal work of building the Temple must be encountered and overcome. The same enemies will appear and the same discouragements will arise, but strong in faith and earnest in prayer as was Nehemiah, the servants of God will as surely see their work accomplished as was his. (Revelation, xxi., 15.) Then all the world shall perceive "that the work was wrought of God," (Nehemiah, vi., 16,) and shall give Him the glory.

A remarkable and significant feature of this building of the walls was, that when those engaged in the work came to dedicate it and themselves anew to God they called for a more careful and earnest reading of "The Law of God." Day after day they stood and listened while Ezra and others fitted for the service read and explained it. It was an occasion of the most earnest and intense interest. All ordinary business and all ordinary pleasures were alike laid aside. They were of no importance compared with ascertaining an accurate knowledge of God's will and an understanding of His dealings with them. This they recognized could be obtained only from the Word of God. So they searched it diligently until they clearly understood its meaning. There was no disputing of its statements, no criticising of its authority, no rebellion against its demands. It convicted them of sin. It led them to a humble repentance and confession before God, to an earnest supplication for forgiveness, and to an entire consecration to His service in a "sure covenant." (Nehemiah, ix.)

THE RICHES OF DIVINE GRACE.

So is it always with those who fully and truly enter into God's great plan of redemption and earnestly endeavor to make it known. They, above all others, search the Scriptures diligently that they may know more and more of the riches of divine grace, and the more fully they are instructed, the more and more do they understand the exceeding sinfulness of sin.

But the doing of the Lord's work for one's self or for others will not keep any one in fellowship with the Lord Himself. More than a hundred years before Nehemiah the prophet exclaimed, and exclaimed truly, "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." (Jer. 10:23.) Many hundred years later the apostle echoed back the thought, "I know that in me dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not." (Rom. 7:18.) The experience of every believer confirms both the prophet and the apostle.

So we find it also in the history we have been studying. In a very few years the very people who had the Temple in their midst, who had repaired the walls and set up the gates of Jerusalem, who had made "a sure covenant" with God, and had "sealed" it to make it sure, had become "allied" with the heathen about them, had polluted God's sanctuary and despised His Sabbaths. And yet they flattered themselves that they were accepted of Him! When He sent His prophet Malachi to rebuke them and to bring them back to Himself, they only answered him with surprise and indignation, "Wherein have we robbed Thee?" "What have we spoken so much against Thee?" (Malachi, iii., 8, 13.)

But "the mercy of the Lord endureth forever." Even to this "disobedient and gainsaying people," He stretched out His hands with the promise of salvation. So His prophet was directed to declare—"Unto you that fear My name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in His wings—and ye shall go forth and grow up as calves of the stall." (Malachi, iv., 2, 3.) It was salvation through the coming of another who had "healing" in Himself, and not by any work of their own.

Still more fully the prophet Isaiah then taught us concerning this "Sun of Righteousness." (9:1-7.) It would "arise" to them that walked in darkness and dwelt "in the land of the shadow of death," in the person of "a Child," to be born—"a Son," to be given. "The Son of God" was to become "the Son of Man." (Gal., 4: 4, 5.) He was to come "to seek and to save that which was lost." (Luke 19:10); "to give His life a ransom for many." (Matt. 20:28.) "The government shall be upon His shoulder; and His name shall be called Wonderful—Counselor—The Mighty God—The Everlasting Father—The Prince of Peace—Jesus Christ." "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4:12.) Evry man's salvation, therefore, depends upon his relation to Jesus Christ.

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON.

To what has our attention been directed during the last three months, and why are the historic conditions of spiritual value?

How were the people presented to us at the outset of these lessons, and on what was their joy based?

When the believer enters into this joy, what does he then realize, and how is it illustrated in the story of Esther?

What is the guide in this warfare, and what is said of Ezra and his work?

What is said of the work of Nehemiah, and what was its special feature?

What is the spiritual significance of building the walls, and what is said of it?

What marked the completion and dedication of the walls, and what was the effect?

Why will doing the Lord's work not keep men in fellowship with Him, and how is it seen in the history?

What promise did Malachi bring to the people?

What did Isaiah say concerning this promise, and on what does every man's salvation depend?

A Jesuit College for New Orleans.

The Jesuit community in New Orleans has begun the erection on Baronne Street of college buildings, which will cost over $1,000,000. The cornerstone of the first edifice will be laid within a fortnight. Cardinal Gibbons and leading ecclesiastics of the South and West will participate in the ceremonies. The old buildings on Common Street will be razed to the ground and handsome new four-storied buildings erected. When completed the property will cover a square block.

Congregation Vote on Organization.

The congregation which is worshipping in the chapel of the New York University, at University Heights, will vote to-morrow, after the morning service, to decide whether to organize as a Presbyterian church or continue as a Collegiate church. Chancellor MacCracken, dissatisfied at the treatment received from the Collegiate Consistory, has taken matters into his hands at the request of the congregation. He will continue to preach until a church is organized and a pastor is chosen.

THE PURCHASE OF BONDS.

The discussion of the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to come to the relief of the money market in certain contingencies and of the effective way to do so if the contingency should require is not at the present moment a discussion of what can be called a burning question. Happily the situation now does not demand any action further than has been taken by the Secretary and the Associated Banks. The discussion is, nevertheless, interesting and important because if the conditions should arise requiring action it would be desirable to understand in advance what can be done and how it can be best done.

In the Secretary's comment on the article in THE TIMES in which this matter was broached on Wednesday, he does not express any doubt that the measure suggested would be within the power of the Secretary. That measure was the offer by the Secretary to invite bids for the sale to him of United States bonds of designated issues with the understanding that he would buy a certain amount of them at the lowest price proposed and deemed by him satisfactory. Unquestionably this would be an extreme step, and should be taken only in case of extreme urgency. It would necessarily tend to send the price of bonds up by the sudden creation of a considerable new demand for them. But it would accomplish its purpose. If there were a condition of the public mind that could be regarded as panic or the sure precursor of panic because of distressing rates for money for the ordinary and necessary uses of business the immediate offer of a supply of money by the Treasury would dispel that condition, and that would be the sole justification for the policy. We cannot see why it would not be a complete justification.

It is not denied that what the Secretary has now done, and done wisely, might prove inadequate in the case of very serious disturbance of confidence. The amount of money that he can deposit in the banks of the whole country is necessarily limited in two ways—first by the amount of his current receipts apart from customs, and second by the amount of bonds that the banks could command for deposit as security for the public funds. Once the revenues have been turned into the Treasury by the collecting officers they cannot be taken out except on the warrant of the Treasurer in accordance with an appropriation by Congress. Before they have been so turned in they are subject to deposit in any depository bank under proper conditions. At present the revenues are large, and are doubtless large enough to accomplish the purpose the Secretary had in mind. But we repeat that we are not now discussing the immediate situation, which fortunately is sufficiently provided for. We are simply pointing out that if the emergency should arise in which something more and more effective should be needed it would be within the power of the Secretary to supply it.

In the meanwhile we should like to appeal to some of our contemporaries to be a little more sparing in the publication of the exciting rumors circulated in the Street, and for the most part invented there for the express purpose of creating alarm in such times as we have been passing through. So long as these rumors are confined to the Street they do but a limited amount of harm. They are largely discounted there, and at the worst only scare those who are in the game. But when they are spread abroad they tend to create apprehension in the public mind which, when it passes a certain limit, cannot be controlled, and leads to an infinite lot of mischief to entirely innocent persons. To this unfortunate result certainly no sober-minded journalist can desire to contribute.

GETTING AWAY FROM BRYAN.

W. J. BRYAN does not perceive the remarkable change that has come over the South. The men of the Southern States used to be absorbed in politics. They are now occupied with business. The real leaders there are not the politicians, but the creative men of the new industrial era. Live newspapers and live men at the South are discussing new cotton mills, new coal and iron mines, new steel plants, and new business undertakings of all kinds a good deal more than they are discussing politics.

These new leaders have the industrial future of the South in their hands. That gives them a great influence in the politics of the present. They have the interests, and they see that the South has the do not want to stand still. They must move ahead with the rest of the world.

They are moving ahead and they are moving away from BRYAN as fast as their enlightened minds can carry them. To a score or more of the most active and influential business men of the South The Manufacturers' Record offered an opportunity to express their views on expansion. Almost without exception they declared that we should hold the new territory we have acquired, that our island possessions would give a great impulse to our commerce and that the position which the ownership of the Philippines gives us in the Pacific must be maintained for the important aid it will afford in extending our trade with China.

These leaders of the industries and the thought of the South cannot stand on the same platform with W. J. BRYAN. He declares for "anti-imperialism." He believes, or insists, that we must scuttle out of the Philippines. He would give up everything we have taken. The leading men of affairs in the South are dead against him on that question. They have little or nothing to say about him or his "issues." Possibly some of them are not yet ready to part company with him on silver. But it is perfectly plain that the dead issue of free silver will not long command for him the support of men who differ with him altogether on the live issue of expansion.

A direct challenge of public sentiment has just been issued by Chief Justice DAVID L. SNODGRASS of the Supreme Court of Tennessee. He announces his candidacy for the Senate of the United States. He shares BRYAN'S hostile feeling toward trusts, but he is an expansionist and favors the policy of holding the islands we took from Spain. If Judge SNODGRASS'S principles commend themselves to the people of Tennessee, how can BRYAN hope to gain their confidence and support with principles antagonistic to those of the Judge? It is to be presumed that Judge SNODGRASS knows the sentiment of the people of his own State. The Senatorship is a great prize. He would not be so foolish as to make a contest for the place upon a platform of expansion if he did not believe that it was acceptable to the voters and their representatives in the Legislature.

A Southern man who is in favor of giving up our new territory ought to have his bumps examined. The normal mind should be able to perceive at once that the interests of the South, its progress, and its prosperity will be powerfully promoted by the new commercial currents set in motion by the establishment of these outposts. The great issues in the South to-day are an isthmian canal and the development of the cotton trade with the Far East.

BRITISH VOLUNTEERING.

We believe it was Sir CHARLES BERESFORD who, since the present war began, found and proclaimed a similarity between Great Britain and the United States in that they were the only two great nations which did not resort to conscription, but relied upon volunteers for their defense.

There is something in that, though perhaps not so much as the speaker supposed. It would be highly absurd if seventy millions of people could not provide a regular army of twenty-five thousand men, which is all that a prejudiced Congress would allow us to maintain before the Spanish war, or even the hundred thousand which we now have under arms, without resorting to conscription. When we have been hard pressed, as we were in 1863, we have not scrupled to resort to conscription, and to incur "draft riots" in consequence. In each case the truth probably is that we are able to maintain our armies, such as they are, by volunteering, simply because they are not so numerous in relation to population as those that have to be maintained by the nations of Continental Europe.

It seems that what the English expected to be a little war and what has turned out to be a great war may be fought through with volunteers, such as every soldier now serving under the British or the American colors is, whether he is called a volunteer or a regular. The response of the English people to the call for volunteers has been so general and so prompt as greatly and justly to encourage the English organs of opinion. The response seems to denote something like the same conception of patriotism in the United Kingdom as prevails in the United States.

But still there are differences, and vital differences. Nobody can have helped noticing that it is the "upper classes" in England which have responded most readily to the call of their country. The prosperous and satisfied classes, men "with handles to their names," beginning with the Duke of MARLBOROUGH, the Lord Mayor of London, prosperous shipowners, and merchants, are offering to raise, equip, and forward bodies of troops at their own expense. These men know very well what the prosperity and power of the British Empire mean to them. It is true that the rank and file of the British public, who have nothing but their own lives to offer, are showing an unexpected and gratifying alacrity in offering those. But it is not yet true that every native Briton feels his own welfare to be bound up with that of his country, as every native American would in a like case feel about himself.

Mr. RUDYARD KIPLING has noted the national difference in those youthful letters from this country which were so wonderfully misinterpreted, when they were first reprinted, as "anti-American." In fact, and taken altogether, they form a remarkable tribute to the candor of the writer, as well as to the national character of the people he is writing patriotism. They believe in their land and its future and its honor and its glory, and they are not ashamed to say so. From the largest to the least runs this same proud, passionate conviction, to which I take my hat off and for which I love them." It is quite true. Mr. W. W. ASTOR, some time of New York, now of London, is the unique exception. The observer continues: "An average English householder seems to regard his country as an abstraction to supply him with policemen and fire brigades. The cockney cad cannot understand what the word means. He would laugh in your face at the notion of any duty being owed by him to his land." If the war with the Transvaal brings the general and promiscuous British subject up to the level of the general and promiscuous American citizen in this matter, it will be worth all it may cost, whatever the cost may be.

MR. GRUBER'S "FLUSH OF SHAME."

We are losing enough Assembly districts now to make dishonest performances like this bring the flush of shame to the face of every Republican.

These were the words of the ex-Hon. ABRAHAM GRUBER at the meeting of the County Committee of the Republicans of New York on Thursday evening. The proceedings referred to were certainly unfair and indecent. Mr. GRUBER wished to present to the committee a resolution providing that the inspectors and election officers in each election district should be named by the Assembly District Association and not as now by the President of the County Committee. He was prevented from offering his resolution by the action of Mr. GIBBS of the National Committee, who moved an adjournment on the ground that there was no quorum present and whose motion was declared carried by the presiding officer despite Mr. GRUBER'S demand for a roll call. So the committee adjourned actually before the regular time for meeting had arrived, greatly to the astonishment of the body of the members as they came in.

This is the very essence of boss management. All the patronage and all the power connected with the election officers are kept in the hands of Mr. QUIGG, who is himself under the thumb of Mr. PLATT. When a proposition is made to give the associations in the Assembly districts the control of their own affairs in this matter the agents of the boss will not even let it come to a vote. They boast of a majority, but they do not dare to trust it. Anything at once more cowardly and arbitrary in the field of small politics cannot be imagined.

But it is noticeable that the indignation expressed by Mr. GRUBER is not aroused by these disgraceful tactics, but by their consequences. It is not the "dishonest performances," but the loss of Assembly districts, that he thinks should bring the "flush of shame to the cheek of every Republican." That is the spirit on which the boss grows fat. Until the opposition to him is based on some higher motive than this he can laugh at it, and he will. It is only too evident that the idea of "reform within the party," stale, flat, and unprofitable as it is, is as far as the Grubers of the Republican camp have yet got. Until they pass that limit they will effect nothing. "Within the party" the boss can take care of them easily.

HELPING A GOOD WORK.

A study of the annual report of the Children's Aid Society brings to light a condition of things among the poorest and most destitute of the recent immigrants from Italy, Austria, and Russia which is worse than anything described in the stories of the London slums. The sweating system, irregular and low wages, physical weakness, race degeneracy, and the dreadful crowding together of people of both sexes and all ages among the most submerged of these people act and re-act upon each other to bring about from year to year a condition which, were it not for agencies such as the Children's Aid Society, would result in shocking degeneracy.

Among these people there have for years been established by the society schools known as "industrial schools," one of them especially for crippled children, to which were attracted during the past year as many as 14,000 children. These schools are in charge of devoted women who are giving their lives to this missionary labor—a labor of love. Here the children are cleaned, freed from vermin, partly reclothed when necessary, and to the half-starved are given noon luncheons, for the needs of the body must first be looked to if the mind is to be reached. Morality, honesty, purity, and good manners are inculcated, the only knowledge that is given these children that there are such things as GOD and conscience and right and wrong. These schools are but in part supported from public appropriations, and we urge upon the benevolent in these Christmas times to remember the needs of this effort—the expenses for clothing and shoes and meals, and the maintenance of such a work. Most important also are the needs of the children after leaving these schools and when they are at work. The years between the ages of twelve and sixteen are most impressionable, and the Children's Aid Society urges upon the benevolent the importance of evening schools, recreation classes, and boys and girls' clubs for these young people. The society has the buildings, but has not the means to meet the expenses; $500 would pay the cost of an evening school for a whole Winter's season, and the Trustees of the society appeal urgently for several funds of this description.

Turning from these schools to the boys and girls' lodging houses carried on by the Children's Aid Society, the farm school at Kensico, where homeless boys from the city streets are trained for emsociology to note how certainly the change of environment seems to act on the character of the child. The lodging houses gather in the homeless children, and after being trained at the farm, they are in large numbers sent to family homes in the State of New York, in adjoining States and to the West. One hundred dollars will place five homeless children in country homes. No work of benevolence is so satisfactory as this. These children, fated to grow into vagrancy if allowed to remain in the city, transplanted to the country become as good citizens as the average of the people born in the communities in which they are placed. The Children's Aid Society has been doing this work of transplanting for forty-six years, during which time many thousands have been removed from the city to the country, and under the supervision of the agents of the society have grown to manhood and womanhood. The report of the society speaks with pride of the fact that two of their boys have become Governors of States, several have become District Attorneys, Sheriffs, and members of Legislatures in the West; one a member of Congress; two are professors in colleges, a dozen or more are clergymen; two are railroad managers, and most of them, even if they have not achieved eminence, are respectable and useful citizens in our Western States.

Of all our benevolent organizations, none is doing more for manhood and citizenship. Mr. A. B. HEPBURN of the Chase National Bank is the Treasurer of the society, and donations may be sent to him or to Mr. C. LORING BRACE, Secretary, 105 East Twenty-second Street.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—People who make, or try to make, a living by pleasing other people vastly increase the difficulty of their task if they present their claim for approbation while the objects of their efforts are in a state of justifiable irritation against them. This is a truth which the managers of theatres have especial reason to ponder, and doubtless they do give it a good deal of attention. They should give it a little more, however, for the almost inevitable result will be a realizing sense of the unwisdom, from several points of view, of advertising that their performances will begin at a certain hour and then breaking faith with the public by a delay of from fifteen minutes to half an hour. Several New York managers are habitual offenders in this way, and the result is a lot of bad temper and a consequent diminution of the applause to obtain which so much trouble is taken and so much money spent. The practice originated, presumably, in a commendable desire to get everybody into the theatre before the curtain rises, and the idea was that even those whose joy it is to annoy their fellows by a late arrival would thus be lured to their places before their entrance could be a nuisance. Something may have been accomplished in this direction at first, but the folks who prompted the adoption of the ruse are not of a sort to be long deceived, and now it serves only to try the patience of people simple enough to trust the printed announcements and courteous enough to try to be on time. First scenes are as frequently disturbed as ever, and in addition the better-mannered class of patrons find their ills increased in divers ways. Not only do they dine with needless rapidity, but they endure a tiresome period of waiting and are obliged to stand up and make room for the passage of everybody with seats in the same row. The real and advertised times for beginning plays should be the same.

—Unscientific persons, when they look through the pages of a technical journal, are not at all surprised or humiliated if they come across passages which they find it difficult or impossible to understand. That is to be expected, and the layman doesn't worry about his more or less excusable ignorance of matters and words that do not directly concern him. Perhaps he should be equally calm when he discovers that the religious press sometimes uses language as mystifying as that of the scientific professions. Sometimes, however, the abstruseness of these papers takes a form that renders equanimity out of the question, and that is when the words are all perfectly comprehensible, and yet are so combined as to reveal nothing except the existence of an alluring secret. Out in Chicago, for instance, there is published a Presbyterian organ, The Interior, and most of it is easy as well as interesting reading, but every once in a while it contains something like the following, taken from the last number: "After canvassing the earth, the Fifth Avenue, the late Dr. HALL'S church, has called Dr. PURVES of Princeton, and he has accepted. The first thing New York does after becoming interested in religion is to send for a theological professor and go into the study of theology—right out of the Sunday school into the seminary! Dr. PURVES is the broadest man in Princeton. There goes that average again!" Now, what in the world does that mean? Not a word in it would send anybody, however little his theological knowledge, to the dictionary, and every one of the sentences runs along smoothly enough, yet it leaves one in resentful doubt as to whether the writer is humorous, malicious, or merely didactic. Really, The Interior should confine its circulation to the elect, or else supply a key to its paragraphs.

—No fault can be found with the action of the Government board which looks after the spelling of geographical names for its decision that the proper way to write the designation of the most easily acquired of our new possessions is "Puerto Rico." There never was any real doubt on that point, and only the willfully inaccurate continue to write and say "Porto Rico." But it is one thing to decide what a name is, and quite another to decide what it ought to be. An island as big and beautiful as that which ranks third in the Caribbean galaxy deserves a title more significant than the one applied to it by ancient sailormen who were so glad to get into a safe harbor where the trade prospects seemed good that they could not cast a comprehensive eye over the vast expanse of wooded mountains and fertile valleys and plains. We have more leisure and ought to have more imagination. The inhabitants of Puerto Rico have a hankering after the aboriginal name, which was something like Borinquem, and certainly that is better than the one now in use. It isn't especially pretty, however, and is rather hard to speak. The problem may well tempt American ingenuity—of course, "American" includes the islanders—and the Governmental arbiters should be prepared to receive suggestions. But, alas! what is to be expected of a people so lost to the etymological proprieties as to accept "automobile" without a protest?

—An illustration of the gentle wit which has made Mr. HENRY LABOUCHERE so popular among his political opponents in particular and the British people in general is provided by some remarks of his on the subject of official remuneration. "On the breaking out of the war," he writes in the Fortnightly, being covered both of £1,000 a £1,000. Were this system adopted here on the same scale, and applied alone to persons receiving above £1,000 per annum, either by grant or by salary, not only would the taxpayer be largely relieved, but in a land where Mammon reigns supreme the recipients of these reduced emoluments from the State would become the most ardent votaries of peace." The dig is so neat in its malevolent humor that it is hardly worth while to ask whether the dear Boers have been thus self-sacrificing or not, but there can be no harm in suggesting that the officials whom Mr. LABOUCHERE, being at a great distance from them, admires so much have earned a brilliant reputation as tax grabbers and wholesale exploiters of their country.

WASHINGTON'S ADVICE TO-DAY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The hundredth anniversary of the death of George Washington has just been observed, and the recurrence of the anniversary of his birth is but a few weeks ahead of us. At this time, when lack of sanity is the prevailing habit of mind and Reverend Savages are calling on Americans to unite with Englishmen in a war against the world, there is no better political reading and no higher political wisdom than are to be found in Washington's immortal "Farewell Address." He intended it as a political heritage to his countrymen, and so it is, and so it will remain when the madness of this hour of imperialism is forgotten. The man who put away a crown had the right to advise his countrymen on the subject of foreign aggression, and there is no saner advice to be found anywhere on the subject of foreign alliances and foreign extension of our power than are to be found in the "Farewell Address," written with calm deliberation when the author was at the height of his fame and serene wisdom, and was glancing down the "corridors of Time" in anxious desire to warn future pilots of our ship of state of the dangers that would beset the Republic.

Let those pilots consult the chart that was made for their guidance. The American people are not mad, and the mad rulers of the hour will do well to remember that there is a future to be answered.

SIXTH AVENUE TRAIN SERVICE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to voice some of the many complaints made every day about the wretched train service on the Sixth Avenue elevated during rush hours. This morning I reached the station at Sixth Avenue and Thirty-third Street just as a train was pulling out. The same train was just stopping at Twenty-eighth Street only five blocks away when a South Ferry train passed Thirty-third Street without stopping. The next was a Fifty-eighth to Rector Street, which stopped at Thirty-third Street.

The following was a Harlem train to Rector Street, which did not stop.

Ten minutes after I reached the platform I boarded a train for South Ferry.

Thirty-third Street is probably the busiest station on the Sixth Avenue, while Twenty-eighth Street might be termed a "way station," yet more trains stop there than at Thirty-third Street.

As a rule, one train in three is a South Ferry, but when they pass your station it becomes one in four, and sometimes one in five. Clearly that is wrong. Yet it happens to me about three times a week.

I also noticed to-day that the company is violating the Sanitary Code by burning soft coal in some of its locomotives. F. W. H.

Not as Our Ancestors Fought.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why is it asserted so constantly that the Boers are fighting for the same principles as the soldiers of the American Revolution? The Boers are fighting for taxation without representation, for the arbitrary rule of an oligarchy, and for the extension of that rule over the territory of others.

I have always understood that the Englishmen resident in America in 1776 fought against these things, as did their ancestors in 1215, 1642, and many other seasons.

SECRETS.

Beatrice Clayton in Philadelphia Ledger.

There's a pinch in the air, and a trace of frost
On the window pane,
And the leafless boughs and the weathervane
Are swirled and tossed
By the wind that sweeps from the ice-bound Pole.
But where the woodbine clings, thus late,
To the trellised arbor, near the gate,
The wind sighs low, breathes soft and slow,
Now murmuring "Sh-h!" now long-drawn "Oh-h!"
And the woodbine tosses its tendrils out,
And nods surprise as it sways about,
Just as if they were whispering secrets!

There's a rich, warm light where the lamp soft glows
On the group indoors,
Where mother over her reading pores,
Or busily sews,
While father nods in his big armchair.
But the children steal into corners dark,
Heads together, and then a spark
Of quick intelligence father flings
To mother, whose glance speaks mysterious things.
Tiptoe footfalls upon the stair,
Doors made fast with jealous care,
All seem to be whispering secrets!

Oh, what a scurry and bustle and noise,
And turmoil of joy!
Shrieks from the girls o'er each longed-for toy,
Shouts from the boys!
For the secrets, long whispered, have all been told;
And father's fine slippers—such a surprise!
He can't quite see for the mist in his eyes;
And her splendid workbox and grand new shawl
Mother praises and laughs, but the tears will fall!
And there's something half tremulous all the while

NEW SITE FOR ACADEMY

Mayor Intimates the City Might Grant a Park Plot.

OBJECTION OF SOME ARTISTS

Amsterdam Avenue Preferred to Far Up-Town Point—Building Fund Appeal Unsuccessful.

The question of a home for the National Academy of Design is as undecided as ever. Indeed, the Academy at present is somewhat in the position of the man who has sold his house in order to build a better one and ends up by going to live in a hotel. The next exhibition of the Academy is to be held in the building of its rival, the Society of American Artists, in West Fifty-seventh Street. "This will be," said a member of the older association last evening, "like the lion lying down with the lamb."

The reason that no plans have yet been made for a building on the site at Amsterdam Avenue and One Hundred and Tenth Street, which was bought by the academy at a cost of about $250,000, is that a majority of the members are highly ambitious in regard to the class of building which they wish to see erected. At first it was regarded as possible that a suitable structure might be provided with the $200,000 which remained in the coffers of the academy after the new site was purchased, the sum which was paid by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company for the old site, at Fourth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, being about $450,000. But, as general plans for the new building began to be talked about, the counsels of those who wished to see a monumental structure erected prevailed, and it was decided to make an appeal to the wealthy citizens of New York for aid in paying for such a building.

These efforts have not up to now been particularly successful. Collis P. Huntington gave $25,000, the late Cornelius Vanderbilt $10,000, and ex-Gov. Morton, Jacob H. Schiff, William E. Dodge, and William V. Lawrence $5,000 each. Some other smaller amounts were also received, but the total amount realized by the appeal fell very far short of the $600,000 which was considered necessary in addition to the $200,000 already in the possession of the Academy.

The fact has now been admitted by the members of the Academy that some time ago a number of them visited Mayor Van Wyck in order to see if help could not be obtained from the city to build the proposed structure. The call was only an informal one, but the Mayor threw out a hint which has had the result of still further complicating matters. He said that by the provisions of the charter it was impossible for the city to make a grant of money to the Academy, but that it would be legal and possible to give the institution a site in one of the new parks for its building.

No further action has been taken since the call on the Mayor was made, but it is understood that a considerable difference of opinion exists as to the desirability of accepting such an offer. Some of the academicians think that, if the Mayor is inclined to make a definite offer of a site, it should be accepted with gratitude, the land at One Hundred and Tenth Street and Amsterdam Avenue sold, and work begun at once on a building. Other members, on the other hand, say that a site given by the city would necessarily be far up town, that the position on Morningside Heights is an ideal one, and that the academy can afford to wait.

A two-story temporary structure has been erected on part of the land belonging to the Academy, for the purposes of the Art School. The school was opened a few weeks ago, and so far has proved highly successful. This method of instruction has been somewhat altered, and a prospective student is now obliged to execute a drawing in the presence of the examiners before being accepted. In other ways, the model of the Beaux Arts School in Paris has been followed, and advanced instruction in some new subjects—such as etching—is now given.

FRANCE'S POLICY SUSTAINED.

Deputies Vote an Appropriation Despite Combined Opposition.

PARIS, Dec. 22.—The discussion of the Government's request for a two months' provisional appropriation in the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon gave its opponents the opportunity for an attack, which they did not neglect. M. Millevoye, ex-Boulangist; M. Mery, and other complained of the Government's policy in the conspiracy trial, declaring that the delay in voting the budget was due to the Senate's time being occupied by the High Court sessions.

The Premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, retorted that the Government had convoked the High Court because it thought the time had come to put an end to the insolent challenges of the Nationalists. M. Lasies, Anti-Semite, who frequently interrupted the speaker, here cried:

"No, it was not on account of Nationalist insolence that you convoked the High Court, but in order to avenge Dreyfus, whose acquittal you were unable to secure."

M. Lasies was called to order and the Chamber approved the Government's attitude by voting the appropriation, 468 to 61.

PRESS DENOUNCES HIGH COURT.

Nationalist Organs Condemn the Senate for Punishing Deroulede.

PARIS, Dec. 22.—The Nationalist organs continue to denounce the action of the Senate, sitting as the High Court in the conspiracy trials, in sentencing M. Paul Déroulède to two years' imprisonment. They head their articles "Vive Déroulède" and loudly praise his gallant conduct.

As a matter of fact, in his final appearance before the tribunal he eclipsed all previous displays of violence and vituperation. He had never been decorous from the outset of the trial; but his closing exhibition was unprecedented. He broke loose in an abominable tirade, heaping abuse upon the Court, the Government, and the President of the Republic, and only ceased a stream of insult when he sank exhausted into his seat, amid an indescribable pandemonium; ended by his forcible removal. It is this sort of thing that the Nationalists call "gallant."

A GERMAN NOBLE'S OFFENSE.

It Is Said Prince Arenberg Added Torture to Murder.

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—Official reports received by the Government regarding the crime of Prince Arenberg, who was recently court-martialed in German Southwest Africa for killing a subordinate without provocation, and who is being brought here for sentence, show that the offense was much worse than the first reports indicated.

It is said Prince Arenberg, who is a nephew of the Reichstag Centrist leader of the same name, not only murdered, but fiendishly tortured his victim while dying. There were thirty-three eyewitnesses of the atrocity. The murdered man was a half-breed, named Willie Neen, the son of an Englishman and a freed woman.

The Berlin press expresses considerable curiosity as to what punishment will be meted out to the offender.

A LONDON REFORMER DEAD.

Benjamin Francis Conn Costelloe Strove for Good Government—He Married Miss Smith of Philadelphia.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—Benjamin Francis Conn Costelloe, M. A., the Chairman of the Local Government Committee of the London County Council, is dead.

Benjamin Francis Conn Costelloe was virtually the pioneer of improved government for London. He devoted his life to this purpose, and lived to see many of the measures that, in the face of almost universal opposition, he had pleaded for adopted. His record at Balliol College, Oxford, was an extraordinary one. He was first in Moderates and Greats, and the Jenkyn's Exhibitioner, and ended by taking double honors both in philosophy and classics.

Mr. Costelloe was a comparatively young man. He was born in Ireland in April, 1855, being a son of the Board of Trade Surveyor at Glasgow. His mother was the daughter of a Kilkenny land owner. He began his education at the Glasgow Academy, and later became a student at Glasgow University. After winning the Edington Fellowship at Glasgow he went to Oxford.

The life work of Mr. Costelloe was begun when he became one of the University settlers in the East End, taking a leading part in the work of Toynbee Hall, and devoting unremitting labor to the task of providing the dwellers in the squalid tenements with some knowledge of better things. A few years later he helped to found the National Vigilance Association. This organization has probably been subjected to more bitter criticism than any other similar body in the world. Its efforts to secure the closing of the Empire Music Hall and other resorts in London were opposed in every direction, but it went on with its work, and has succeeded in effecting many important reforms.

In 1885 Mr. Costelloe married Miss Mary Whitall Smith, daughter of Robert Pearsall Smith of Philadelphia. He is survived by her. He was elected a member of the first London County Council, and had been a member of that body until his death. During the last few months he had been Chairman of the most important committee of the Council, that of Local Government. The year of his marriage he was selected to contest East Edinburgh as the Liberal candidate, against the Right Hon. George J. Goschen. There was no chance for Mr. Costelloe to win, but he made a plucky fight, and succeeded in decreasing the Conservative majority. Later on he was the Liberal candidate for East St. Pancras, being again unsuccessful. He was for several years a member of the Executive Committee of the London Liberal and Radical Union.

Until a short time ago Mr. Costelloe had been one of the principal editorial writers of The Daily Chronicle. He wrote a number of books, the best known of them being "Catholica," a collection of essays on Catholic subjects.

FRANCO-AMERICAN RECIPROCITY.

Opposition to the Treaty May Come from French Farmers.

PARIS, Dec. 22.—The publication of the Franco-American reciprocity treaty has caused but little press comment. The Government, however, is deeply interested in its ratification, which explains the fact of the very vigorous preamble that accompanied the bill. Opposition will come from the agricultural section, unless convinced that the interests of the farmers are securely protected against the encroachments of the Americans. M. Cambon is here to assist the Government with his special knowledge of the case and of American feeling.

While it is expected that the Opposition will take advantage of certain omissions in order to make political capital, the ultimate adoption of the treaty is believed to be assured. It is regarded here as a distinct diplomatic achievement, and France may compel Germany and other countries to accept terms not so favorable.

CHRISTMAS IN PARIS.

PARIS, Dec. 22.—Paris is dressed for the holidays, and an air of merriment and good will pervades all. Numbers of wooden booths have sprung up along the boulevards and are filled with the bright colors of Christmas toys and gifts, which have brought many workingmen with their families from the outlying quarters into the centre of Paris.

The streets everywhere look festive. Strikingly conceived posters on the walls announce fêtes at various places of amusement for Christmas Eve and New Year's Eve. Most of the leading restaurants will be open all night long on Christmas and New Year's, and everything points to a joyous Yuletide.

In the evenings crowds of the poorer classes gather around itinerant musicians in the streets off the Boulevards and join in singing new popular songs. These airs are mostly catchy, but very few are intended for drawing room presentation.

The weather, however, which, at the beginning of the week, promised to be seasonable, has since changed from frost to damp and mist; and skating on the lakes in the Bois de Boulogne, much enjoyed as fashionable sport, is now a thing of the past. Even the Seine was last Sunday incased in ice, which Parisians regretfully watch floating away.

AUSTRIA'S NEW MINISTRY.

Dr. von Wittek Is Appointed President of the Council.

VIENNA, Dec. 22.—Following the resignation of the Austrian Cabinet headed by Count Manfred Clary, in consequence of the blockade of Parliamentary business resulting from persistent Czech obstruction, Emperor Francis Joseph has appointed Dr. H. von Wittek, who was Minister of Railways under Count Clary, to be President of the Council. The portfolio of National Defense is intrusted to Count Welsersheimb, who was charged with the same duties in the Clary Cabinet, and that of Commerce to Dr. F. Stibral, who thus continues at his former post.

Dr. von Chlendowski is designated as Minister without a portfolio. The other departments are left in the hands of the various department chiefs.

The Reichsrath adjourned to-day.

CARNEGIE MILLS RAISE WAGES.

Notices Posted at Various Works of an Advance of Over 7 Per Cent.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Dec. 22.—The Carnegie Steel Company, Limited, posted to-day, at its various works in this vicinity—the Duquesne Steel Works and blast furnaces, the Edgar Thomson Steel Works, furnaces, and foundries; the Carrie furnaces, the Homestead Steel Works, the Lucy furnaces, the Keystone Bridge Works, the Upper Union Mills, and the Lower Union Mills—notices reading substantially as follows:

"Taking effect on Jan. 1, 1900, common labor at these works will be increased to $1.50 per day, and all other day, turn, and tonnage labor (with certain exceptions) will be increased in proportion."

The exceptions are the tonnage men working under sliding scales, where the rates of wages increase and decrease in proportion to the price of the products.

This adjustment is 7.14 per cent. advance on the wages now being paid; making a total of 25 per cent. of increase made by the company, voluntarily, since the last general scale.

PNEUMONIA KILLS A PEER

Duke of Westminster Dies of the Disease in London.

WAS ENGLAND'S RICHEST MAN

His Rent Roll Amounted to $2,000,000 Per Year—Sold Cliveden, His Finest Estate, to W. W. Astor.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—The Duke of Westminster died to-day of pneumonia, from which he had been suffering for some days past. This morning the disease took a serious turn and his family was summoned to his residence.

The Duke of Westminster was in some respects the most important territorial magnate in Great Britain. It has been frequently confidently asserted that he was the richest man in the world. There have been no means of ascertaining the truth or falsity of such statements. The Duke and his agents maintained the strictest reserve as to the financial value of his real property in London. But it can be stated without hesitation that, should the estate be undivided and conserved, his heir will in a few years be one of the two or three richest men in existence. For this he will have to thank the policy of the immediate ancestors of the late Duke, who never sold land outright, but let it on long leases, usually of ninety-nine years. These leases are now beginning to expire, and the consequence is that property which was worth comparatively little a century ago is now in the heart of London, and is the most valuable real estate in the world.

Although accurate figures have not been obtainable, it has been estimated that the Duke received as rental from his property in London, nearly all of which is in the West End, about $2,000,000 a year. It is also said that if the new Duke lives to the same age as his predecessor all the leases in Mayfair and Belgravia will have fallen in, and that he will draw an income on property worth $500,000,000.

In spite of his enormous wealth, the Duke of Westminster astonished everybody by selling Cliveden, one of the finest estates in England, to William Waldorf Astor a few years ago. Cliveden, about twenty miles up the Thames from London, where the river is most picturesque, was regarded as one of the chief glories of the house of Grosvenor. Why the Duke chose to sell it, when he was careful, not to say penurious, of his money, and when by no possible combination of circumstances could he have been in want of cash, is one of those mysteries of which the history of the British aristocracy furnishes many examples.

This, according to Burke, was the full style and title of the late Duke: The Most Noble the Right Hon. Sir Hugh Lupus Grosvenor, Knight of the Garter, Privy Councilor, Duke and Marquess of Westminster, Earl Grosvenor, Viscount Belgrave, Baron Grosvenor of Eaton, in the County Palatine of Chester, and a Baronet; Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the County of Chester; Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of London.

The late Duke was born at Eaton, Oct. 13, 1825. He was the second son of the second Marquis of Westminster, his mother being a daughter of the First Duke of Sutherland. His elder brother, Gilbert, died at the age of one year, and the late Duke was the heir to the marquisate from his birth. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford. In 1847 the then Viscount Belgrave was elected as a Whig for the Borough of Chester, being one of the youngest members ever elected to the House of Commons. He retained his seat until 1868, remaining a consistent supporter of the policies of the Whigs and their successors, the Liberals. On Oct. 31, 1869, the Marquis of Westminster died, and Viscount Belgrave succeeded to the title and to the immense estates.

Mr. Gladstone rewarded the services of the new Marquis to the Liberal Party by raising his title to a Dukedom in 1874, and the Duke was one of the leaders of the Liberals in the House of Lords until the first introduction of Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule bill. He was one of those who found themselves unable to support this measure, and this decision drove him into the Liberal-Unionist camp. His allegiance to his leader was now, however, shaken in other directions, and in Mr. Gladstone's closing years of power the Duke was his chief supporter in the ex-Premier's crusade against the Turkish atrocities in Armenia. He was active as Chairman of the Armenian Committee, a post which he retained until his death, and at Chester, in August, 1895, he supported Mr. Gladstone on the platform when the latter delivered his last great speech in the cause of the oppressed Christians in the East.

The Duke of Westminster filled the office of Master of the Horse from 1880 to 1886. He was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Cheshire in 1883, and of the County of London in 1888. He was also High Steward of Westminster, and aide de camp to the Queen, and honorary Colonel of the Thirteenth Middlesex Rifle Volunteers.

In 1852 the Duke married Lady Constance Gertrude Leveson-Gower, youngest daughter of the second Duke of Sutherland. Eleven children were born of the marriage. The eldest, Victor Alexander, Earl Grosvenor, for whom Queen Victoria stood sponsor, died in 1884. He left three children, of whom the eldest, Viscount Belgrave, becomes the second Duke of Westminster. The Duchess died in 1880, and two years later the Duke married the Hon. Katherine Caroline Cavendish, daughter of the second Lord Chesham, who survives him, and by whom he had three children.

The youngest daughter of the Duke by his first wife, the Lady Margaret Evelyn Grosvenor, was married in December, 1894, to Prince Adolphus Charles Alexander of Teck, grandson of Queen Victoria. He is a Captain in the First Life Guards, and is on his way to take part in the campaign in South Africa. Some time ago a rupture occurred between Prince Adolphus and his wife, owing, so it was said at the time, to the Prince's dissipated habits. The Duchess of York patched up the quarrel, but the young couple are said to live on anything but amicable terms. The Duke gave $5,000,000 to his daughter as dowry.

Perhaps the money that he spent in order that he might be allied by his daughter's marriage to the royal family was the only extravagance of which he was ever guilty, except in the racing stable which he kept up for many years. The most famous horse he ever owned was Ormonde, but he was even tempted to sell that famous racer when a good price was offered.

RELATIONS OF THE CALHOUNS.

One Brother Denies a Report of a Suit and Promises a Statement.

The Baltimore Sun, in its issue of yesterday, published a dispatch from Washington stating that a suit, involving a large sum of money, was filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, Thursday, by Patrick Calhoun of Cleveland, Ohio, against his brother, John C. Calhoun of this city. The papers, it said, were filed with the Clerk of the court by Gen. M. C. Butler, formerly United States Senator from South Carolina, who has acted as referee between the two litigants, the grandsons of John C. Calhoun of South Carolina.

"From a copy of an agreement entered into between Patrick and John C. Calhoun in 1897, which is part of the papers placed on file," the dispatch stated, "it seems that the two men had been engaged in a large number of financial operations together, and they were unable to agree as to just how their accounts stood, one with the other. So they decided to have Gen. Butler, their mutual friend, act as referee between them.

"And it was further agreed that the referee's decision was to have the full effect of a finding of a court as between them and that the judgment of the Supreme Court of the District in accordance with this finding should be final."

The dispatch further stated that the suit "sets forth the referee's judgment, which is that John C. Calhoun is indebted to Patrick Calhoun in the sum of $197,035.83, with interest on part of this sum."

John C. Calhoun, when shown a copy of this dispatch last night, declared that there was no truth in it. "I do not wish to make any statement at all to-night," he said. "Patrick Calhoun owes me some money, which must be paid in a few days. Since this dispatch has been printed, I shall have to make a statement within a few days, but until then I have nothing to say."

Messengers Not to Sell Tickets.

The Commercial Cable Company has issued a circular, signed by George G. DRAGGED BY A TROLLEY CAR.

W. L. Wixson and E. F. Johnson Knocked Down and Badly Hurt.

William L. Wixson, forty-three years old, of 200 West Ninety-ninth Street, and his wife's grandfather, Edward F. Johnson, eighty-eight years old, of 115 West Ninety-sixth Street, were knocked down and dragged several feet by south-bound Amsterdam Avenue electric car No. 1,582, at Amsterdam Avenue and Ninety-ninth Street, last night.

Mr. Wixson was internally hurt, had a fracture of the pelvis, and a scalp wound that required six stitches. Mr. Johnson's scalp was also cut open and he was much bruised. Both were taken to Mr. Wixsop's home. William McCauley, motorman of the car, was not arrested.

CHILD GIFTS TO THE POOR.

Fifth Avenue Church's Notable Festival—Dr. Purves Not Present.

The children of the Sunday school of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church enjoyed their regular Christmas festival in the Sunday school room of the church last evening. The festival was notable in that the children did not gather in the expectation of receiving presents, but to act as agents of Santa Claus in providing gifts for those who but for them would have but a small share of Christmas cheer. Every child brought a big red bag filled with groceries, clothing, or fruit, while many contributed toys. In addition to gifts of this kind there were many donations of money for the purchase of coal, potatoes, and other provisions for the poor of the parish and the chapels attached to the church.

It was expected by many who were present that Dr. George T. Purves of Princeton, who has received a unanimous call to become pastor of the church, might attend the services, in response to an invitation sent to him, as he visited the city yesterday to conduct the funeral of Malcolm Graham at the Brick Presbyterian Church. Superintendent H. Edwards Rowland said, however, that Dr. Purves had returned directly to Princeton after the funeral services, on account of his wife's illness. It was said by Mr. Rowland and other members of the church who were present last evening that no word had been received from Dr. Purves relative to his intentions in answering the call to the pastorate.

ADAMS & CO.'S NEW HOME.

Foundations for the Six-Story Structure Begun—Details of Plans.

Work has been begun on the foundations for the new building which is to be erected by Adams & Co., in Sixth Avenue, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets, and which will supplant the structure now occupied by that firm. The building will cover an area of 200 feet square and will be six stories in height. The entire floor space will amount approximately to seven acres.

The new store will be in the Renaissance style of architecture, light colored materials being used in its construction, and it will be fireproof throughout. Three handsome entrances in Sixth Avenue will give access to the store, each flanked by pilasters of polished granite, with artistic bronze scroll work. In the centre of the store and extending to the fifth floor there will be a handsome and well lighted rotunda, surrounded by ornamental columns and arches. Six electric elevators will give rapid and convenient access to the upper floors.

Broad and handsome marble stairways will rise from the main floor, one from the rotunda and one from each street entrance. The large central stairway will lead directly to a richly decorated parlor for the convenience of women patrons, and to the manicuring establishment on the second floor. On this floor will also be situated the various departments devoted to the sale of women's and children's garments and millinery. A commodious restaurant will be found on the fifth floor, and on the roof will be a finely equipped photograph gallery. The receiving and shipping departments will be in the basement, as will also be the engine rooms, the electric lighting and heating plants, and the apparatus for ventilation.

The pneumatic tube system to be used for carrying cash embodies the most improved devices, practically doing away with all delay in making change. There will be no interruption to business or to the comfort of patrons while these changes are being made, as the work of building is to be done in sections, so as to obviate all difficulties which might otherwise naturally arise. When completed, the building will be a noteworthy addition to the architecture of Sixth Avenue.

SHOOTING DOGS IN THE PARK.

Mr. Clausen Justifies His Action—Denies Supt. Hankinson's Charge.

Park Commissioner Clausen yesterday expressed himself in terms of resentment at an imputation in a published statement of Superintendent Charles H. Hankinson of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to the effect that the Park Department was willfully violating the law by shooting stray dogs infesting the Park, in defiance of the warning of the society.

Mr. Clausen stated in justification of the Park Department's action that the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals had paid absolutely no attention to his communications requesting them to take the matter into their own hands, and that after waiting a reasonable length of time for the society to take steps toward the abatement of the nuisance, he had undertaken to rid the Park of the ever-increasing number of stray dogs in the speediest manner possible.

When seen yesterday Mr. Clausen said: "This nuisance has grown to such proportions that radical means must be adopted to suppress it. A man has the right to protect his property, and, as I exercise control over the Central Park, I have the right to protect its property therein. Some of this property is being destroyed and visitors to the Park are being annoyed every day, as I know from what I have seen and the complaints I have received. We intend protecting the Park property from destruction and the visitors from annoyance as far as possible.

"The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has never asked for a permit for its dog wagon to enter the Park. We will gladly give them such permission and assist them in ridding the Park of stray dogs. No dogs which could be caught have been shot, but the animals now infesting the Park are wild and shy to such an extent that capture is well nigh impossible."

Regarding Superintendent Hankinson's statement that there was a pound for animals in the Park, Assistant Secretary C. H. Smith stated yesterday that this pound was abolished some ime ago at the request of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

SOL SMITH RUSSELL TO REST.

Will Cancel Engagements and Retire for a Year or More, It Is Said.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—The Record says that Sol Smith Russell will retire from the stage for a year or more at the conclusion of his interrupted engagement at the Grand Opera House. He has already recovered sufficiently from the attack that compelled him to discontinue his performance Monday evening, and there is no doubt he will be able to resume next Monday afternoon, as previously announced; but he will not tax his weakened constitution beyond what will be necessary to fulfill this contract at the Grand Opera House for the next two weeks. All his engagements thereafter for the entire season will be canceled.

Mr. Fred Berger, his manager, says: "Mr. Russell has been convinced that the state of his health is such that he will risk an early and permanent breakdown unless he takes a complete rest for a long period."

HORACE P. PELL TO BE AN ACTOR.

Gives Up Society to Join Charles Frohman's Forces.

The latest aspirant for professional histrionic honors from the inner circles of society is Horace Porter Pell, a first cousin of Howland Pell, club member and a society leader.

Mr. Pell has been engaged for Charles Frohman's production of "Hearts Are Trumps" that will be put on at the Empire Theatre early in February. He has taken this step despite the opposition of his family. Mr. Pell has just returned from a year's study abroad, during which he appeared as an amateur in Dinar, Southern France. He studied the pianoforte under a celebrated German master. His entrée into the Frohman forces was effected through Miss Elisabeth Marbury, who presented him to Joseph Humphreys, who stages all of Mr. Frohman's plays.

"I have made up my mind to give Mr. Pell a chance to display his ability," said Mr. Humphreys last night. "In our companies he will be afforded an opportunity of displaying the talent that I believe he possesses."

Before his professional début Mr. Pell and his younger brother will appear in the amateur theatrical performances on Jan. 6 at Mrs. Bayard Clark's, 6 East Tenth Street.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC

SMALL AUDIENCE HEARS IT

Performance Moves with Leaden Feet —Conducting of Signor Bevignani Infected the Singers.

That the operatic public does not look with favor on changes of the programme at the Metropolitan Opera House was pretty thoroughly demonstrated last night. "Tannhäuser" was originally announced for the evening, but owing to the troubles of the company in struggling with the weather while "on the road" the drama of Wagner could not be given. The sufferer-in-chief from weather was M. Ernst van Dyck, who will not in all likelihood be heard immediately. He is the chief interpreter of "Tannhäuser," and Mr. Dippel, who would naturally take his place, is to sing Lohengrin to-night. The result was that Mr. Grau was forced to change the opera last evening and give Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro," at which an audience representing little more than the subscription list was in attendance.

The change was duly announced in advance, but the public had prepared itself to hear "Tannhäuser" and it could not alter its appetite at short notice. Those who did hear the Mozart opera were not remarkably demonstrative. This, it must be confessed, was not a source of wonder, for the whole performance moved with leaden feet. If the spirit of Mozart's work is to be revealed to an audience, the score must be treated with a light, rapid, staccato touch, and the action must move with buoyancy and celerity. Neither of these requirements was fulfilled last night.

In the first place, it cannot be said that Signor Revignani, who conducted, is well fitted by temperament or musical habit to the direction of such a work. He lacks the elasticity of method necessary to success, and his phlegmatic beat replaces all the curves of the score with angles. His conducting naturally infected the singers, not all of whom are well suited to music of this kind. M. Edouard de Reszke, for example, who was the Almaviva, has always missed the touch of light comedy demanded by the opera. It is, indeed, hard for a man to sing with such an orotund organ as that of M. de Reszke and produce the illusion of an eighteenth century John Drew. M. de Reszke sings the music with fine voice and admirable enunciation, but his diction is certainly deficient in flexibility.

Mme. Clementine de Vere, who was the Susanna last evening, is even less suited to an opera of this kind. Her voice sounded unusually deficient in sonority, and she has never yet shown in a part in which would lead one to expect her Susanna to sparkle with the foam of champagne. She was heard at her best in the letter duet with Mme. Eames. The latter has always been a lovely Countess, and she lived up last night to her record. In each of her gowns she was a beautiful picture, and her voice had an especially delightful warmth. She sang with uncommon freedom and did much to relieve the general monotony of the proceedings.

Mlle. de Lussan was the Cherubino. She received the unfailing encore for "Voi che sapete," but this must be accepted as a tribute to the music rather than to its delivery. Mlle. de Lussan has of late developed aspirations toward largeness of tone, and the result is that she frequently misplaces her tones, forces her voice, and indulges in a vicious vibrato. All these things are to be regretted, for she possesses a voice of great natural beauty. Signor Campahari was a very good Figaro. In his impersonation the Italian lightness of touch was not wanting, and he let his voice sport with the music in a manner generally delightful. But he, too, shows a fondness for occasional explosions.

The other members of the cast were Mlle. Bauermeister as Marcellina, Signor Vanni as Basilio, Lempriere Pringle as Dr. Bartolo, and M. Dufriche as the gardener. The chorus sang in a spiritless and depressing style. The orchestra played with precision, but with a heaviness to be expected in the circumstances.

SOCIETY AT THE OPERA.

The House Last Night the Least Brilliant of the Season.

The house last evening was the least brilliant of the season. There were fewer well-known people in the boxes. Mrs. Astor and Mrs. John Jacob Astor, with Harry Lehr, Col. Astor, and Baron Oppenheim occupied the Astor box. Mrs. Astor wore a beautiful gown of very light mauve brocade and a fichu of old lace held in place by many diamond pins. In her hair was one dark purple feather. Mrs. John Jacob Astor was again in black, wearing the same gown as on Wednesday.

Mrs. Gouverneur Kortright, in pale blue, had with her Mrs. Perry Tiffany in black and white, and Mrs. Duncan Elliot in primrose yellow, with a large bunch of violets. Mrs. John R. Drexel in white satin, with pearls and diamonds, had as her guest Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, in pale blue silk, covered with large silver disks. Miss Atherton Blight wore a stunning gown of black and white brocade.

Mrs. George Crocker had with her the Misses Rutherford in white.

In the grand tier were Miss Eloise Breese, who had David Bispham as a guest; Mrs. Francis H. Leggett, who had Miss Julia Wells, Miss Harnett Wright, M. de Monvel, the artist, and Count Mercati.

Others in the house were Miss Josephine Johnson and Thomas Cushing, Mr. and Mrs Harry McVickar, Mrs. H. A. Robbins, Mrs. Watts Sherman, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Bryce, Mrs. Kinnicutt, Miss De Forest, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Juilliard, Mrs. George Henry Warren, Mrs. Egerton L. Winthrop, Duc de Loubat, and Mr. and Mrs. John J. Wysong.

PLANS OF MME. BARRIOS.

Guatemalan President's Widow May Have a Stage Career.

A report was going the rounds yesterday that Mme. Algeria Barrios, widow of the former President of Guatemala, was to appear on the New York stage in a repertoire of plays, under the management of Arthur Rehan. The productions, it was said, were to comprise those which Miss Ada Rehan had made famous.

Richard Dorney, long manager at Daly's Theatre, said last night: "It is a canard. Arthur Rehan and his sister are not on speaking terms. Arthur Rehan, I understand, is in the United States, but just where I do not know. Mme. Barrios may be studying for the stage, but she will not appear under Arthur Rehan's management. That is as certain as I am sitting here. I have seen it stated that Mme. Barrios was to be seen in a production of 'The Great Ruby,' but I do not believe it."

Mme. Barrios was at one time accounted one of the richest women in the western hemisphere, and while much of her estate in Guatemala is in litigation, she is still very wealthy.

"Goldfisch" at the Irving Place.

At the Irving Place Theatre last evening the three-act comedy, "Goldfisch," ("The Railroad of Love,") by Schoenthan and Kadelburg, was produced for the first time. The stage management was good, and pretty settings and gowns added to the favorable impression the comedy produced. In the cast were the Misses Braga, Brandt, Merito, and Messrs. Haenseler, Senius, Strobl, and von Seyffertitz.

Mansfield in "A Parisian Romance."

Richard Mansfield, at the Garden Theatre last night, revived Octave Feuillet's drama, "A Parisian Romance." The large audience present gave many manifestations of being highly amused by Mr. Mansfield's impersonation of Baron Chevrial. The supporting cast gave ample evidence of its competency. For the matinée to-day "Prince Karl" will be given, with the only revival of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" for the evening performance.

To Join Empire Theatre Company.

Miss Margaret Anglin, who came into theatrical prominence through her impersonation of Roxane in Richard Mansfield's production of "Cyrano de Bergerac" last season, and who has been appearing in the leading female rôle in "The Only Way," with Henry Miller, has returned to New York to become a member of the Empire Theatre stock company.

Ordered Out of Weber & Fields's.

A box party at Weber & Fields's house annoyed the performers last night by throwing coins at them. After doing this for some time the occupants of the box were ordered out of the theatre.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

Although to-morrow will in reality be Christmas Eve, the world in general looks upon to-day, since to-morrow will be Sunday, when no purchases can be made, as the eve of the festival. There will be a hurrying and a skurrying all day long and well into the evening on the part of the always large army of belated Christmas shoppers to complete their purchases and put the final touches to the Christmas arrangements. It is not typical Christmas weather, but the older members of the community are quite content to be without the customary snow and ice and sloppy streets.

***

It is to be feared that the continued depression in Wall Street, which, against the hopes of thousands, has lasted up to Christmas Eve, will make the festival a very different one in atmosphere from that of last year, when the stock market was booming and the great majority of New Yorkers were financially happy, at least. There were many long and unhappy faces in the clubs and the fashionable restaurants last evening, and too many New York households will have the saddest Christmas Eve in many years.

***

The day before Christmas is never one in which there are any formal entertainments, and Christmas Eve itself is a family festival evening. As was the case last year, many of the Christmas parties will be given in the country, and there will be a flight to-day to the Upper Hudson, Morristown, Orange, Tuxedo, and Staten and Long Islands. At the large country clubs there will be some large celebrations of an informal character to-morrow evening, but New Year's has come to be more of an event than Christmas at Ardsley, Tuxedo, Meadow Brook, Westchester, and Cedarhurst.

***

The incoming trains at the Grand Central Station on Thursday and again yesterday were filled with boys and girls and young men and maidens coming from the large New England colleges and schools for their Christmas holidays. Parents, relatives, and guardians awaited their children and the young people, and the arriving station had all the atmosphere of a fashionable reception until the trains arrived and were emptied of their happy, laughing freight, when it was filled with college and school cheers and affectionate greetings. The St. Paul's boys came home on Thursday night, and those from the Groton and Exeter schools yesterday. The Harvard students who live in New York or near here will arrive to-day. There will be a series of theatre parties, dances, and even dinners for the next fortnight for these schoolchildren and college men, and New York society will give itself up largely to the entertainment of the youngsters from now on until New Year's.

***

Although Christmas at sea is never a very cheerful festival and has no sentimental setting, there are a few New Yorkers and others who are booked to sail today. Among those booked on the Etruria are Lord Cassilis, Ernest Hopkinson, the Rev. Dr. Robert Hope and Mrs. Hope, Comte de Kergolay, and Miss Eugenia Robbins of Baltimore. The Patricia, which sails to-day for Hamburg via Plymouth, has booked among others Mrs. Mary F. Hamilton and the Misses Hamilton, Capt. Charles E. Lindquist, Mrs. Herbert W. Stebbins, and Miss Whittier. The Columbia, which arrived yesterday from Southampton, brought among other passengers Dr. Arthur Conrad, Miss Mary Lyman, Col. S. N. Morgan, and Mrs. Morgan, Jr. Charles W. Stiles, Scientific Attaché of the American Embassy in Berlin; Mrs. and Miss Stiles, and Robertson Ward. The North German Lloyd announces that in consequence of a small passenger list, due to the fact that people do not care to spend their holidays at sea, the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, which was to have sailed for Southampton, Cherbourg, and Bremen on Tuesday next, will not sail until Jan. 4. Coming on the St. Paul, due here to-day, are, among others, Robert P. Porter, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Church, Mrs. Willard Case, Mrs. D. C. Howell, and Miss M. P. Howell, Mr. and Mrs. Harry F. Nicholl, Mrs. B. W. Pierson, Miss C. Pierson, and Mrs. J. W. Walker and Miss A. P. Walker.

***

Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs will give a dinner dance on Dec. 27 for Miss Lily Oelrichs, daughter of Mr. Charles M. Oelrichs. There will be about thirty guests at the dinner, and some fifty others have been asked to come in for the dance later on. Mrs. Oelrichs will also give her annual Christmas tree for the children to which the friends of her little boy have been invited, on the afternoon of Christmas Day.

***

Most of the guests of Mr. and Mrs. George Gould at the entertainment which they gave at Lakewood on Thursday evening returned to town yesterday afternoon. The men, for the most part, came up in the morning, as Wall Street affairs claimed their attention and presence. Some few of the guests, however, remained to witness the second performance of the three little plays in the afternoon, and which were produced with the prestige of the previous night's presentation before New York fashionables, at $2 a ticket for the Lakewood people, who thus had the opportunity of seeing the theatre and plays, and contributing to one of their local charities, to whose benefit the receipts were devoted.

***

The guests of Mr. and Mrs. Gould on Thursday night are unanimous in expressing the opinion that the entire affair was the most admirably planned and successfully carried out one of its kind they ever attended in this country or in Europe. The generalship which Mrs. Gould displayed, it is also said, establishes her qualifications as a coming leader in New York society, to which she has now been admitted without question. It begins to look like "a Gould Winter."

***

Mrs. Everett M. Culver and her sister, Miss Clark, daughters of Senator W. A. Clark, who after the New Year will leave for Washington to spend the Winter with their father, will give a farewell reception at their apartment, 175 West Fifty-eighth Street, on the afternoon of Saturday, Dec. 30. It will be remembered that last year Mrs. Culver and Miss Clark gave a unique New Year's Eve party in this same apartment, which was the talk of the town for some weeks afterward.

***

The departures for Aiken will begin in force as soon as the New Year has passed, and the flight southward will resemble that of the migratory birds. The advance guard of the well-known men and women who spend the Winter at this fashionable Southern resort has already left and is "tenting on the old camp ground." Mr. and Mrs. Clinch Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Dinsmore, and, of course, the Thomas Hitchcock, Jrs., and Mrs. Duncan Elliot will be the leaders in the diversions this Winter at Aiken. Miss Celestine Eustis is already at her cottage, which was formerly known as Prickly Pear, but she has now more euphoniously christened it "Mon Repos." Some of the golfers are talking of Florida and of the Winter tournaments there. Sentiment on these tournaments, however, seems to be divided in the State, as one of the Jacksonville papers recently spoke of the game as "a phantasm born of repentance from Scotch whisky and the unutterable dreariness of the gloomy Scotch moors." Meanwhile the hotel and steamship agents are booming the sandy Florida links, and are publishing pictures of scenes on these links, with wooden platforms, and in one instance a Coquina tower, for teeing grounds, little knowing that these very pictures would drive the really good golfer as far as possible from any such courses.

***

Mr. William K. Vanderbilt left the Pennsylvania station in his private car last evening for Biltmore, N. C., where he goes to spend the holidays with Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt. He will not return to the city for a week.

***

Some excitement appears to have been caused in the theatrical newspapers by the announcement of the engagement of Mr. Frederick Rook, whom they style "a prominent and wealthy member of the fashionable Newport set," and as "well liked in the smart set both here and at Newport," to the actress, Miss May Cargill, who is better known under her former stage name of Yvette Violette. While Mr. Rook's mother and sister have been known at Newport, where for some years they have had a cottage, and the sister is engaged to Mr. Neilson Howard, Mr. Rook himself never appeared to have any taste for society, and is not well known in or to fashionable life in New York or Newport.

***

It now appears that the hysterics in which the Boston newspapers have of late been indulging over the famous Mrs. Jack Gardner's reported intention to bring over the parts of an old Italian palace and restore the palace itself in the back yard of her Beacon Street mansion, has little of foundation. Mrs. Gardner has been interviewed at length by The Boston Journal, to whose representative she declared that "she never read the newspapers," and stated that "even had she found in Italy a building whose artistic merit was great enough to render it worth while to undertake the enormous task of importing it to America, she would have been prevented from carrying out such a plan by the ridiculous tariff laws enforced by the present Administration at Washington." Mrs. Gardner further delivered herself of the following opinion: "Italy makes you pay to take pictures and statues of artistic value out of her borders—America makes you pay to bring them in. Italy is right in her theories; America is wrong and very foolish." To the horror of Boston, Mrs. Gardner announces in the same interview that unless the tariff conditions are changed she may decide to live all of the time in Europe. This must be a sad Christmas at the Hub, with such a shadow of impending loss hanging over it.

NEW STEAMSHIP RHEIN HERE.

North German Lloyd Liner Will Run Between Bremen and New York.

The new twin-screw steamship Rhein of the North German Lloyd Company passed in Sandy Hook last evening on her maiden trip. She left Bremen on Dec. 9, and will run between New York and Bremen, carrying freight and passengers. She will leave this port on her return trip Dec. 28.

The Rhein was built in the yard of Blohm & Voss, in Hamburg. Her length is 520 feet, her beam 58 feet, and depth 40 feet. Her gross registered tonnage is 10,200 and her displacement 17,700 tons. She is provided with two quadruple-expansion engines of 5,000 indicated horse power, and her average speed is 13½ knots. She is constructed to carry a large amount of freight, 10,000 tons, and 140 first-cabin, 150 second-cabin, and a large number of steerage passengers. She is provided with a double bottom for her entire length, and is divided by 11 water-tight bulkheads. She also carries bilge keels to modify the rolling motion. Her first and second cabin passengers are berthed in a deckhouse amidships, and the steerage passengers are provided for on the main deck. For discharging and loading cargo 15 steam winches have been provided to work 8 hatches.

BOY'S TASTE FOR ALCOHOL.

Eugene Smith Committed on His Mother's Unfavorable Report.

Eugene Smith, the fourteen-year-old son of Bernard Smith, who lives at 458 West Twenty-eighth Street, and supports a family of six on $13 a week, yesterday was committed to the Gerry society in the West Side Court for incorrigibility. His mother told Magistrate Deuel that the boy is often intoxicated, smokes cigarettes, kicks his sister until she is black and blue, and that he recently tried to stab his invalid brother.

The boy for two years has been at work, but has never held a job over two weeks, and is constantly in trouble. Thursday last he gathered wood along the river front and sold it for money, which he spent for liquor. He crawled in a cellar, and some of his playmates found him and told his father, who had him arrested. He had to be carried home bodily, and his father decided to turn him over to the Gerry society to be improved, if possible.

BOY ROBBED BY BOYS.

Revolver Used by Footpads of Tender Years—One Captured.

Edward Gaffney, ten years of age, was held in the West Side Court yesterday for further examination on Dec. 26 on the charge of highway robbery. Together with his brother John and an unidentified boy, he held up Andrew Murphy, twelve years old, of 821 Ninth Avenue, at the point of a revolver and robbed him of 85 cents. The robbery was committed in Fifty-fourth Street Thursday afternoon, as the victim was on his way home from a bakery. Mrs. Murphy, assisted by a policeman, captured Gaffney about an hour after the robbery took place. The boys were playing at dice for the proceeds, and John Gaffney and the unidentified boy escaped.

SHAD IN THE HUDSON.

Many Fishermen Catching Them in Violation of the Law.

Fishermen have been taking many shad in the Hudson River off Fort Lee within the last few days. Shad are numerous in the river, and their presence so far north at this time of the year is believed to be due to the continued warm weather.

The fishermen, who have been taking the shad, have been selling them for $2 and $2.50 each, and a small catch repays them better than a boat load of other fish.

The taking of shad from the river at this time is in violation of the Fisheries, Game, and Forest law of the State. Section 136 of this law, as amended by Chapter 426 of the Laws of 1899, provides that shad shall not be taken from the Hudson and Delaware Rivers or Rondout Creek with nets of any kind, except between March 14 and June 15.

The section further provides that "whoever shall violate or attempt to violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and in addition thereto shall be liable to a penalty of $50 for each violation thereof."

To Interest the Thoughtful:

FIVE TOPICS OF INTEREST

WILL BE DISCUSSED IN

The New York Times

OF TO-MORROW, December 24.

MRS. FREDERICK NATHAN, President of the Consumers' League, contributes an interesting article on "The Position of Women as Wage Earners," giving apt illustrations.

MRS. LILLIE DEVEREUX BLAKE takes up another phase of the woman question in a discussion of "Co-Education," with instances in point.

A. W. HAWKS, JR., has an article entitled "A Municipal Experiment," which deals with the new plan of government for Baltimore.

MRS. EMMA M. HOOPER, Associate Editor of The Ladies' Home Journal, takes issue with Mr. H. K. Bush-Brown in a view of "Rational Dress for Women."

MR. E. S. NADAL writes entertainingly of "The Future of the Horse"; and

Besides these special features there will appear a number of letters bearing on the rights and wrongs of the war in South Africa and of the combatants in that struggle, as well as

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Sidney Ashmore.

Sidney Ashmore died yesterday morning at his home, 20 Washington Square West, of debility consequent on old age, complicated with lung trouble. Mr. Ashmore was born in London, England, seventy-nine years ago. He was the son of Thomas Ashmore, a London business man. In Wall Street he became an associate of Jerome, Travers & Lorillard and made a fortune. In the early days of the Equitable Life Assurance Society Mr. Ashmore was connected with that corporation for a few years. Four years ago Mr. and Mrs. Ashmore narrowly escaped being burned to death in the Peabody apartment house, Washington Square. Mr. Ashmore leaves a wife and six children. The children are Prof. Sidney G. Ashmore of Union College, Schenectady, Herbert Ellsworth Ashmore of Boston, Miss Dora L. Ashmore, Mrs. Alice Fairfax Hicks, wife of Osmund Hicks of Esher, Surrey, England; Harry Beckwith Ashmore, and Mrs. Isabel M. Schari, wife of William Schari, Jr., of this city.

John Ripley Myers.

John Ripley Meyers, a member of the firm of Bistol, Myers & Co., manufacturing chemists, of Brooklyn, died yesterday of pneumonia at the Post-Graduate Hospital, where he was taken last Monday. Mr. Myers was born in Rutland, Vt., and was in his thirty-sixth year. He was graduated from Hamilton College in the class of '87, after which he came to this city. He was a member of the University, New York Athletic, and St. Nicholas Clubs. He was unmarried.

Obituary Notes.

Capt. ALFRED NUSKEY, one of the oldest residents of Sing Sing, N. Y., died Thursday night. He was born in Philadelphia eighty-four years ago. He was Captain of the old Lockwood Guards, which were organized and flourished more than a generation ago.

IRA FORD, for nearly half a century a resident of Brooklyn, and for many years a Vestryman of Calvary Episcopal Church and Assistant Superintendent of the Sunday school, died on Thursday in his seventy-second year, at his home, 35 Jefferson Street. He was born in Milford, Conn. He established what was afterward one of the largest cooperages in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn.

FUNERAL OF MALCOLM GRAHAM.

Services at Brick Presbyterian Church Were Largely Attended.

The funeral of Malcolm Graham of the firm of Hartley & Graham, who died on Monday at his country residence at Seabright, N. J., took place yesterday morning at the Brick Presbyterian Church in this city. Dr. Francis L. Patton, President of Princeton University, officiated, assisted by the Rev. Dr. George T. Purves of Princeton Theological Seminary, who has been called to the pastorship of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Graham was long a Trustee. The body was taken to the church from Mr. Graham's city residence, 13 West Seventeenth Street, where brief prayers were said by Dr. Purves. The church was well filled.

The pall bearers were Marcellus Hartley, Dr. George W. Wheelock, John Sloane, Morris K. Jesup, Joseph B. Varnum, John J. McCook, John S. Kennedy, and David S. Egleston.

The casket was almost hidden under a bank of ferns and pink roses, and many beautiful wreaths of palms, lilies, roses, and violets, with other floral emblems, artistically arranged, covered the front of the platform. A handsome wreath was from Hartley & Graham's employes, many of whom attended the service.

The following hymns were sung by a quartet of male and female voices in the organ loft: "Was There Ever Kindest Shepherd?" "Jesus, Thy Name I Love," and "How Blest the Righteous When He Dies."

The Rev. Dr. Purves read the service and offered up a prayer. President Patton then paid a high tribute to the life and character of Mr. Graham.

Among other things, he said: "The strong energies of his life were enlisted as they properly should be, in the interests of business, but he was also a religious man, and carried his Christian life with him in the discharge of his business. He was a passionately devoted to the truths of the Gospel, and its principles ruled his conduct, for he was not only a man of devotional habits, but of devout spirit. The hallowing influence of his piety, too, was felt in his home.

"Christianity in some men takes the shape of scornful indignation for all that is wrong, in others cold intellectual loftiness. Some are affected by religion in humane consideration for others. Malcolm Graham was a man of this type. He was gentle in others, kind, and thoughtful, always ready to see the good there might be in the most unpromising life. He will be remembered by what he has done."

The benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Dr. Purves, and the body was then borne out to the solemn strains of Chopin's "Funeral March." The burial, which was private, was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit Wages.

Employes of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company were discussing yesterday the story that the Directors had decided upon a graded system

LIVELY BRIDGE HEARING

Queens Citizens Protest Strenuously Before Aldermanic Committee.

THEY ACCUSE CORPORATIONS

Mr. Conkling's Plea for Tunnels Denounced—Session Ends in Disturbance, Without Action.

The second hearing held by the Aldermanic Committee on Bridges and Tunnels on the resolution authorizing the construction of the two proposed bridges over the East River yesterday came near ending in a row, and it was only through the coolness of the Chairman, Alderman Schneider, that a scene of great disorder was averted. Two large delegations of citizens were present, one from Queens and the other from Brooklyn, and both took such an emphatic part in the discussion that the Chairman several times threatened to clear the room in order that the voices of the speakers could be heard.

Alfred R. Conkling said he represented a large number of property owners in the Borough of Manhattan, who would have to bear a large proportion of the cost of one of the bridges, and on behalf of them he protested against the building of a bridge to Queens, until the population of that borough was such as to warrant the expense. The property owners of Manhattan should have an influential voice in the matter, he said, for they would have to pay $20 toward the building of the bridge for every dollar paid by the people of Queens. He favored tunnels as more economical than bridges.

Mr. Conkling was frequently interrupted, one tall man from Queens accusing him of being in the pay of corporations. Several residents of South Brooklyn pleaded for a tunnel to that section, saying that they had not benefited in the slightest degree from consolidation, either with Brooklyn or New York.

When Julius H. Cohen of the Social Reform Club arose to speak, there was a strong protest from the men from Queens. Mr. Cohen was interrupted many times, but he continued to argue that the city should not waste its money on expensive bridges when such action might endanger its credit.

Judge Manly of Queens broke in on Mr. Cohen's remarks long enough to say, "I insist that the people have a right to be heard, instead of the corporations."

"That's all bosh," Mr. Cohen retorted. The disorder became so great at this point that the Chairman declared the hearing at an end. The members of the committee put on their hats and overcoats and left the dais, but President Bowley of the Borough of Queens elbowed his way through his constituents and began a speech which no one save himself could hear. Having finished, the President slammed a paper, which he called a protest, on the desk and walked out. In the meantime his constituents gathered in knots about the chamber and talked about bridges to all who would listen. One violent coterie surrounded Mr. Cohen and held him up for fifteen minutes, in the meantime denouncing him for the views he had expressed.

THE BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

Appropriation to Investigate Feasibility of Tunnel to Brooklyn.

The Board of Aldermen yesterday adopted the resolution which was introduced in the Board of Public Improvements by Controller Coler, asking the Board of Estimate to appropriate $50,000 for the purpose of investigating the feasibility of constructing a tunnel between the Battery and South Brooklyn. Only two votes were cast against the resolution.

A bond issue of $250,000 to pay awards made by the Change of Grade Damage Commission was authorized, and another appropriating $475,000 for sites for police stations was defeated.

The board adjourned to meet on Wednesday next at 1 o'clock P. M. Daily sessions beginning at that hour will be held until Saturday, Dec. 30, when the board will meet at 9 o'clock A. M. to conclude the work of the term.

ASSEMBLY ASSERTS POWER.

Seeks to Control All Contracts for City Improvements and Supplies — Republican Aldermen's Opportunity.

The Municipal Assembly since consolidation has been in a quandary as to its proper position in regard to contracts for city improvements and supplies, and it has been at war with the Board of Public Improvements and the administration over the question until recently, when the Appellate Division in the Second Department decided that the consent of the local Legislature was not necessary to the completion of any contract, because it had not adopted any ordinance requiring heads of departments to submit contracts to it for approval before consummating them. In order to remedy this state of affairs, Councilman Christman on Tuesday offered this ordinance, which was adopted yesterday:

Section 1.—In all cases of repairs necessary to be done or new improvements to be undertaken or of supplies to be furnished, the head of the proper department shall report such proposed repairs, improvements, or furnishing of supplies to the Municipal Assembly, and shall take no further action in regard to the same unless authorized thereto by said Municipal Assembly.

Section 2.—No contract of whatsoever nature shall be awarded or executed by any department of the City Government or by any officer thereof until such contract has been submitted to and approved by the Municipal Assembly.

Section 3.—This ordinance shall take effect immediately.

Having pased the Council, the ordinance was sent to the Board of Aldermen, where Mr. Wafer of Brooklyn became its sponsor.

Alderman Sherman (Citizens' Union) opposed it, saying that it would tend to embarrass the city officials. Alderman McCall, the Tammany leader, urged its passage, and Alderman Gaffney (Tammany) attacked it.

The ordinance was formally adopted by a vote of 40 to 8. Those voting in the negative were Aldermen Sherman, (Citizens' Union,) and Wood, Gaffney, Kennefick, Roddy, Harrington, Ledwith, and Gledhill, (Tammany.)

In case the Mayor should approve this ordinance, the Aldermen, it is pointed out, have placed themselves at the mercy of the minority in the next board, as the approval of contracts requires forty-five votes. The next board has sixteen Republicans, who will thus have more than a balance of power, and will be able to hold up any contract that may come before the body.

RAPID TRANSIT IN BROOKLYN.

Mr. Coler Thinks Manhattan's Proposed System Can Be Extended to That Borough.

Controller Coler says that the way to solve the bridge-tunnel controversy is to extend the proposed underground rapid transit system to the Borough of Brooklyn. He will request to-day President Alexander E. Orr to call a special meeting of the commission to consider the legality of such a scheme under the provisions of the Rapid Transit act. Corporation Counsel Whalen doubts the commission's authority to do this. Speaking of the matter yesterday, he said:

"As to the right of the commission to do the work, I have doubts. Speaking offhand, my recollection is that the Rapid Transit act limits the powers of the Rapid Transit Commission in New York County. The first section of the act, passed in 1891, says that there shall be a Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners in each city of 1,000,000 inhabitants, according to the last preceding census. The City of Brooklyn, in 1890, had only 800,000 inhabitants and never had a Rapid Transit Commission.

"Furthermore, the charter especially provides that the Rapid Transit act as passed and amended shall remain in full force and effect, so that it cannot be held that the powers of the present commission extend to Brooklyn, because Brooklyn is now a part of the city, with 1,000,000 inhabitants. In order that the proposed tunnel may be of use, the Commissioners would have to extend the underground road from the City Hall to the Battery or Bowling Green. To consider such a thing would practically be to throw the whole rapid transit question right open again just when we have reached a point where the work of construction is about to begin.

"After the completion of the great underground system, I will favor any form of rapid transit that will convenience the people living in remote parts of the greater city, transit facilities that will enable them to go to and from their homes at moderate cost, but now I most strongly protest against anything that might spoil the present prospect."

Mr. Coler yesterday had this to say:

"I have always thought that the Rapid Transit Commission should comprehend Brooklyn and the outlying boroughs in its plans, but I have not been certain until now that under the present statute it has been empowered to do so."

Mr. Coler foresees certain difficulties for the city if it goes ahead independently of the commission. The franchises owned by the New York and Brooklyn Tunnel Company and the New York and Brooklyn Railway will, he says, seriously complicate the situation. These troubles would be more easily met, Mr. Coler believes, if the matter were in the hands of the Rapid Transit Commission.

JOHN M. CONKLIN & SON FAIL.

Brooklyn Dry Goods House Is Closed Temporarily While Filled with Christmas Shoppers.

The firm of John M. Conklin & Son, dry goods merchants at 436 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, made an assignment yesterday morning after being in business less than a year. The doors of the establishment were closed at 10 o'clock. At that time there were nearly 500 Christmas shoppers in the store, and these, to their surprise, were politely requested to leave. Immediately afterward the following notice was posted on the doors:

A general assignment has been made to the undersigned by John M. Conklin & Son. The store will be closed for a few hours.
EDWARD J. DRUGAN, Assignee.

The store was opened again for business shortly after 1 o'clock. In the afternoon representatives of the firms of H. B. Claflin & Co., J. K. Steifel & Co., and Charles E. Rycroft & Co. made application in the United States District Court to have George W. Conklin, the surviving general partner of the firm, adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. They filed the following claims: H. B. Claflin & Co., $5,241.38; J. K. Steifel & Co., $462.98, and Charles E. Rycroft & Co., $392.74. Upon their application Robert D. Beattys was appointed receiver. These creditors estimate the liabilities of the firm at from $200,000 to $250,000 and the assets at $150,000.

The assignment filed with the County Clerk sets forth that the firm, formerly composed of John M. Conklin, deceased, and George William Conklin, is now composed of George William Conklin, as general partner, and William Howard as special partner. There are no preferences. Judge Hurd, in the Kings County Court, allowed Mr. Drugan to qualify as assignee, requiring him to give a provisional bond in $25,000. Mr. Drugan was formerly General Superintendent in the store. The assignee gave a statement of the assets, showing them to be $155,000.

Two judgments were obtained in Manhattan yesterday against George W. Conklin, as surviving partner, in the Seventh District Municipal Court, before Judge Herman Joseph, for $728, in favor of M. Goldberg & Sons.

The firm of John M. Conklin & Son began business at its present location in February last. John M. Conklin entered the employ of Journeay & Burnham of Brooklyn in 1860, and became a stockholder and officer of the company. In the latter part of last year he left the Journeay & Burnham Company, and organized the firm of John M. Conklin & Son. John M. Conklin died several months ago.

MISSING WILL NOT PROBATED.

Legal Presumption that Miss Kennedy Destroyed It Herself and Revoked Public Bequests.

Surrogate Varnum yesterday gave a decision refusing to admit to probate an alleged lost or destroyed will of Rachel Lenox Kennedy, who died at Yorke Cliffe, Me., July 31, 1898, at the age of seventy-two years. Miss Kennedy left a sister, Mary Lenox Kennedy, and a nephew, Van Rensselaer Kennedy, the son of a deceased brother. It was shown that Miss Kennedy executed a will on March 19, 1895, and a codicil to it on Nov. 7, 1897. By this will she gave to a grandniece and namesake, a daughter of her nephew, H. Van Rensselaer Kennedy, $100,000; Miss Platt, a friend and companion, $20,000, and a house and lot at White Plains; the First Presbyterian Church, New York, $80,000; Presbyterian Rest for Convalescents, $40,000; Presbyterian Home for Aged Women, Presbyterian Hospital, New York House and School of Industry, New York Female Auxiliary Bible Society, $10,000 to $20,000 each, and $10,000 each to her friends, the President of Princeton University and the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. The residuary estate was to go, one-half to H. Van Rensselaer Kenned- and one-half to decedent's sister.

By the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure a lost will, in order to be probated, must have been in existence at the time the decedent died, or fraudulently destroyed in her lifetime, and its provisions must be distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses. It was not claimed that Miss Kennedy's will was fraudulently destroyed during her lifetime, and the question was whether it was in existence at the time of her death. The law of this State, the Surrogate said, was that where no testamentary papers have been found, after careful and exhaustive search, the presumption would be that the decedent herself destroyed the will with the intention of revoking it.

The proponents, he said, made the direct charge on the trial that the will had been destroyed or suppressed after Miss Kennedy's death by some person or persons having access to it, with the distinct intimation that reference was made to her nephew and a Mr. Duvale, who was his secretary. "No proof or suggestion has been offered," the Surrogate said, "outside of the present charge of proponent's counsel, casting any reflection upon Mr. Kennedy's character or honorable standing in the community, or his financial status or responsibility, and it may at least be said that no attempt was made to show that he was a person without means or in any needy or necessitous circumstances." The Surrogate held, in conclusion, that it was not established by the proponents that Miss Kennedy's will and codicil were in existence at the time of her death, and the resulting legal presumption that they were destroyed by the testatrix herself was controlling, in the absence of clear and satisfactory proof to the contrary.

Methodist Board of Education.

The Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church at its annual meeting yesterday re-elected the following officers: President—E. G. Andrews; Recording Secretary—the Rev. W. F. Anderson; Treasurer—Joseph S. Stout. Reports were read showing that during the year the board has received $108,959.96, an increase of nearly $15,000 over last year. The Corresponding Secretary's report showed that nearly 2,000 students had been aided. It was announced that $2,000,000 had been pledged for the proposed school and college fund of $10,000,000. The rate of interest on loans to students was fixed at 4 per cent., and an appropriation of $75,000 was made for such loans.

Poor Box Burglar Alarm Sounded.

The Rev. Thomas Taaffe, pastor of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church, at Kent and Willoughby Avenues, Brooklyn, appeared in the Myrtle Avenue Police Court yesterday against a man named John Murphy, whom he found in the church on Thursday afternoon when attracted there by the sounding of a burglar alarm attached to the poor box. As Father Taaffe and his assistant entered the church they found Murphy kneeling in one of the pews as if in prayer. The poor box appeared to have been tampered with, and Father Taaffe held Murphy, while the other priest called a policeman. The prisoner, who says he lives in Philadelphia, was held for examination. The poor box in this church was tampered with some months ago in the same manner.

Closing of Banks and Exchanges.

The Stock Exchange, Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange Banks, Government offices, and business houses will be open to-day. The Produce, Cotton, and Coffee Exchanges will be closed until Tuesday morning. On the Produce Exchange, after the close of business yesterday, the members had their usual ante-Christmas jollification. The balcony was crowded, and the recreations were charivaris and several rousing games of football.

ASKED TO ENJOIN RAILROADS.

Attorney General Petitioned by Shippers to Take Action to Prevent Raising of Rates.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The hearing before the Inter-State Commerce Commission called on account of complaints made by shippers against the proposed new classification of freight by railroads operating under the "official classification" was resumed to-day.

By agreement Frank Harriott, General Traffic Manager of the Erie Railroad and a member of the Official Classification Committee, went on the witness stand to testify as to the new classification. He reiterated Mr. Gill's statement of yesterday that the new classification was adopted because the railroads absolutely needed the increased revenues.

Inquiries developed the admission by Mr. Harriott that, on the average, miscellaneous cars carrying articles paying less than carload rates were being more heavily loaded now than heretofore, and, therefore, that the earnings on that class of traffic were greater.

It developed at this point that at a meeting of the shippers and those representing their interests former Attorney General of Ohio F. S. Monnett, J. H. Bromwell, and Mortimer Matthews of Cincinnati had been appointed to present to the commission the action of the shippers. Mr. Monnett presented a petition asking that the commission lay the testimony before the Attorney General of the United States with a view to have him bring action against the railroads to prevent the new classification from becoming effective on Jan. 1, 1900.

The petition of the shippers follows:

"The undersigned shippers and representatives of various shipping interests would respectfully and respectively petition your honorable body, in view of the testimony disclosed at the session held in this city on Dec. 21, in the matter of changes in freight classification and advances in freight rates by carriers using the official classification, request that such testimony be laid before his Honor the Attorney General of the United States, for the purpose of informing him of the necessity of taking legal action, by injunction or otherwise, in the premises.

"In view of the principles laid down in Thurber versus Railroad Company, March 21, 1899, and in view of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the Transmissouri case, and the decision in the Joint Traffic Association case, we think the evidence will warrant such proceedings, as the action of said official Classification Committee is clearly in violation of the Federal statute, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust act."

For some time the attorneys of the shippers argued in favor of the commission's taking the suggested action, Chairman Knapp of the commission maintaining that the commission had no more authority to make recommendations to the Attorney General than had representatives of the shippers. The commission had no objection to furnish to the Attorney General, at the suggestion of the shipping interests, a transcript of the evidence adduced at the hearing, together with the petition of the shippers for action under the anti-trust law.

The attorneys for the shippers offered to furnish testimony showing that the operation of the new classification would be in restraint of trade, and to that extent a violation of existing law.

It was determined finally that the shippers would offer some testimony, and B. W. Brown, representing Schofield, Sherner & Teagle of Cleveland, Ohio, was sworn. He said the new classification on petroleum would be absolutely ruinous to small shippers. On less than carload lots the increase above the rates on carload lots was in some instances as much as 273 per cent, and in no case was it less than 88 per cent.

Mr. Brown said the small shippers of oil could not successfully compete with the Standard Oil Company, because the rates given to the Standard on carload lots were so much less than the small shippers could get on less than carload lots that the latter practically were shut out of much territory.

This closed the hearing.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

MEMPHIS AND CHATTANOOGA.

Officers Elected—To Build at Once a Line to Stevenson, Ala.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Dec. 22.—The incorporators of the Memphis and Chattanooga Railroad Company held a meeting in this city to-day, and organized the company by selecting the following officers: President—H. S. Chamberlain, Chattanooga; Secretary and Treasurer—George W. Ochs, Chattanooga; General Counsel—Col. W. A. Henderson of Washington, the general counsel of the Southern Railway.

Col. Henderson and a party of the incorporators will leave for Huntsville, Ala., tonight to organize the company in that State. Col. Henderson said that the charter has been secured, and the purpose is to build at once an independent line for the Memphis and Charleston Division of the Southern Railway from Chattanooga to Stevenson, Ala.

RAILROAD OFFICERS ELECTED.

Annual Meeting of Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 22.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern Railway, which has been repeatedly postponed while waiting for the final reports of the receiver, was held to-day.

Out of a total of 40,000 shares, 39,996 shares were voted, and the following Directors were elected: Edward R. Bacon, William Salomon, Otto H. Kahn, and Charles Steele, New York; John K. Cowen, Baltimore; William M. Greene, and J. G. Schmidlapp, Cincinnati; H. Clay Pierce, St. Louis, and Frank W. Tracy, Springfield, Ill.

The new board organized by electing the following officers: President—E. R. Bacon, New York; Vice President and General Manager—William M. Greene, Cincinnati; Secretary—M. B. Wald, New York; Assistant Secretary—Edward H. Movius, Cincinnati; Treasurer—William E. Jones, Cincinnati.

All present to-day denied that this company would be absorbed by the reorganized Baltimore and Ohio Railway, although the closest relations are maintained. As heretofore, there will be an independent company operating the system from Parkersburg to Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, and the Southwest. Messrs. Bacon, Greene, and Tracy are the only Directors re-elected from the old organization.

The President's report for the year ended June 30, 1899, shows gross earnings of $6,873,275, operating expenses of $5,015,547, and net earnings of $1,857,727. A surplus of $80,953 remained after paying taxes, assessments, rentals, and interest on bonds.

Wallkill Valley Railroad Sold.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Dec. 22.—The New Paltz and Wallkill Valley Electric Railroad was sold at auction yesterday under foreclosure of the mortgage securing bonds issued for the construction of the line. For several months past the company has been in the hands of a receiver, and this sale was for the purpose of reorganization. The property was purchased by a committee from Philadelphia, representing the bondholders, for the nominal sum of $32,000. A new company will be formed and the operation of the road continued.

Texas Railroad Chartered.

AUSTIN, Texas, Dec. 22.—The charter of the Union Central Railroad has been approved by the Attorney General for filing with the Secretary of State. This road is capitalized for $600,000. It will be constructed from Houston, Texas, to a point on the Red River near Paris, Texas, and will have spurs to Waco and to Palestine, Texas. The entire mileage will be 560.

Fire Chief Croker Faces Examiner.

Fire Chief Croker yesterday took the civil service examination for promotion to the grade of Chief of Department in the Fire Department, which he now occupies. The examination, which was made by Chief Examiner Ireland, lasted for three and a half hours. Mr. Croker feels satisfied that he has passed a creditable examination. He was alone in the race, the Deputy Chiefs who had been notified having declined to enter the examination.

Mazet Counsel's Report Ready.

Frank Moss, counsel to the Mazet investigating committee, said yesterday that the report drafted by him would be sent to the members to-day, so that they could devote the Christmas interruption from business to reading it. A meeting of the committee will be held next Thursday at the office of Chairman Mazet.

RIGHTS OF MAIL WAGONS

Driver Knew and Asserted Them and Spoiled a Picture.

BOUND TO PASS THE CAMERA

An exceedingly hard-headed mail wagon driver yesterday succeeded in asserting his importance. He demonstrated the fact that a mail wagon cannot be stopped in its career even by a policeman. In doing so he interfered with the taking of a projectoscope picture of the children of Public School No. 18, in West Fifty-first Street, showing how they would leave the building in case of fire, undid the results of weeks of thought and preparation by the school authorities, and had 2,000 children march around the block for nothing.

For several weeks past Associate Superintendent A. F. Shauffler, who has charge of the local school exhibit for the Paris Exposition, has been looking about for schools where the light was just right for the taking of projectoscope pictures of the children at their school duties. School No. 18 was chosen to show how 2,000 children at the alarm of fire could be taken from a four-story school building in less than 120 seconds. The school building is on the north side of Fifty-first Street, between Lexington and Park Avenues.

The time chosen for the taking of the pictures was 10 o'clock yesterday morning. Shortly before that hour the projectoscope man put his machine in position and sighted it at the school building. A squad of policemen reported and stationed themselves on the corners at each end of the school block. Associate Superintendent Schauffler soon appeared in the street and all traffic was stopped. Everybody in the neighborhood knew what was going on and watched with interest at a respectful distance to see the pretty sight of moving children that was to be reproduced for parents of the whole world to look upon. The policemen had groups of wagons and trucks corralled at the corners for the short wait.

Precisely at 10 o'clock the bells all over the school building were rung four times, this being the emergency call to clear the building. A second later the camera man set his machine to buzzing, the school doors were thrown open, and children began pouring out into the street in regular ranks. The girls, four abreast, stepped briskly along the sidewalk toward Lexington Avenue, and the boys, six abreast, trudged along in parallel lines on the street. The teachers walked beside their classes. Everything was working as planned, the camera was making film negatives at the rate of over 25 a second, and a splendid picture was being taken.

Just here was where the uniformed Government servant came in. He was jogging along westward on West Fifty-first Street in a one-horse mail wagon painted red. He wore fierce-looking whiskers, and acted as if his whole nature had been soured by having mail bags and other Post Office missiles chucked at him. He caught sight of the little knot of trucks held back by policemen at Lexington Avenue, bristled up at once, and took on an air of tremendous importance. He even urged his old plug into a trot. Policemen are not allowed to stop mail wagons. Here was a chance to acquaint the universe with the fact.

At the corner of Lexington Avenue the policeman asked him to stop for one minute, the time yet to elapse, so that he would not drive in between the camera and the moving children. He only swelled up and threw out his chest with terrific importance, and kept right on. He had rights and he knew them. There wasn't any bluecoat going to stop him. He said he was going right through to Park Avenue. The policeman asked him to drive down Lexington Avenue and through Fifty-second Street, as the bridge across Park Avenue is between Fifty-first and Fifty-second Streets. He said he wouldn't by a long shot. He wouldn't even say why he wouldn't. There was nothing for it but to let him pass. To make matters worse, he drove slowly in front of the buzzing camera and consumed eight seconds getting past, and as a result about 250 pictures of red paint, whiskers, and broken-down horseflesh broke into the strip of 3,000 exposures of bright-faced school children. The film was ruined.

PLANNED A WINTER IN JAIL.

O'Brien Instead Goes to Sing Sing for Three Years and a Half.

When Dennis O'Brien, a homeless Manhattanite, decided to break the law and a plate-glass window in Brooklyn at the same time, in order to get into jail for the Winter, he calculated without the generous spirit which moves the Kings County Court in such cases. O'Brien deliberately smashed a big window in a store on South Eighth Street about two weeks ago. Yesterday he was arraigned before Justice Aspinall, who had been acquainted with the prisoner's purpose in breaking the window.

"I don't mind going to jail for the Winter," said O'Brien to the Court, frankly.

"Well, I guess we'll accommodate you," said the Judge. "Do you waive your right of two days' time before you are sentenced?"

"Sure," replied the prisoner, eagerly. "Get it over with as quickly as you can."

"Is there anything you want to say?"

"Nothin'; only I don't want to go up for more'n a year."

"Is that so?" returned the Court. "Well, you'll go to Sing Sing for three years and six months."

"Gee, but dis certainly is too much of a good thing," gasped the astonished O'Brien as he was led away.

CRUSHED ON ELEVATED CAR.

Ulaterar's Haste in Boarding Train May Be Fatal to Him.

In an effort to board an elevated train south-bound from One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street and Third Avenue early yesterday morning, George Ulaterar, a young man, living at 1,406 Webster Avenue, was seriously injured. He is now at the Fordham Hospital in a critical condition.

The train was pulling out just as Ulaterar dropped his ticket in the box, and the guard had closed the gates. It was an express train, and the young man was so eager to catch it that he hopped on the platform outside of the gate of the rear car and held on. The train gained headway rapidly, and the guard did not know whether to let the young man in or keep the gate closed according to orders. While he hesitated the young man was caught between the car and a house built on the south end of the station platform and was rolled around and around. He cried out in agony, and the train was stopped. Several women fainted as the guard opened the gate, and the young man, bleeding and badly crushed and his clothes torn, fell unconscious upon the platform. The train was backed to the station and an ambulance called.

Must Give Records of Patients.

Commissioner of Charities John W. Keller yesterday issued an order to all charitable institutions in the city, especially to Bellevue Hospital, by which doctors are required to give all desired information regarding patients to clergymen. The order was issued after a conference in the Commissioner's office between the doctors of the Bellevue staff and several priests from the Carmelite Church, in East Twenty-eighth Street, which has a chapel at Bellevue.

Appellate Division to Move.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court held yesterday the last regular session of the December term, and the last session which will take place at 111 Fifth Avenue, where the court has been meeting during the four years of its existence. Next month it will convene in its new Court House, at Twenty-fifth Street and Madison Avenue.

Demorest's Magazine Absorbed.

The contract was signed yesterday transferring all copyrights, title, and subscription lists of Demorest's Magazine to Robert Bonner's Sons. Demorest's Magazine will be discontinued and the Fashion and Pattern Departments, Half-Minute Talks and World's Progress will be continued in The Ledger Monthly. All unexpired subscriptions of Demorest's Magazine will be filled with the Ledger Monthly.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

That there are different ways of looking at things was evidenced at the Grand Hotel yesterday, where a couple of army officers were having a late breakfast. "I see Brown has been transferred to the —th Infantry," remarked one of them, as he looked up from his morning paper.

"So! Well, it ought to be a good thing for him."

"Hardly, for the poor fellow won't have a chance to see any fighting. I heard in Washington that the regiment was to be assigned to garrison duty."

"That is too d— bad. Brown doesn't seem to have any sort of luck; and he is a capital officer, as well as a mighty good fellow, and brave as they make 'em."

Fencing has taken a firmer hold than ever as a means of developing grace among women. It has long been of the regular routine of life with the best class of actresses for that very purpose, and had found favor among some society women, who in the beginning took to it as a sort of "fad" that was worth cultivating and talking about. "There are a number of ladies who are really very smart with the foils," said a woman who devotes herself to the instruction of other women in athletics. "They have found that it is not only a most healthful exercise, but that it assures a graceful carriage that no other exercise develops, and tends to correct some of the faults that golf has brought to the fore. I have one class of eighteen girls, another of seven, besides several private pupils among young matrons, and have found in talking with other teachers that they, too, have about all they can do in teaching the rudiments of the sport. We are none of us experts, perhaps, from the Fencing Club standard, but we do manage to give to the young ladies that primary instruction that, if carried on later under the experts, will make the next generation one that will be adepts with the foils. There is this about it, that once a woman takes an interest in the sport she will keep at it, as it has an almost irresistible fascination. It is a good thing, too, for there is no doubt that a woman who indulges in fencing is physically better than if she took her exercise in almost any other way."

Nothing is more annoying to the man of methodical habits than to go to his favorite seat in his favorite restaurant and find that his favorite waiter, who knows all his peculiar tastes and wishes as to service, has disappeared. One such man drifted in to breakfast yesterday, only to find that a new waiter was installed at his table. Of course, he was annoyed, and naturally he had to make a growl to the head waiter. That official, who had been on the sick list, had but recently returned to his work, so that when the man who would eat, but who wished particularly to air his grievance, started in with, "And how are things going with you, Johnson?" the waiter naturally thought the customer was referring to the state of his health, and drawled out:

"Thank you kindly, Mr. Smith, but I really can't complain Sir."

"I'm very glad to find some one about here who is in that very enviable frame of mind."

And then, before the customer with the growl on the tip of his tongue had a chance to make his complaint, the head waiter took the wind completely out of his sails by remarking:

"It really don't do much good to complain, do it, now, Sir?"

Was there ever anything more aggravating than such a remark under such circumstances? The man with the complaint about the absence of his personal waiter was stumped. Whatever was there for him to do, with such a situation confronting him, but to order his breakfast and suppress his growl for some future time, and possibly for some other place?

Apple lovers very generally agree that the very best apple that was ever grown is the Rhode Island Greening. There is none other quite so mealy and rich as the Greening, that was first produced in a little Rhode Island town called North Foster. Down town, in the fruit district, one of the traveling men brought the news that the original tree, from which thousands of slips have been taken and grafted on other apple trees all over the world, is in the final stages of decay. This tree, which is on the Drowne Farm, is known to have been in bearing for more than 100 years, and there is a tradition that it is nearly 200 years old. There are in the same orchard a number of healthy trees, all grown from slips from this parent tree, with a record of over fifty years' bearing to their credit and all producers of that same delicious fruit that was first found in a perfect state on this old tree that is now practically dead. Some of the fruit men are quite sentimental over that old tree, and want to secure bits of the wood as souvenirs of the tree that they think has done more for their trade than any other in the world. So much of the trunk and branches as are not too rotten are to be cut up for mementos of this sort, for there is a lot of sentiment about this tree in Rhode Island, where every fruit grower knows its history.

Two new sorts of nuts that have found a market with the fashionable fruiterers for the holidays are the cream nuts that come from Brazil, a rough-looking article before the outer shell is stripped, but most tasty when the kernel is reached. As it is said to be grown only on Government lands, it is as costly as it is tasty. The other is the pinone that comes from Mexico, and is the fruit of a Southern pine tree. It looks something like a beech nut, but has to be roasted before it is eaten. There is a faint pitchy taste, combined with something of the flavor of the roasted peanut, and the small kernels become quite a favorite with such as do not object to the pine flavor. The quantity of either in the market is small and the price of both is high, but rich Brazilians and Mexicans in the city are ready buyers whenever they find the nuts exposed for sale.

One class of caterers who have reaped a golden harvest during the past two weeks, when so many strangers have been in town, are the proprietors of the table d'hôte establishments that according to New York correspondents of out-of-town papers have a distinctly Bohemian flavor. The South Fifth Avenue and west side places where prices are low, the wine insipid, and the bill of fare mysterious, have been overrun, and their proprietors viewed with a sigh the exodus yesterday of the last of the Christmas shoppers who have considered it absolutely necessary to visit these places, in order to see all the sights of New York. Scores of men have unconsciously posed before these casual visitors as famous actors, artists, dramatists, authors, and poets, particularly when the strangers have been piloted by some practical joker, and the visitors have left town with a poor opinion of the table manners of some of the famous men whose names have thus been bandied about. Perhaps the whole thing has been a poor sort of joke, but it has added greatly to the simple pleasures of the strangers within our gates, who will never cease to talk of the glimpses of Bohemia they will always suppose they have had. Probably no harm has been done. Incidentally, it has been of very material benefit to the caterers, whose places have been unusually crowded. That desire for "a glimpse of Bohemia" that, of course, does not exist, is one that seems to possess uncontrollably every casual visitor to New York, and hotel people have to see that it is gratified.

As beneficiaries of the "wave of prosperity" and of the rise in the price of old metals, the junk dealers come to the front. Not since the closing years of the civil war have they thrived as they are thriving now. So sharp is the demand for scrap metal of all kinds that the price has reached figures such as the scrap dealers had no reason to expect. Every part of the city has been raked and scraped by them, and the many robberies of vacant houses is in part due to the high price that may be had for copper, lead, brass, and iron. Petty thieves are willing to run all sorts of risks for the sake of getting junk, and some dealers are not specially inquisitive when a good lot of junk is brought to them for sale. For several months past the larger dealers in town have had men skirmishing about in the smaller towns on Long Island, in New Jersey, and even as far away as Connecticut, buying up all the junk they could find, and they say that it is now very hard indeed for them to discover a new source of supply. The Hudson River towns were canvassed early in the Summer, and the West Street men say that not a vessel of any kind has been in port recently but has been stripped of every ounce of waste metal that could be found aboard of her. So thoroughly has the city been stripped of its old metals that the garbage gatherers at the city dumps find none in the refuse that comes to them, and thus one considerable source of profit to them has been taken away.

English papers announce that Latham, the champion court tennis player of the world and an expert at racquets as well, will make a visit to this country early in the coming year, and will assist at the opening of the new courts at Tuxedo. He will also be seen in games at the clubhouses of the Racquet and Tennis Club in this city, the Boston Athletic Association, and the Chicago Athletic Association. A member of the first-named club is authority for the statement that Latham and George Standing will be contestants in a privately played tournament, to be given by George Gould at his newly built courts in his mansion at Lakewood. A house party to witness the games at Georgian Court is in contemplation.

AIMS AT STATE PILOT SYSTEM.

Bill to Transfer License Granting Power Discussed.

Capt. James Keyes, formerly pilot on the United States revenue cutter Grant, and a committee from the United States Licensed Masters' and Pilots' Association, of which he is Secretary, held a conference yesterday afternoon with Congressman William D. Daly of Hoboken, in regard to a bill that Mr. Daly is to introduce in the House of Representatives abolishing the present system of State pilots, and giving the power to license pilots to the United States Steam Vessel Inspectors' Office. Under the provisions of the bill American masters of vessels entering or leaving American ports will be allowed to navigate their vessels in and out of port unaided. Any master who can pass the examination before the United States local steam vessel inspectors may act as a pilot for any vessel in all United States ports. Masters of foreign vessels who do not hold United States licenses, however, would have to hire pilots, as they do under the present State laws. If the bill becomes a law, say the promoters of the movement, hundreds of thousands of dollars will be annually saved to American shipowners.

This movement was started by the United States Licensed Masters' and Pilots' Association, which is an outgrowth of the American Association of Masters and Pilots of Steam Vessels. Capt. Keyes yesterday said:

"We have about 300 members in the new association, and we hold United States licenses as masters and pilots of steam vessels, and many of us hold licenses as first-class steamboat engineers as well. And yet under the State law we cannot get a license to bring in and take out past Sandy Hook vessels unless we get licenses from the Pilot Commissioners, which require a certain number of years' service on small sailing vessels. That business is at present in the hands of about 125 pilots, who have formed a close corporation, and of whom about 25 to 35 per cent. are pensioned off."

At the office of the Pilot Commissioners of the Sandy Hook Pilots' Benevolent Association, which is at 17 State Street, the Secretary said that the Commissioners and the association would both oppose the bill, and he did not think it would pass.

LEGAL NOTES.

MOTHER AND SISTER DISINHERITED.—Benjamin F. Miller, twenty-six years old, by his will, made on Nov. 30, 1892, a few days after the death of his wife, gave all his estate, both real and personal, to his daughter, Lucy Schallehn Miller, "to her and her heirs and assigns, forever." The testator made provision for the child's guardianship and custody, committed the care and improvement of her estate, with power of sale, to the executors during her minority, or until she married, and in a separate clause provided: "Upon condition, however, that in case of the death of my said daughter prior to her attaining the age of twenty-one years, or without issue her surviving, then and in that case I devise and bequeath the whole of the residue of my said estate in the hands of my said executors, to Anna Darrow, wife of Warren F. Darrow, and to their daughter, Edith Darrow, share and share alike, or in case of the prior death of either of them, the whole thereof to the survivor of them, to them, their heirs and assigns forever." The testator's daughter died when about six months old, and before the testator, who, after her death, executed a codicil, in which, after reciting the making and publication of his previous will, he simply gave directions as to his interment. The Surrogate of Saratoga County sustained the contention of the testator's mother, sister, and half sister, that it was decedent's intention to make the gift over to the Darrows only in the event that his daughter should survive him. A reversal of this decision by the Third Appellate Division has now been unanimously affirmed by the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Judge Gray. The court holds that the gift over to the Darrows, upon the condition named, was as clear and unambiguous as was the primary gift to the daughter; that as a ratification of his will, the execution of the codicil by the testator, after his daughter's death, could only point to his understanding that the Darrows were then the devisees and legatees of his estate; and hence that, the primary gift having been defeated, all of the estate which remained after the payment of the testator's debts and administration expenses, went by the gift of the residue in the conditional clause, to the Darrows.

WILL DISCRIMINATION BETWEEN CHILDREN.—Mrs. Orra Potter, who was nearly eighty-nine years old when she made her will, and had seven children, gave her residuary estate to her son, Seaman G., and her daughter, Caroline M., with whom she resided, leaving nothing to three daughters and one son. On a contest by these four children, on the ground of mental incapacity and of undue influence on the part of the two children with whom the testatrix resided, or was brought into immediate and constant contact; and to support this charge by these two children, presumably hostile witnesses, conversations between them and the deceased prior to the execution of the will, tending to show improper influence on their part, was sought to be proved. The exclusion by the Surrogate of questions addressed to these witnesses, on the part of the contestants, seeking to draw out the substance of these conversations, was held by the Third Appellate Division to have been proper, but the Court of Appeals has directed the reversal of a decree admitting the will to probate, holding that these witnesses were competent to testify to conversations with the testator, where the entire conversations tended to show undue influence or mental incapacity. The will, being wholly in favor of those children of the testatrix with whom she resided, it was held the greatest latitude should be allowed the contestants when using the beneficiaries as witnesses.

POISON CASE A YEAR OLD

Anniversary of the Mailing of the Package to Cornish.

MOLINEUX'S DARK CHRISTMAS

Prisoner and His Father Affected by a Holiday Greeting—Expert Tolman on the Stand.

Just one year ago to-day some person dropped into the General Post Office in this city a package addressed to Harry Cornish at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, Madison Avenue and Forty-fifth Street. The package contained a bottle of bromo-seltzer mixed with cyanide of mercury, the bottle being inclosed in a silver holder. Several days later Cornish took this supposed Christmas present home. He was boarding at that time with Mrs. Katherine J. Adams, at 61 West Eighty-sixth Street, and to her he gave part of the contents of the supposed bromo-seltzer bottle. A few minutes later she was dead, and out of this combination of circumstances has grown one of the most famous criminal trials of modern times, in which Roland B. Molineux is on trial for his life.

The sixth week of the trial of Molineux closed yesterday, and the taking of evidence will be resumed on Tuesday. The young clubman accused of murder will spend his Christmas in the Tombs. Contrary to usual custom, the part of the Court of General Sessions presided over by Recorder Goff will not close during the holiday week, but the jurors who are to determine the fate of the young man will spend the holidays with their several families. In closing the session yesterday, and after renewing his expressions of confidence in the jurors, Recorder Goff wished them all a merry Christmas.

For the first time since his trial began, Molineux's face fell when he heard that familiar greeting. He looked straight at the white-haired Judge, who did not observe his gaze, and then with something in his eyes suspiciously like moisture, he turned to his old father, who has sat by him at all times, and silently grasped his hand. Gen. Molineux was much affected, but he struggled with his emotions, as did his son. Both Mr. Weeks and Mr. Battle patted their client on the back, but what words they said to him were inaudible. They made Molineux's face brighten however, and a moment later he was walking through the court room, the cynosure of hundreds of inquisitive eyes, and over the Bridge of Sighs to his Christmas in the Tombs.

THIRD EXPERT ON THE STAND.

The session yesterday, which ran right on until 2 o'clock without intermission, was entirely taken up with expert testimony, except for a few minutes when the cashier of a bank was on the stand, called by Mr. Osborne, in order to get in evidence a standard of Harry Cornish's handwriting. To do this it was necessary also to make a witness of Assistant District Attorney O'Conhor, and the evidence was not allowed without a long and vigorous objection on the part of Mr. Weeks.

Henry L. Tolman of Chicago, the third of the prosecution's force of handwriting experts, was put on the stand at the opening of the session to give his reasons for believing that Molineux wrote the address on the poison package. He had already testified to that opinion before the Coroner's jury ten months ago, and his testimony yesterday showed that he had strengthened his opinion from comparisons between the admitted and the disputed writings made by him since that time. Mr. Tolman, while agreeing in the main with Experts Kinsley and Tyrrell, arrived at his conclusion through different channels. Kinsley talked of speed, spacing, style, and pen habits. Tyrrell made illustrations of wrist movements and pendulum swings, while Mr. Tolman confined himself to triangular effect, pictorial effect, nervous energy, impulse, and mental conception. Gradually the writings in evidence are becoming more and more involved in technical explanations, but the jurors follow the reasoning of the experts closely, and their understanding of the subjects under discussion is best evidenced by the frequent questions put to the witnesses by them.

The sensation caused by the remark of Foreman Martin at the close of the session on Thursday, when he said he could not see, as a layman, the methods of disguise used in the various Barnet and Cornish letters, had not subsided when court opened yesterday. It was expected that the Court would take some official cognizance of Mr. Martin's observation, but nothing was said about it, even at the close of the day, when the Recorder gave the jury the usual warning not to talk or form or express opinions. Neither the District Attorney nor the counsel for the defense would talk about the matter, and Recorder Goff was inaccessible. Mr. Martin continued his questioning yesterday, but he made no more expressions of opinion.

CORNISH WRITES IN COURT.

In the midst of Mr. Tolman's examination, Mr. Osborne made a request of the Court to be allowed to put another of his "five-minute witnesses" on the stand. Mr. Weeks objected and was overruled, and then Charles E. Warren, paying teller of the Lincoln National Bank, was sworn. He said he knew Cornish, identified him when he stood up in court, and said he had been a depositor in the bank. He also said he would know Cornish's signature. Mr. Weeks's objections having been overruled, the witness proceeded to identify a signature of Cornish that Mr. Osborne up to this point had tried vainly to get in evidence.

In answer to Mr. Weeks's objections, Mr. Osborne said that, according to Justice Williams's decision, the State could prove motive if it showed that Molineux had forged the signature of Cornish. To prove this, Mr. Osborne said, he would first have to show that Cornish did not write the requests for remedies signed with his name, and then prove that Molineux did. Mr. Osborne then asked Mr. Cornish to come to the table and write his name. The witness watched him, and then identified the writing as the genuine signature of Cornish. The writings were then allowed in evidence as standards of comparison.

Mr. Osborne next asked Cornish to write a copy of the letter sent to Frederick Stearns & Co. concerning Harpster. Recorder Goff said he would not waste the time of the court in this way, and Cornish and Assistant District Attorney O'Conor hastily left the room together. Mr. Osborne then handed the three alleged bogus Cornish letters to Mr. Warren and asked him if they were in the handwriting of Cornish.

"They are not," said the witness.

"Are you sure?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"I am so sure that I would not honor a check of Cornish's with that signature on it," was the reply.

The witness then examined the Barnet letters and the Cornish letters to patent medicine firms, and was asked to give his opinion about them. He said that he was sure that Cornish had not written them, and that they were all written by the same person. All of this testimony was given under vigorous objection by Mr. Weeks, who spoke of the proceedings as "unprecedented."

WEEKS CALLS IT A "TRICK."

Just as Mr. Warren left the stand Mr. O'Connor came back with Cornish. He was at once put on the stand, and Mr. Osborne handed him a sheet of paper which O'Connor had previously given to his chief when he came back into court.

"What is this paper?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"A writing made by Mr. Cornish in my presence a few minutes ago," said Mr. O'Connor.

"Did you see him write it?"

"I did."

Mr. O'Connor then went on to say that it was a copy of the Harpster letter, and that Cornish had written it with a stub pen. Mr. Weeks referred to this "trick" of the Assistant District Attorney's as outrageous, but the Court ruled against him, and the copy made by Cornish went in evidence.

When Mr. Tolman was called to the stand he said, in answer to questions put to him affecting his qualifications, that he had been engaged in the business of giving expert opinion on disputed handwriting for twenty years, and that he had testified in between 700 and 800 cases, besides doing a great deal of work in Government forgery cases. He said he had been at one time Professor of Medical Jurisprudence in the University of Vermont. Mr. Weeks made no objection to him as a witness.

Mr. Tolman was asked to tell the circumstances under which he came to New York. He said he received a telegram from the District Attorney's office, saying that his presence was desired in an important case. When he received specimens to work on he made a study of them entirely alone and unaided by any suggestions, not even knowing, he said, whom the prosecution suspected to be the writer of the poison package address and the Barnet and Cornish letters. He later discovered the famous Barnet letter, now one of the admitted specimens of the defendant's handwriting. The witness said that he had studied from time to time since he was first called into the case all the exhibits.

STRONG MUSCLES; WEAK WILL.

When asked by Mr. Osborne to tell the jury in his own way the characteristics found by him in the disputed writings, the witness told of a striking resemblance in pictorial effect between the writing in the Barnet and Cornish letters and that in the admitted writings. He first looked for the peculiarities in these admitted writings, and found them to be strong as to muscles, but weak as to will power. They showed a superfluity of muscular energy, he said, this coming out in large capital stems and superfluous florishing. He picked out certain words in which this characteristic was most pronounced, and gave verbal demonstrations. The writings, he said, had separate impulses of energy, shown by the ever present triangular form of the words. They showed a lack of power to sustain the impulse, and consequently the initial letter of a word was large and strongly emphasized, the emphasis growing weaker on each letter as formed, and almost entirely dying out in the last letter of the word.

Expert Tolman illustrated this by several words, among which was the word "Cornish." He said that in the word "kind" there was a large "k," a moderately large "i," a small "n" followed by a large "d," showing that the impulse of energy was of short duration, and required renewal before the final "d" could be formed. "You" began with a large "y," followed by a medium "o," and ended with a small "u."

A complete study of the subject, he said, would necessitate a study of the defendant's writing when it was not altogether normal. He chose the letter of resignation from the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, when the writer formed his words with more deliberation than usual. This writing indicated, the witness said, that the writer was able to control the impulse of energy to a certain degree. He referred to this writing as formal and unusual, and said the triangular effect and graduating energy impulses were less marked than usual. He showed the action of the impulses in the words "resignation" and "Knickerbocker." They showed the impulses in a more marked degree, he said, because of being of considerable length.

Mr. Tolman said that a most striking illustration of the fading muscular impulses was to be found in the writings of the defendant's own name. There was a large capital "M," a large "o," and then smaller letters running out to an almost unintelligible "ux."

BREAKS AND SLANT EXAMINED.

The witness here passed to the question of breaks in the writing, and said that probably the most striking characteristic was the invariable breaking between the "i" and the preceding letter when it was of an oval character. This was demonstrated on the board by means of crayon, the word chosen being the characteristic "oblige" that both Experts Kinsley and Tyrrell brought out.

Mr. Tolman was interrupted by the introduction of Mr. Warren, and on resuming his evidence said that, from a pictorial standpoint, the question of slant in the writings was of small importance. When it came to a question of detailed examination of the writings, however, it was of great importance. The witness then pointed out that wherever the letter "n" was made, it had a different slant in every instance. He said the letter appeared about 130 times in the writings, and in each instance there was a varying slant.

Expert Tolman here began the familiar and technical analysis of letter formation, based on his examination of the admitted and disputed writings. His explanation was along the same line and of much the same character as that which had been advanced by Experts Kinsley and Tyrrell. He said the writings betrayed signs of unusual nervousness on the part of the writer, strong muscular force, and weak mentality. Continuing, the witness said: "The characteristics in a man's writing that are the ones to be disguised first are the things that are the strongest, and those left the longest you will find to contain the natural peculiarities of the writing."

Mr. Tolman said he had never seen such an excellent collection of specimens of any one's writing to portray the most striking characteristics of the writer. There were, he said, specimens that showed all the different impresses of the writer, giving an accurate idea of his mental conceptions. There were letters on business matters, letters of resignation, letters mentioning athletic and social club matters, letters of invitation, all tending, Mr. Tolman said, to show through the writer's hand his mental impulses. Some betrayed extreme haste, others great nervousness, and yet others calm deliberation.

Mr. Tolman was still on the stand when adjournment was taken.

Dealers in Pauper Dead Sentenced.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Dec. 22.—E. D. and Frank Thompson, who are charged with selling the bodies of pauper dead, and who were recently convicted of conspiracy by a jury and fined $750 each, were to-day sentenced by Judge Cooper to the workhouse for a term of eleven months and twenty-nine days, which is the limit of the law. Frank Thompson was recently arrested in St. Louis, having four dead bodies in his possession, and was brought back to this city for trial. The prisoners gave bond and have appealed the case.

EX-GOV. WALLER ACCUSED

A Conspiracy to Defraud, Joseph W. Pullar's Charge.

HE NAMES ALFRED R. PAGE

Mr. Waller Explains, Denying Allegations that Pullar Was Deprived of Inheritance Under Threats.

Ex-Gov. Thomas M. Waller of Connecticut, well known as interested in trolley railways, and as a practicing attorney at 15 Wall Street, is charged, by Joseph W. Pullar, with having conspired with Alfred R. Page and others to defraud him out of his rights in an inheritance worth almost $100,000, about half of which is in personal property, and the rest improved realty in Chicago. Mr. Pullar has instituted a suit in the Supreme Court, through his attorneys, Benjamin & Loeser, of 320 Broadway, to set aside the contracts by which the property, he alleges, was taken out of his hands. These contracts, he declares, he signed in a room at the Imperial Hotel on the night of Oct. 14, 1897, which he had been induced to enter by the persons whom he names when they knew he was in such a condition from the continued use of alcoholic stimulants as to be unfit to transact business. He also alleges that he signed the papers without reading them, under threats of prosecution on a charge of bigamy.

When the matter was called to Mr. Waller's attention yesterday he expressed annoyance that it should have become public before the case came to trial.

"But there is nothing in the story," he said, "to cause grief to my friends or joy to my enemies." He said that his firm was retained a year or two ago by James T. Farrell, a reputable citizen of Hartford, in a will controversy out of which this story is evolved. He continued:

"Legal proceedings were commenced in the Surrogate's Court in this city to set aside the will in question, which was in favor of Pullar, and proceedings were commenced in the Chicago courts to obtain possession of property in that city belonging to the estate.

"It was claimed in those proceedings that Mrs. Jchanna Pullar, the testatrix, was paralyzed when she executed the will and mentally incompetent at the time to make a will, and it was claimed also that the doctor who attended her obtained a deed of property of the value of $9,000, or $10,000, without due consideration, and that he was made the executor of the will.

"It was also claimed that Pullar, the plaintiff in the present case, at the time of the making of this will was not the legal husband of the testatrix; that he was then a married man and a bigamist, and that the testatrix made the will in his favor under fraudulent influence and believing that she was giving her property to her husband, and it was claimed because of said undue and fraudulent influences that the will should be set aside.

"Actions at the same time were commenced against Dr. Teodor Von Raitz to have the deed to him set aside on the grounds I have indicated.

"While these proceedings were pending, Mr. Alfred R. Page, as the attorney for Pullar, conferred with our firm in relation to a settlement. He desired to have us offer a compromise of one-fourth of the property to Mr. Pullar. This we refused to do, but arranged for a meeting at the Imperial Hotel in the evening.

"We met at the Imperial Hotel, in Mr. Wagner's room, at about 9 o'clock. There were present Mr. Carlton, a lawyer in this office; Mr. Wagner, my partner; Mr. Farrell, our client; Mr. Pullar, and Mr. Page, his lawyer, and myself. We discussed the proposed compromise and I dictated the contract, while Mr. Page, Mr. Pullar's lawyer, wrote the contract out. This contract provided that Mr. Pullar should have one-fourth of all the estate, less the expenses and less such sums as he had received from the executor, and that the balance of the property should go to the heirs, the father, brothers, and sisters of the testatrix. It also provided that Mr. Page, Mr. Pullar's lawyer, should act with Waller & Wagner in suits to recover the real estate from the doctor, and in the settlement of all other proceedings. It was also provided that the whole property should be transferred in trust to Mr. Pullar's lawyer and to myself for the purpose of carrying out the terms of the agreement.

"Mr. Pullar actively participated, and there was not the slightest indication of inebriety about him.

"Some two or three weeks after this meeting the trust deed that the contract contemplated was drawn up by Mr. Page and myself, and Mr. Pullar came to the office of Waller & Wagner in the afternoon, and after careful examination of the papers, he executed them.

"There was considerable delay in the transfer of the property of the estate to the trustees, and during this delay Mr. Pullar complained frequently to his lawyer, and, finally becoming offended, he made complaint against Mr. Page and myself to a firm of reputable lawyers here, who immediately called upon us, and, learning the facts of the case, refused to take any action in regard to it. Subsequently the legal gentlemen who are now in the case commenced action against the trustees and the suit in this action is now pending, which we hope will be tried in a few days."

Mr. Waller showed Pullar's signature to the original papers, which was written in a bold, flourishing hand. "It looks the most sober of them all," he said.

Mr. Loeser said that his firm considered, in spite of Mr. Waller's statement, that there was ample evidence on which to base the suit, which would come to light at the proper time. He said that Pullar is now living at 162 West Ninety-sixth Street, in this city.

BROOKLYN REPUBLICANS ANGRY

Register-Elect Howe Reserves All His Good Appointments for the Williamsburg District.

The Executive Committee of the Kings County Republican General Committee met yesterday afternoon at 200 Joralemon Street to hear the report of Michael J. Dady in regard to the patronage of the Register's office, of which James R. Howe will become the head on Jan. 1. Mr. Howe has reserved thirty of the best places in the office for the Sixth Congressional District, which is in the Williamsburg section. This leaves but twenty-six places for the rest of the organization, and none of these is particularly desirable.

Mr. Dady, as Chairman of the Executive Committee, was instructed recently to confer with Mr. Howe, and try to induce him to make a more equitable division of the places at his disposal. Mr. Dady met Mr. Howe early yesterday afternoon, but the result of the conference was anything but satisfying to Mr. Dady. When the members of the Executive Committee got together several hours later, Mr. Dady had little in the way of encouragement to offer them, and expressions of disgust and disappointment were many and loud. The leaders, with the exception of those from the Eastern District, showed that they were exceedingly wroth, and there was a great deal of talk of getting even with Mr. Howe.

Mr. Howe, so far as could be learned, yielded but one point to Mr. Dady, and that was that Jesse D. Frost of the Twenty-first Ward, should have a good place. Mr. Howe, it is said, agreed that Mr. Frost should become First Assistant Deputy Register, at a salary of $2,000. This concession, it is asserted, was obtained only upon the threat of removing a certain man holding a place in the office of the Commissioner of Records, and giving the place to Mr. Frost.

Official Vote of Kings County.

The Board of Canvassers of Kings County held its final meeting yesterday and officially declared the election of the successful candidates in the last campaign. The official figures, soldier vote included, show that James R. Howe, the Republican candidate for Register, was elected by 311 votes. The highest vote received by any candidate was that of John F. Clarke, the Democratic candidate for District Attorney, for whom 85,597 votes were cast.

REPUBLICANS ARE HOPEFUL.

Assert that Favorable Reports of the Outlook Are Coming In.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The Committee on Organization and Literature, appointed immediately after the meeting of the Republican National Committee, has begun correspondence at once, and already reports the receipt of letters from different parts of the country setting forth the temper and condition of the party. The reports are said to be uniformly satisfactory.

This is said to be in strong contrast with the information at the close of 1895, when the country was full of Republicans filled with solicitude lest the party should make some fatal declaration for sound money that would offend the Republicans who were impressed with the idea that free coinage was an issue to be harmed about. Then the request was common to have no literature sent out that referred to the money question.

Now the demand is for the strongest sort of gold standard literature. The attitude of the National Committee and the party meets with unanimous approval. Such suggestions as have been made touching the management of the campaign reflect a tendency to repeat the conduct of four years ago.

MARTIN ENGEL STILL LEADER.

Tammany Politician Not Permitted to Retire in the Eighth.

Despite his oft-repeated threats to retire from the Tammany leadership in the Eighth Assembly District, Councilman Martin Engel was again chosen as the standard bearer of the organization last night. More than 200 members of the District Committee were present at the meeting, and Mr. Engel's speech of acceptance was received with vigorous applause.

The ticket for officers, as reported by the Committee on Nominations, was elected with a rush and then Mr. Engel told his friends that it was only in deference to the oft-expressed wishes of the majority that he had consented to become the leader again.

"I've been your leader for a long time and have worked hard for the organization," said Mr. Engel. "I felt that I was entitled to a rest and that I could have some one else do the work. I seem to be in the minority, however, so I will accept the leadership with many thanks for the fidelity with which you have followed me in the past and hopes that our pleasant relations will continue in the future."

Philip B. Benjamin was re-elected as Chairman of the committee.

AMERICAN POLITICS ABROAD.

Matter of Republican Vice Presidential Candidate Arouses Interest.

PARIS, Dec. 22.—Very keen interest is manifested in the American colony in Paris as to the next Republican candidate for the Vice Presidency, President McKinley's renomination being regarded as assured. Visitors arriving from other Continental capithis report that this topic is discussed elsewhere as well, and that the name of almost every American Ambassador in Europe is mentioned as a possibility.

Changes in American representation at European Embassies, Legations, and Consulates under the next Administration are already the subject of considerable speculation.

County Canvassers' Work Done.

The County Canvassers met yesterday and declared the result of the vote in New York County at the last election. The results are not changed from the official figures except that the soldier vote is added. Alderman Goodman (Rep.) offered a resolution declaring Samuel S. Slater, the Republican candidate for Assembly in the Thirty-first District, elected. No attention was paid to the resolution, and as a result the returns show the election of Edward Stone, (Tam.,) who has since died.

Judges Appointed in Maine.

AUGUSTA, Me., Dec. 22.—Gov. Powers to-day appointed Judge Andrew P. Wisswell of Ellsworth to succeed Chief Justice John A. Peters, resigned. Frederick L. Powers of Houlton was appointed as Associate Judge, to succeed Judge Wisswell.

VIENNA CHESS TOURNAMENT.

Brody and Schlechter Are Now Tied for First Place.

VIENNA, Dec. 22.—The fourth round of the Kolisch memorial tournament, which was played in this city to-day, resulted as follows: Alapin and Brody and Zinkl and Schlechter drew, Albin beat Prock, Wolf beat Popiel, and Schwarz beat Marco. The Korte-Maroczy game was adjourned in a position favorable to Maroczy.

Yesterday the games left unfinished from previous rounds were played to a finish. These are the results: Prock lost to Schwarz, Popiel disposed of Alapin, Albin went down before Schlechter, Maroczy defeated Marco, Prock went down before Alapin, while Maroczy and Schwarz drew.

The score up to date follows:

Players.	Won.	Lost.	Players.	Won.	Lost.
Alapin	2	2	Popiel	2	2
Albin	2½	1½	Prock	0	4
Brody	3	1	Schlechter	3	1
Korte	1	2	Schwarz	2½	1½
Marco	1	3	Wolf	2	2
Maroczy	2	1	Zinkl	2	2

The fifth round will be played in the following order to-morrow: Popiel vs. Zinkl; Prock vs. Wolf; Brody vs. Albin; Maroczy vs. Alapin; Schwarz vs. Korte, and Shlechter vs. Marco.

McGOVERN WINS THE FIGHT.

Bantamweight Champion Knocked Out Forbes in Second Round.

Terry McGovern, champion bantamweight of the world, defeated Harry Forbes of Chicago last night at the Broadway Athletic Club in the second round of what was to have been a twenty-five-round bout. Forbes, who is credited with giving McGovern the hottest fight of his life fourteen months ago, at the Greenwood Athletic Club, in Brooklyn, laid himself open to a right swing from the Brooklynite which "put him to sleep." The fight was similar in many respects to McGovern's fight with "Pedlar" Palmer at Tuckahoe last Summer.

The preliminary bout was between Tommy Holton and Jack Smith, both of New York, for twelve rounds, at 128 pounds. Smith, although floored repeatedly, did most of the forcing, and got the decision.

Before the star bout the featherweight champion, George Dixon, was introduced with the announcement that he would meet McGovern on Jan. 9.

Early in the fight last night McGovern chased Forbes into clinches in the corners, using his right with telling effect on the breakaways. McGovern began the second round with a rush, but Forbes blocked him coolly. McGovern ran in again with a right and left swing, and knocked his opponent to the floor. Forbes took the count, resting on one knee, and then made a wild rush for McGovern. His wild swings were easily blocked by the Brooklynite, who landed heavily with both hands at close quarters. The men clinched and wrestled about the ring. Forbes rushed his opponent against one of the posts and then got the blow on the jaw that sent him to the floor unconscious.

Referee White was counting him out when his seconds carried him to his corner.

STRICKEN BLIND AT MIDDAY.

The Sudden Affliction That Befell a Chicago Lad.

From The Chicago Chronicle.

To see the shining of the sunlight, to look in the faces of one's friends—then to plunge into an abyss of darkness where no ray fell, to be converted from sturdy manhood to the trembling helplessness of the groping blind—that was the lot which befell Joseph Burke, who has been stricken blind in a twinkling by causes which skilled specialists find baffling of definition.

Last Thursday he went about his usual vocation as keen a sighted man as was ever bred in the environment of Newsboys' Alley. The stroke fell upon him at midday.

He was conversing cheerfully with a number of his associates in the mailing-room of the Chronicle, where he was employed, when, suddenly, in the act of lighting a cigarette, he drew his hand across his forehead in a dazed manner, let fall the half-burned match, and cried out, in a wondering voice: "Say, boys, I guess my eyes has gone out. See?"

But poor "Red" couldn't see. Nor has he since. At the infirmary his case aroused extraordinary interest because of its uniqueness.

"Red" Burke was a typical child of the "alley." Before he was out of knickerbockers he sold papers. He grew from an active, hustling, sharp-witted boy into a keen, energetic, rustling young man. Many persons knew him. All liked him. He had faults—lots of them—but they were forgivable, and he took care of his old mother.

Cricket Team Gets Pennant and Cup.

The presentation of the pennant and cup to the champion cricket team of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club took place last night at a concert given by the Metropolitan District Cricket League. The batting prize was presented to M. R. Cobb of Team A, Knickerbocker Athletic Club, and J. E. Roberts of the New York Cricket Club received the bowling prize.

IN THE BOWLING ALLEYS.

Dumahaut of the Harlem Wheelmen bowled in excellent form in the Harlem League series at the Harlem Palace last night. His score of 248, on eight strikes and two spares, in the third game, brought victory to his team. He made an average of 215 for two games. The Harlem Wheelmen easily defeated the Corinthians, and the latter won from the Grove Hills, which lost two games. Scores:

FIRST GAME.

Harlem Wheelmen—Dumahaut, 183; Lee, 166; Thompson, 184; Du Barry, 176; Duss, 153. Total, 862.

Three interesting games were decided in the National League at Starr's Tournament Hall last night. The first game resulted in a victory for the Imperials over the Orientals. Riverdale won from Oriental in the second game with only seven pins to spare. The third game, between the Riverdales and Imperials, proved the best of the night. The teams were almost on even terms throughout. The Imperials had a slight advantage when the final frame began, but two breaks enabled the Riverdales to win by two pins. Scores:

FIRST GAME.

Imperial—Cordes, 180; Meyer, 177; Moore, 180; Rothemell, 147; Jackson, 146. Total, 830.

INTERCOLLEGIATE GOLF PLANS.

Next Championship Tourney in May, 1901—English Scoring Adopted.

Half a dozen college golfers on whose shoulders rested the responsibility of the Intercollegiate Golf Association, met yesterday afternoon at the Holland House to discuss plans for the future management of its championship contests. Some dissatisfaction having arisen over the plan, tried this year for the first time, of holding the big meet in the Fall, that arrangement was changed and by a unanimous vote the championship tournament of the collegians will return to the Spring of the year.

It was voted, however, that no contest should be held next Spring, as it would make that event too near the previous one and thereby curtail the championship honors of the present holders.

LOST AND FOUND.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, BALTIMORE, MD.
Baltimore, Nov. 16th, 1899.
LOST.—Certificate No. 18,362, dated July 7th, 1899, ten shares stock Canton Company of Baltimore; name Alex. C. Nelson. All persons are warned to show cause why a new certificate should not be issued. ALEX. C. NELSON.

PUBLIC FUNDS DEPOSITORY.

President Thomas L. James of the Lincoln National Bank was notified yesterday that Secretary Gage had designated it as a depository of public moneys especially to receive deposits only on account of "Transfer of Funds" under Section 5,153 United States Revised Statutes. The designation is temporary, and the security $250,000 in United States bonds, which have been deposited with the Assistant United States Treasurer. As soon as other formalities have been complied with, the United States Treasurer will from time to time make deposits with the bank aggregating the approximate amount of bonds.
The deposits will be gradual, as the internal revenue receipts, aggregating $1,000,000 a day, will be divided among all banks designated at this time. Only internal revenue receipts are available for this purpose.

THE GOLD SHIPMENTS.

Gold shipments by the Etruria to-day, as announced last evening, are:

Goldman, Sachs & Co.	$1,500,000
Muller, Schall & Co.	625,000
Baring, Magoun & Co.	1,000,000
Heidelbach, Ickelheimer & Co.	1,250,000
L. Von Hoffmann

the Sub-Treasury, the interior, and Canada something like $6,500,000, while they shipped to the interior about $4,000,000. These known figures would indicate a certain gain to the banks of about $2,500,000, as an offset to which the gold exports must be considered—though some of the withdrawals for export will not appear in this week's statement. The question of loans, their contraction or otherwise, has, of course, also to be considered.

EARNINGS STILL GROW.

Another excellent showing in the way of earnings is made by the railroads of the country for the second week in December, as will appear from the following table which The Commercial and Financial Chronicle will to-day publish, showing a net increase of 12.09 per cent. in the earnings of sixty-six roads. INSIDE INTERESTS BUYING.

Inside interests took advantage of every decline in St. Paul and Burlington yesterday to buy, and as a consequence there was a very considerable dealing in both stocks, over 25,000 shares of St. Paul being traded in and 28,000 of Burlington.

It is said that the St. Paul Directors have assured their friends that the increased dividend on the stock is now certain, while in some quarters yesterday there was talk of substantial privileges for Burlington shareholders in Feberuary.

WESTERN ROAD'S PROSPERITY.

The statement of earnings of the Chicago and Northwestern for the month of November, published yesterday, made a highly gratifying showing. In the thirty days in that month the earnings increased over $10,000 a day, as compared with last month, the total figures being $3,704,600 and the increase $329,700. Since June 1 the earnings have been $23,781,100 and the increase $3,401,800.

As on recent days, however, the market was so responsible to good news, and Chicago and Northwestern stock declined 1 point on sales totaling barely 1,100.

DECLINE AFTER A DIVIDEND.

General Electric declined 2 full points yesterday in sympathy with the rest of the market, though it was announced during the day from Boston that a dividend of $3.50 per share had been declared on the preferred stock.

CONTINUING GOOD TIMES.

Reports to the various commercial agencies tell of continuing good times.

Bradstreet's notes that holiday trade activity reaches its highest development during the week now drawing to a close, and it is significant of the prosperous conditions underlying the general business situation that reports almost without exception point to a volume of business having few, if any, parallels in previous years. Another significant feature developed also is that the demand for such goods embraces a higher class and a more expensive grade of materials, a conclusion among trade reporters being that a larger buying capacity exists now than in any previous year in the country's history. This favorable condition, too, exists in face of the fact that weather conditions have not altogether favored retail distribution of Winter goods, the result being less activity in purely retail lines than had been looked for, though comparisons with one year ago are generally favorable.

Dun's declares that there is not even a suspicion of unsoundness in any considerable branch of industry or trade, the extraordinary expansion in some being as well warranted as the moderate gain in others. The business of the country close to the holidays is necessarily smaller than it has been, and yet larger than at the same date in any other year. Exchanges through principal Clearing Houses for the week have been 33.7 per cent. larger than last year, and 50.4 per cent. larger than in 1892, including 32.1 per cent. gain in payments outside New York.

Of iron and steel, Bradstreet's says that they have displayed seasonable quiet as regards new business, but in the manufacturing branch of the trade activity is unsurpassed, feeling the impetus given by orders previously booked. Available supplies are naturally of small volume, and this, of course, limits the volume of new business on nearby account. Some slight shading in steel prices is to be noted at leading Eastern markets, but this is claimed to be more in the nature of readjustment than of weakness. In the cruder forms strength is undiminished and significant as bearing upon the outlook in the near future; it may be remarked that foreign iron producers are reported almost as heavily sold ahead as are those of our own country. Hardware, except for holiday varieties and for some building grades, is naturally quieter, but satisfaction with the year's business is expressed, and confidence in the future is noticeable.

Along the same lines, Dun's says that high prices for iron are wonderfully sustained, and though many works will close for stock taking and the holidays, while the furnaces do not stop, pig shows no weakness. Prices of finished products change little, though more concerns have reached the point of competing for new orders, and there is some weakness in sheets because many tin plate mills are to be closed soon at the East, and in plates not of the largest size competition is sharp, but in bars the demand somewhat improves, and the structural works have continued their combination for another year without change in prices.

***

Of cotton, Bradstreet's says that war news and tight money combined caused a slump early in the week in cotton, but the close found prices of the actual staple, spot cotton, only slightly below the opening. The interior movement of cotton has failed to expand, and there are evidences that foreign buyers covered heavily at the decline. A contrary movement in wheat was noted early in the week, due mainly to the influence of possible international complications upon the minds of foreigners, which caused a spurt in values, nearly all of which, however, was lost later on by realizing.

***

On the same subject Dun's says cotton suffered in speculation for a day, with stocks, but the great decrease in receipts from farms, since September over 1,500,000 bales, gives strong support to prices, as does the increase of 200,000 bales in takings by spinners. The demand for goods is quiet, though prices hold steady. Wool sales have dropped sharply with monetary pressure, but prices do not change, and the opening of heavyweight goods retards at present purchases for mills.

***

Strength in manufactured textiles, Bradstreet's says, is still a notable feature, and considerable business has been done this week on Spring account. A further slight gain in quotations of the finer grades of wool is noted, and the heavyweight season for men's-wear woolens will open at a substantial advance. Lumber shows seasonable quietness, but the open nature of the season has resulted in a longer period of activity than earlier expectd. In industrial lines generally activity is a feature. Advances in wages of textile mill employes have followed close upon increases in prices of product, and a number of mills North and South are reported running night and day. A report on the locomotive industry points to an expansion of output of 30 per cent. this year over last and to a shrinkage of 7 per cent. in our export trade, due mainly to domestic demand keeping manufacturers busy to the neglect of the foreign outlet so eagerly sought in past years.

***

Foreign trade reports, Dun's declares, leave no excuse for alarm as to international exchanges. Europe can borrow part of what it owes by paying a premium, but this country has of gold more than enough, and only needs to reduce its speculative loans. In two weeks of December exports from New York have been 20 per cent. larger than last year, when the aggregate for the month was $137,850,000, while imports were 26.6 per cent. larger than last year, when the aggregate for the month was $35,139,000. At the same rate for the month at all points the excess of exports would be $95,000,000, and while short cotton exports will make it smaller, it will be large enough.

***

According to Dun's, failures in two weeks of December have been $4,422,056, against $9,172,638 last year, $7,227,303 in 1897, and $14,602,007 in 1896. Manufacturing were $1,077,984, against $3,672,709 last year, and trading were $2,447,150, against $5,016,598 last year. Failures for the week have been 220 in the United States, against 258 last year, and 26 in Canada, against 31 last year.

WALL STREET TOPICS.

Cincinnati—Between banks, 25c discount; over counter, 50c premium.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—Business on the Stock Exchange to-day was quieter, and there was less pressure to sell, but the weakness continued owing to the indisposition of speculators to buy with the holiday settlement so close at hand and widespread fears in connection with the settlement of South African securities.

American railway shares were dull at the opening, but later in the day partially recovered, and closed firm. The early weakness was due to realizing. Consols for money, 98⅛; consols for account, 98⅜; Canadian, 89½; Erie, 10¼; Erie first preferred, 29¾; Illinois Central, 116½; Union Pacific preferred, 71¾; St. Paul, 117; New York Central, 129½; Pennsylvania, 65¾; Reading, 8⅝; Northern Pacific preferred, 72½; Atchison, 17⅝; Louisville, 75½; Grand Trunk, 6¼; Anaconda, 6¾.

Bar silver quiet, at 26 15-16d per ounce.

Money, 4 per cent. Rate of discount in the open market, for short bills, 7 per cent., and for three months' bills, 6¾@7 per cent.

The amount of bullion withdrawn from the Bank of England on balance to-day was £130,000. Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Buenos Ayres, 131; Madrid, 27.75; Lisbon, 43; Rome, 7.17½.

Spanish 4s, 63¼.

Private discount rates are harder, at 7 per cent.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Dec. 22.—On the Bourse to-day, after a tendency to sell, the market became steadier with some speculative buying, under the influence of easier money in New York and the hope that the London settlement would be less difficult than expected. Afterward prices reacted. International securities were weaker. Shortly before the close of the market there was another reaction, prices rallied, and the market closed firmer. Three per cent. rentes, 99f 15c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f 39c for checks. Spanish fours, 65.

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—Prices opened fairly steady on the Boerse to-day, only international shares being affected, on weak reports from Western Boerses. Speculators, however, hesitated owing to the approaching of settlement. Exchange on London, 20 marks 56 pfennigs for checks. Private rate of discount, 6¼ per cent.

FRANKFORT, Dec. 22.—Speculation on the Boerse to-day was reserved, but the tendency was steadier. American securities declined on arbitrage sales.

MADRID, Dec. 22.—Spanish 4s closed today at 75.30. Gold was quoted at 27.95.

Distilling Company Investigation.

A committee has been appointed to institute an inquiry into the condition of the Distilling Company of America, and to recommend such action as it may find desirable. The committee is composed of William L. Bull of Edward Sweet & Co., William F. Harrity, President of the Equitable Trust Company of Philadelphia; Richard Sutro of Sutro Brothers & Co., and Alvin W. Krech, Vice President of the Mercantile Trust Company. It represents the holders of a large amount of the common and preferred stock of the company. In a few days the stockholders will probably be invited to deposit their stock with the Mercantile Trust Company.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Interest in yesterday's market for outside securities was in the early hours confined to the trading in Amalgamated Copper. Other stocks received little attention until later in the day, when the market broadened to some extent showing considerable weakness at first, but improving somewhat when prices advanced on the Stock Exchange. Much irregularity marked the course of the day's business, but generally prices kept within a narrow range, few stocks fluctuating as much as a point. Final bids showed a number of further declines, while in some few stocks the market's final strength led to net gains over Thursday's last quotations. Transactions were in relatively small amount, and only two or three stocks were traded in to the extent of a thousand shares. The market was erratic and swayed by traders' efforts to a larger extent than by any items of news affecting the market. Here and there efforts to accumulate stock on the part of strong interests appeared, but liquidation still continued in many issues, and some of the prices recorded during the day were very much below recent figures. Liquidation has become quieter, but it has not yet ceased, for apparently apprehension as to the immediate future of the market has not yet been entirely allayed.

AMALGAMATED COPPER continued to follow the erratic course that has marked the trading in this issue for many days past. Following the announcement of the dividend which in some respects failed to meet the anticipation of many who had been watching the stock, the price went off sharply at the opening, and sales were made as low as 78. Much desire was shown to sell the stock, especially on the part of traders, but it was fairly well taken, and from the low figure mentioned the stock quickly reacted to the previous day's close, and went more than a point beyond, to 80. Another reaction followed which carried the stock down a little more to 79½, and it again jumped to 80¼, and closed at 80 bid, a net gain of 1¼ points. Some covering by shorts increased the strength of the stock at the close. Seemingly the stock has inside support, for in view of recent conditions and the prices at which many other copper stocks have of late been selling, Amalgamated has shown notable steadiness.

RUBBER GOODS was the feature in the industrial group, being the most active issue, as well as one of the strongest. Some common stock pressed for sale at the opening, and some of this sold as low as 23, but good demand developed, and at the close 24 was firmly bid for the stock, with none offered near that figure. Buying of the stock was for inside account, persons closely connected with the company expressing much confidence in its condition and deeming the present a very favorable opportunity to buy stock. As far as reported, no sales of the preferred stock were made, which was quoted unchanged at 75 bid, offered at 77. But these figures were purely nominal.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA preferred, which showed such marked strength on Thursday, went off abruptly at the opening, the sale of a very little stock forcing the price down to 19. Support was given to the stock in the afternoon, and the price went back to 20. It closed at 20 bid, showing a loss of 1¼ points. The common stock sold from 6½ down to 5½ and back to 6, and closed at 6 bid, a half-point recession from Thursday's figure. It is said by friends of the company that it has ample working capital for its present needs, and that the effort to procure further moneys is for the purpose of extending the company's business, which, it is said, could be profitably carried on on an even larger scale than at present.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS bonds sold yesterday at the lowest figure they have yet reached. Eight bonds changed hands at 87 and interest, and even at this figure there was no large demand for the bonds. Specialists say that the market for these bonds is weaker now than it has been at any time in the past, a fact that does not appear to coincide with recent reports to the effect that gas-war settlement is at hand. In the stocks very few transactions were recorded yesterday. A small amount of the common stock sold at 20, and some preferred at 41.

ELECTRIC VEHICLE preferred sold at 72½, and at the close was offered at 75 without a bid. This is the first sale of a full lot that has been made in many days, and the price is very much below recent figures for the stock. Seemingly there has been even less demand for the preferred stock than for the common, for which there has generally been some bid. Final bids for the common stock were at 45, a decline of 1 point.

NEW YORK HEAT, LIGHT AND POWER 5 per cent. bonds sold at par, and the 4 per cent. issue at 87½.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 22.—Despite rumors, there was no more trouble in the financial situation, and it appeared that matters were going through all right. At the Clearing House 6 per cent. was the going rate between banks, and New York funds sold at 16 2-3c and 20c discount. Money was in better supply and much reduced demand. Nearly every one financially strong was paying off indebtedness rather than incurring new obligations. There was money to be had at 6 per cent. where the name and collateral were high. Commercial paper was nominally 6 to 7 per cent., and call loans were made mostly at from 6 to 7 per cent.

United States Oil opened 2¾ off, at 22½, rallied to 23¾, and settled to 23 in the afternoon. Montana was 10 lower, at 255; Osceola off 2, at 65; Parrot 1½ lower, at 34½; Centennial lost 1⅛ to 118; American Zinc, 2, to 15; Amalgamated, 1½, to 79½. Butte was 1 lower, at 40; Dominion Coal fell 1, to 40½, rallying to 41¾; Tamarack was 6 lower, at 173; United States Oil closed at 23¼, a net decline of 2 for the day.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

The Potomac Fire Insurance Company of Washington, D. C., has applied for admission to Massachusetts.

John S. Bates has resigned as Illinois manager of the Bankers' Life Insurance Company of New York.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Directors of the North American Insurance Company of Boston, Eugene L. Partridge was re-elected President and Treasurer and Charles E. Macullar Secretary.

The insurance on the building at 653 First Avenue, which was badly damaged by fire Monday, was distributed as follows: Pennsylvania, $5,000; Springfield, $5,000; Fire Association, $5,000; Fireman's Fund, $2,500; Providence-Washington, $2,500.

An informal celebration of the third anniversary of the election of Edward W. Scott to the Presidency of the Provident Savings Life Assurance Society took place at the company's offices yesterday. A service of cut glass was presented to Mr. Scott by the other officers of the society.

Additional insurance on the property at 76 Fulton Street, which was considerably damaged by fire Tuesday, was distributed as follows: On building—Lancashire, $4,750; British American of Toronto, $4,000; British American of New York, $2,500; Fire Association, $2,500; Fireman's Fund, $2,500; Traders' of New York, $1,500; Colonial, $1,250; Springfield, $1,000.

The insurance on the property at 495 West Broadway, which was considerably damaged by fire Thursday night, was distributed as follows: On W. Goldberg & Co.—American of New York, $1,500; Boston, $1,500; British American of New York, $1,000; Imperial, $1,000. On Paris Flower and Feather Company—London Assurance, $1,000; Western of Pittsburg, $1,000; American of Philadelphia, $1,000. On Samuel Rosenthal—Scottish Union and National, $1,500; German of Pittsburg, $750. On Citizens' of Pittsburg, $750. Lyons, Stadholz & Co. will adjust the above losses. J. B. Rowley was insured for $3,000 in the Agricultural Insurance Company of Watertown, N. Y.

The Attorney General of South Dakota has just issued an opinion to the effect that the law, requiring corporations to file copies of their charters or articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State, is applicable to fire insurance companies, despite the fact that these companies have their articles of incorporation on file with the Insurance Commissioner. The insurance companies have also appointed under the provisions of this law an attorney in each of the seven judicial districts of South Dakota to accept service, and an additional appointment for this same purpose must be made, according to the opinion of the Attorney General. This last requirement includes the payment of a fee of $42 by each company complying with the law.

Decision for Edward S. Stokes.

The Appellate Division yesterday affirmed a judgment which was obtained by Edward S. Stokes, in his suit as receiver, against the Hoffman House of New York, a corporation organized under the laws of this State. The controversy was over $10,000 paid by Mr. Stokes to the Livingston estate as rent, and another sum of $9,282.42 paid by him. The Appellate Division, in an opinion by Presiding Justice Van Brunt, holds that the decision below, which gave the plaintiff credit for these two sums, was correct.

Stamps for Buffalo Exposition.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The Post Office Department has decided upon an issue of stamps commemorative of the Pan-American Exhibition at Buffalo next year. The stamps will be of the same size as those now issued, and will be in the denominations of 1, 2, 4, 5, 8, and 10 cents.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Horace S. Ely & Co. have sold for the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company and another, Trustees, the four-story building 79 Fifth Avenue, east side, 100 feet north of Fifteenth Street, 34 by 129. It is understood that the purchaser will improve the property.

Reports are still circulated that John T. Williams has sold his ten-story building at the southwest corner of Broadway and White Street. James B. Haggin is now being named as the buyer. Mr. Williams yesterday said that he knew nothing of any such transaction, while Mr. Haggin's secretary stated positively that no such purchase had been made.

It is reported that the factory property 516 to 528 West Thirty-eighth Street has been sold, and that the purchaser has given a long term lease of the buildings to a concern which will occupy them. This property was sold under foreclosure about six months ago, and was knocked down to the Union Trust Company—with the exception of No. 524, which went to Ambrose K. Ely. The total purchase price paid at auction was $78,500.

Berry & Trenholm have sold for Rachel Axelbrod to Francis McMullin, for about $125,000, the new six-story apartment house 306 West Ninety-third Street, 37.6 by 125 by 148. The same brokers have also sold for Mr. McMullin to a client, at about $70,000, his country seat at Metuchen, N. J.

E. De Forest Simmons has sold for Henry M. Thurber, as executor, to Charles M. Brooks, for about $40,000, the four-story brownstone-front dwelling, with extension, 146 West Fifty-eighth Street, 19 by 65 by 100.

Mandelbaum & Lewine have sold to Mrs. Rachel P. Townsend the four-story dwelling 26 West Ninth Street, 25 by 94.

It is reported that the estate of Edward Hayes has sold to Eugene C. Ludin the four-story dwelling 152 West Forty-fourth Street, 20.6 by 100.5.

The Sweeney estate has sold the four-story building 497 Broome Street, 20 by 82.

Mordecai & Hibbard and J. Clarence Davies & Co. have sold for the Port Morris Land and Improvement Company the plot of twelve lots on the east side of Willow Avenue, between One Hundred and Thirty-fourth and One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Streets.

David Cohen has sold for the estate of George Kahrs to Jacob Lunlitz, and resold for the latter to Harris Cohen & Brother, for improvement, the old building 129 East Broadway, 22 by 87.6. S. Bernstein has bought, through the same broker, for investment, the five-story building 166 Madison Street, 23 by 100.

Duff & Conger have sold for the estate of John W. Pope the three-story brick dwelling 71 East Eighty-fifth Street.

W. F. and H. Smith have sold for Maggie Noulett the five-story triple flat, with stores, at the southwest corner of Melrose Avenue and One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Street, 25 by 95 by 100, to E. A. Farrell, for $35,000, the buyer giving in part payment, $7,000, two lots on the east side of Union Avenue, 84 feet south of One Hundred and Sixty-eighth Street.

F. William Sohns has sold for Mrs. Charles Young the five-story double flat 132 West One Hundred and Seventeenth Street, 25 by 85 by 100.

Results at Auction.

BIG LONG ISLAND LAND DEAL.

Manhattan Lawyers the Buyers—Negotiations for Another Tract.

HEWLETTS, L. I., Dec. 22.—The largest land deal made in Nassau County and one of the largest ever made on Long Island was carried through yesterday. The property fronts on the Far Rockaway and East Rockaway roads for more than a mile. It includes more than 500 acres. The price, it is said, was in excess of $250,000.

The land comprised six farms, the owners being George T. Hewlett, J. F. Schenck, Thomas W. and George K. Hewlett, estate of Augustus J. Hewlett, estate of Charles Hewlett, and estate of Daniel Langworth. Nearly all of the land had been in the Hewlett family for more than 100 years, and some of it for more than 150 years. Joseph S. Auerbach and Richard W. Stevenson of the law firm of Davies, Stone & Auerbach of Manhattan are the purchasers.

The Wood estate property at Woodsburg is near the large Hewletts tract, and comprises about 300 acres of land, a big pavilion, which cost $200,000 when built about twenty-five years ago, a smaller hotel, and eighteen houses. Negotiations are under way for the sale of this property to another syndicate, but one including some of the same individual interests. It is said the syndicates are to join issue, and aim to create a big fashionable Summer resort.

LEGAL NOTICES.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW York.—To all persons interested in the estate of THE JOHN F. PHILLIPS ADVERTISING COMPANY send greeting:

You and each of you are hereby cited and required personally to be and appear in the Supreme Court, at the Special Term thereof, Part I., at the Chambers thereof, in the County Court House, in the City and County of New York, on the 31st day of January, 1900, at 10:30 o'clock A. M., there and then to show cause why a final settlement of the accounts of George W. Elkins substituted assignee of above-named The John F. Phillips Advertising Company, insolvent debtor, should not be had, and if no cause be shown then to attend the final settlement of the assignee's accounts.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto caused the seal of the said court to be hereto affixed. Witness, Hon. Charles H. Van Brunt, Chief Judge of the said Supreme Court, this 1st day of December, 1899.

All those four certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land situate, lying, and being in the City of New York, in Section 7, Block 1,986, on the land map of the City of New York, and more particularly bounded and described as follows, viz.: Beginning at a point on the southerly side of One Hundred and Thirty-second Street, distant two hundred and twenty-five feet westerly from the corner formed by the intersection of the southerly side of One Hundred and Thirty-second Street with the westerly side of Amsterdam Avenue; running thence southerly, parallel with Amsterdam Avenue, ninety-nine feet and eleven inches to the centre

CHARLES J. SMITH DIES

Christmas Gifts for Poor Children in His Last Thoughts.

HIS PLAN FOR PROVIDING THEM

Career of the Tammany Politician and How He Gained the Title of "Silver Dollar."

Ex-Alderman Charles J. Smith, better known as "Silver Dollar" Smith, died yesterday morning at his home, 64 Essex Street. He had consumption, diabetes, and several other ailments. Mr. Smith became seriously ill a week ago Wednesday, when he had to go to bed. To the last he appeared to have great vitality. Though his wife, son, four daughters, and his son-in-law were with him at the end, he was dead for an hour, his physician said, before they knew it. They thought he was unconscious.

When Mr. Smith felt that he was dying, he asked that his friends be requested not to send flowers to the funeral, but instead to use the money that they would expend in that way to buy Christmas gifts for poor children.

The funeral will take place from Mr. Smith's late home at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. In accordance with Mr. Smith's wishes, the pall bearers invited are John F. Carroll, Martin Engel, Senator Timothy D. Sullivan, Assemblyman Timothy F. Sullivan, Edward J. Sparenberg, Bernard Rourke, ex-Police Justice Joseph Koch, Edward Butler, ex-Alderman Philip Benjamin, Max Hochstim, ex-Alderman Charles S. Adler, and ex-Assistant District Attorney Henry J. Goldsmith.

Charles Smith was one of the Democratic powers in the old Eighth Assembly District, and when that district was cut up in the reappointment a few years ago, the section he lived in, Essex Street, near Grand, still remained a part of the Eighth, and Mr. Smith remained a power there. He was born in Germany in 1843, and with his brother Tony, now a patrolman attached to the Fifth Street Police Station, was brought to this country when he was a year old. He grew up in the neighborhood of Essex Street and went into the saloon business. He prospered and then drifted into politics.

Mr. Smith became affiliated with Tammany Hall during the reign in that organization of the late John Kelly, and as he was one of the few politicians in the district who understood the Hebrew residents and their language thoroughly, he soon found a large political following among them. He was a factor in all of the bitter party contests that the turbulent Eighth District knew during the past fifteen years, and although for a short time a few years ago he joined forces with the Republicans, he was usually looked upon as second in command in the district to Martin Engel, the Tammany leader.

The name "Silver Dollar" Smith was given him by the residents of his neighborhood when some years ago he opened at 64 Essex Street a saloon the marble-paved floor of which was imbedded with trade dollars. The mirrors behind the bar were studded with the coins, and in the centre tile of the floor, a twenty-dollar gold piece was imbedded. The coins are still in the floor, although they have been worn smooth as blank pieces of metal, by constant trafficover them. Mr. Smith was five times a member of the Legislature, and three times he represented his district in the old Board of Aldermen. For some years past he had not held office, but confined his attention to his saloons, the Silver Dollar, on Essex Street, and a place on Sixth Avenue. He was indicted twice for felonious assault, and once for bribery at the polls, but was not convicted. Less than a year ago Mr. Smith was a big man physically. He weighed about 280 pounds, and was as strong as a trained athlete. He caught cold, but neglected it, and it developed into consumption. He sought health in Europe at Carlsbad, in Bermuda, and in the Adirondacks, and returned to his home this Winter feeling much better.

WILLIAM MUTTER A SUICIDE.

A Well-Known Tobacco Dealer Shoots Himself — Reports of Speculation in Stocks Denied.

William Mutter, junior partner of the tobacco firm of Kimball Brothers & Co. of 48 Franklin Street, and well known in the trade, shot himself yesterday morning in the front room of the company's offices, on the second floor. He died almost instantly. No adequate cause has yet been given for his action.

Mr. Mutter was forty-two years of age. He lived with his wife at 162 West Ninety-sixth Street. He left his home about 9 o'clock, apparently in good spirits. Volney R. Kimball, a son of the senior member of the firm, was the only man in the offices when Mr. Mutter arrived there. Only one letter was in Mr. Mutter's mail, and as soon as he had read that he said to Mr. Kimball that he intended to go to Hoboken to see a customer. He started to go out apparently, but stopped in front of a looking-glass near the water-cooler in front. Mr. Kimball looked up just in time to see his father's partner place a revolver at his left temple. The next instant a report rang out, and Mr. Mutter sank to the floor, dying before medical aid could be summoned. The body was removed to Bacigalupo's undertaking rooms in Mulberry Street, and later taken to the late home of the suicide.

The firm of Kimball Brothers & Co. is preparing to go out of business within the next few months. Mr. Mutter had been connected with it for nearly twenty-five years. It is thought by the firm that the worry of losing his position and being without business prospects may have been a contributory cause to his death. The story that he had lost money in the recent slump in Wall Street with resultant despondency was denied by the Kimballs, his wife, and also by Capt. Titus of the Elizabeth Street Station, who knew him well for a number of years. The story is said to have arisen from the fact that Mr. Mutter had received circulars from Dick Brothers & Co. of 30 Broad Street relative to stocks. This firm said that Mr. Mutter had never dealt with them. He was known among his associates as a careful and economical man.

Mrs. Mutter, who was notified shortly after her husband's death, said she could conceive of no reason for his action. She said, however, that he appeared lately to have been worried, and that recently he had frequently walked the floor at night, unable to sleep.

The revolver with which Mr. Mutter killed himself was a new one, and as he had never been known to own a revolver he must have purchased it very recently.

"Mr. Mutter had no cause to worry over financial difficulties," said one of Mr. Kimball's sons yesterday. "He was fairly well off. It may have been that he worried from the fact that we are going out of business, but if he did he never gave any sign, except that occasionally he had a fit of the blues. He must have become suddenly insane. I understand that he applied for a position in a tobacco house in this city, but that signifies nothing in relation to his death. He never speculated."

Mrs. Mutter called at the Coroners' Office during the afternoon. Coroner Zucca gave her such effects as were found on the body. Mrs. Mutter told the Coroner she had no knowledge of her husband's business.

LIFE TERM FOR MARTIN REGAN.

Court Refuses to Postpone Sentence Until After Christmas.

Martin Regan, who shot and killed his brother-in-law, Edward Slater, on the 26th of October at Twenty-third Street and Avenue A, was sentenced to life imprisonment yesterday by Justice Fursman, in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court.

When he was brought before the Justice his counsel asked that the sentence might be postponed till after Christmas, in order that the prisoner might spend the day in the Tombs, where his relatives could see him. Justice Fursman refused, and pronounced the sentence. Regan's counsel then asked the Court to withhold the commitment papers authorizing the transfer of the prisoner from the Tombs to Sing Sing until after the holidays. This request also was denied, and Regan must spend Christmas in Sing Sing. He is thirty-one years old.

Transfer Tax on United States Bonds.

A decision was handed down yesterday by Surrogate Varnum, in which he holds that, while under the laws of this State United States bonds are not taxable, the transfer tax is imposed, not on the bonds as such, but on the act of transfer. The opinion was given on an appeal from the imposition of the transfer tax on United States bonds belonging to the estate of Joseph Plummer.

Royal Baking Powder is an absolutely pure cream of tartar powder, analyzed and recommended by the Health Officers of London, New York, Boston, Chicago, etc., who praise it highly for its marvelous purity and leavening strength. Its use is a safeguard against the alum baking powders of which the market is full and which are known to make dangerously unwholesome food. Royal Baking Powder makes finest flavored, lightest, sweetest and most delicious food, and imparts to it positively anti-dyspeptic qualities.

WILL H. BRADLEY

DEATH OF A CENTENARIAN.

Mrs. Ida Schirbs, a Native of Russia, Passes Away in This City.

Mrs. Ida Schirbs, said to be one hundred years old, died at midnight Thursday in the apartments of her son-in-law, Abrahain Molenik, on the first floor of 411 Grand Street. Mrs. Schirbs came to this country six years ago from Buhisdok, in the Province of Grogoa, Russia.

Mrs. Schirbs had been ill for several weeks, and had been attended by Dr. Levy of the Beth Israel Hospital. As no physician had called on her within twenty-four hours prior to her death, the case was reported to the Coroner.

HAD MRS. KRONMAN'S JEWELRY.

Witness in the Murder Trial Pawned It for Neufeld.

The trial of William Neufeld, accused of the murder of Annie Kronman of 266 West Thirty-fifth Street, was continued yesterday before Justice Fursman, in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court. Edward A. Goldfinger, who was the first witness called, said that he had met Neufeld the Saturday before his arrest in an east side cafe.

"What did Neufeld tell you there?" asked Assistant District Attorney Hennessy.

"He said that his grandmother had left him $15,000, and he wanted to start a saloon and billiard room," said Goldfinger. "He asked me to look out for a good location."

"Did he give you anything there?"

"Yes, he gave me a small gold chain with a dollar attached."

Goldfinger then identified the chain, which Kronman had declared the day before to be one he had given his wife, as the one he received from Neufeld.

"I pawned the chain for $5," said Goldfinger, "and gave the money to Neufeld."

The witness said further that he had gone to the Coney Island Athletic Club that night with Neufeld, and there received from him the diamond crescent pin which had been identified as the property of the murdered woman. "I pawned it for $30," he said, "and then won the $30 from Neufeld gambling."

Anton Kripanek, a barber of 216 Third Street, testified that he had removed a heavy black mustache from Neufeld's face on Aug. 8 or 9. He was the last witness examined yesterday, as Mr. Howe, Neufeld's counsel, applied for an adjournment, on acount of a funeral. The trial will be continued next Tuesday.

Burglars Resume Work in Flatbush.

Burglars have resumed operations in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn, to the annoyance of the police and the disgust of the residents. Yesterday the police of the Grant Street Station were informed that the home of William P. Earle, at 19 Lincoln Road, had been burglarized on Thursday night and a quantity of silverware stolen.

Old Excise Indictments Dismissed.

Over 300 indictments which had been found against alleged violators of the old excise laws in force before the enactment of the Raines law were dismissed yesterday by Justice Fursman in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court. Many of the indictments were dated as far back as 1880. Assistant District Attorney McIntyre, at whose instance the indictments were dismissed, said that it was hopeless to attempt to obtain a conviction in any of the cases.

Hudson County Officials Plead.

The Oyer and Terminer Court room at Jersey City was crowded with politicians yesterday. The occasion was the arraignment of the indicted officials of Hoboken and Hudson County. They all pleaded not guilty and were released on bail.

East River School Pupils' Festival.

"Santa Claus" visited the annual Christmas festival of the East River School of the Children's Aid Society, 247 East Forty-fourth Street, yesterday and the pupils had a merry time about a Christmas tree laden with candies and toys. Besides calisthenics by the school, there were recitations and the singing of carols bearing on the Christmas theme. The kindergarten held a celebration of its own, a feature of which was a large Christmas tree.

After the exercises the toys and candies were distributed among the children by the Principal, Miss Schlegel, and her assistants. Sweaters and clothing were given to the boys and dresses to the girls.

For Children's Aid Society.

A contribution of $10, received by THE NEW YORK TIMES from "Gratitude" for the Children's Aid Society, has been delivered.

Affairs move rapidly in the publishing world of New York. The Doubleday & McClure Company will shortly become Doubleday, Page & Co. The new firm will take over all published and projected books which have already been associated with the late company. In three years the Doubleday & McClure Company has done much for the reading public. The future efforts of the new firm will be to present the best literature it can obtain in the most attractive forms. Its personnel alone will assure readers that something out of the ordinary in literary enterprise may be expected from it in 1900. Mr. Walter Page, formerly editor of The Atlantic Monthly and literary adviser to Houghton, Mifflin & Co., will devote himself to the literary work of the firm. He will be assisted by Mr. Henry Lanier. Mr. J. L. Thompson will conduct the "business end," while Mr. S. A. Everitt will have charge of the manufacturing department. The foreign interests of the firm will be looked after by Mr. James MacArthur, formerly editor of The Bookman, who sails next Wednesday to take up his residence in London. The remain at the old stand in East Twenty-fifth Street, where Mr. McClure requires more space to meet the development of McClure's Magazine and of other publishing enterprises which he has in mind.

It is rumored in literary circles that a prominent and scholarly writer has been charged by the Parkman family of Boston to prepare an exhaustive and elaborate biography of the late historian Francis Parkman. All students of history will doubtless await the publication of this work with eager anticipation amounting to enthusiasm. It is not only that Mr. Parkman stood alone as the supreme authority of the history of the rise and fall of the French dominion on this continent, but his individuality, his patient labors in amassing the enormous amount of material from which he drew his histories, the affection and respect with which he was regarded abroad, all go to make up the study of a career which was truly great in the achievements of American letters.

An important departure in character study is embraced in a novel, which is in active preparation at G. P. Putnam's Sons. It is to be entitled "The Things That Count," and is by Elizabeth Knight Tompkins, author of "Talks with Barbara." Some of the scenes are laid in Brooklyn. The tale depicts the career of what may be termed a female social parasite, who, with a small income flits about from one social circle to another. She is beautiful, talented, and attractive, and she has none of the characteristics which would cause her to be branded as an adventuress. At length a bereavement causes her to see herself as she really is, and she is for a time overwhelmed with remorse at her purposeless existence. A reform is wrought in her nature, and, having narrowly escaped becoming a woman of the world, her nobler but hitherto dormant nature asserts itself and she becomes quite a noble character.

There will be two contributions to the January number of The Critic that will attract more than passing attention. One is on "Literature," and is by Mr. John Jay Chapman, a writer who never writes unless he has something to say. He has much to say in this particular paper, and he says it boldly. The other is the first of a series of essays on English literature in the nineteenth century, by Prof. Lewis E. Gates of Harvard University. Prof. Gates's introductory essay deals with the romantic movement. Prof. Gates's name is already known to the discerning as that of a clear thinker and graceful writer. His name has already been compared favorably with that of Matthew Arnold, which, though we object to comparisons, is a compliment. Among other contributors to this number of The Critic, which now enters upon its twentieth year, are Mme. Modjeska, Miss Clara Morris, Mr. Clement K. Shorter, Mr. William Archer, Mr. Gelett Burgess, and Miss Carolyn Shipman.

M. Brunetière, the editor of the La Revue des Deux Mondes, and the only surviving exponent of scientific criticism, has again appealed to the French code. He has brought an action for damages against M. Yves Guyot, who published in his paper, Le Siècle, and later in book form, a series of articles criticising the editor of La Revue des Deux Mondes. M. Brunetière has created quite a stir in Parisian literary circles by announcing that he will be represented by no lawyer at the trial, but will personally plead his cause.

A true and authentic story of the American Revolution will come from the press of Henry Holt & Co. early in the new year. It will be entitled "The Fortunes of War," and is composed of portions of many letters and journals written to and for Mistress Dorothea Engle of Northumberland by Katherine, daughter of Major Patison. Mistress Dorothea's cousin, Elizabeth N. Borrow, has edited and arranged the material so that it forms a connected account of the romantic adventures of the writer during the two years which she spent in America at the time of the struggle for the independence of the colonies. These papers have been preserved by the descendants of the Engle family, and in "The Fortunes of War" will be presented to the public for the first time.

The famous egyptologist, Prof. G. Maspero, is now having the third work of his Egyptian trilogy translated from the French by M. L. McClure. It will be published early in 1900 by D. Appleton & Co. in a large quarto volume, with elaborate and authentic illustrations, uniform in every particular with "The Dawn of Civilisation (Egypt and Chaldea)" and "The Struggle of the Nations (Egypt, Syria, and Assyria)." The forthcoming work will be entitled "The Passing of the Empires (to 850 B.C.)." Sayce of Oxford is the author of Alexander the

SIR JOHN E. MILLAIS.

His "Life and Letters" by His Son—A Study of His Art by A. L. Baldry.*

Reviewed for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW by Russell Sturgis.

Here are more contributions to the already considerable stock of material concerning the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood. It seems odd that such a large book as that which Millais's son has brought together concerning his father's life and work should be classed among contributions to that history of a short-lived society. This classification is, however, not only justified but made necessary by the constant allusions in the larger as in the smaller book to the actual facts concerning that association of Millais's early life; and still more by the numerous assertions, more or less inaccurate, which have been made about it. And it is true, moreover, that a new light is thus thrown upon this subject, which, indeed, has great interest for many persons.

It has generally been held, by those who cared the most about the subject, that Dante Gabriel Rossetti was the third, with Holman Hunt and John Everett Millais, of the real, original Pre-Raphaelites; and that William Michael Rossetti, Woolner, the sculptor; F. G. Stevens, and James Collinson joined the brotherhood afterward, making up a body of seven, of which Rossetti was probably the leading spirit. Moreover, it would have been said by most inquiring and affectionate students of Pre-Raphaelitism that directness of moral and of intellectual insight, and truthfulness of pose, gesture, incident, attitude, were as essential parts of the brotherhood's creed as the faithful painting of the external aspects of nature. The imaginative treatment of scenes and of objects, of which Rossetti was easily the greatest master, has been also set down as an inevitable part of the tendency of Pre-Raphaelitism; and this because realism in the hands of very strong and thoughtful men, gifted with some imaginative force, would necessarily tend that way. In short, we have held that the true seeming of Holman Hunt's "Christ in the Temple," the actual verity of "Christ in the Carpenter's Shop," by Millais, and the imaginative force of Rossetti's frightful drawing "How They Met Themselves" were all parts of the Pre-Raphaelite scheme, pure and simple. But there are made, on the authority of Millais himself, and with the actual or tacit assent of Holman Hunt, the most positive assertions of these two somewhat startling propositions—first, that Rossetti was a late-coming Pre-Raphaelite, a reluctant one, an unconvinced one, never as a painter consenting to work within the brotherhood's rules; and, second, that those rules referred to the painting of visible nature alone. It is as clearly stated as anything can be that the one law laid down by the members of this little society was "to present on canvas what they saw in nature." These words are quoted by the son of John Everett Millais from his father's own words, which he noted down in 1896. In the course of the same straightforward and simple statement of fact, as Millais saw and remembered the fact, it is stated that Rossetti had "aims and ideals in art" which were "widely different from ours"—that is, from those of the other Pre-Raphaelites. There is also described the astonishment of the public, who cried out when they saw Rossetti's typical young woman in pictures painted at a slightly later time; and the public's assumption that this was Pre-Raphaelitism. To this Millais says, simply, that "it was nothing of the sort."

If, then, Rossetti is not to be considered a Pre-Raphaelite, and if this exclusion rests upon the authority of one of the two men who were certainly original Pre-Raphaelites, then it becomes interesting to see who were, according to Millais himself, the real members and what became of the membership. There have been named above four painters—Hunt, Millais, Stevens, and Collinson—who actually joined the society and who were entitled to put the letters P. R. B. after their names when they signed their paintings or drawings. It appears that Arthur Hughes, Charles Collins, and W. H. Deverell were "working diligently with our views guiding them," (this on the authority of Holman Hunt,) and also it appears that Frederick Sandys and Noël Paton, together with the poet Coventry Patmore, were closely in sympathy with the movement. It is probable, however, that no one of these ever had the right to call himself a member of the P. R. B., and also it is stated positively that when, about two years after the first appearance of the mystic letters, the members of the fraternity agreed to suspend the use of those letters for the time, the society ceased to exist in the very fact of that abandon-that of this special design. It is for that Holman Hunt put the matter clearly in his well-known article in the Contemporary Review in 1868. "The words are the original here in the paper before me. We decided it was better to let our characters be known only by their works, and so nominally Pre-Raphaelitism ceased to be. I often read in print that I am now the only Pre-Raphaelite; yet I can't use the distinguishing letters, for I have no brotherhood."

This brings us, in the case of Millais, to his own abandonment of the standard of the fraternity. Neither one of the books under consideration makes the slightest attempt to disguise the fact that this breach between the artist and his previously avowed principles, as well as between him and his former associates, was absolute, peremptory, and sudden. The year came when that Millais whom the public had been accustomed to ridicule as a hopeless mannerist, as ignorant of true art, as a painter of mere details, and those falsely and, therefore, badly—when that Millais astonished them by exhibiting pictures which were frankly impressionistic, (in the true sense of the word,) instead of minutely detailed. That year was 1868. It seems odd that the picture which has been thought by many a typical pre-Raphaelite work should be, in the opinion of the writers whom we are now following and evidently in the opinion of Millais himself, the picture which marked his change of system. That picture is "The Vale of Rest," the strange composition made up of a nun digging her own grave, while another sits by in meditation, and of a sombre landscape, including the graveyard, the convent garden, and the irregular growth of trees seen above the convent roofs and against the river and a pale sky. The truth is, that nothing of the pre-Raphaelite way of painting was shown in that picture except a certain informality of gesture; as if the model had not been posed with a view to gracefulness. A picture of the next year, "The Black Brunswicker," showed emancipation from such an early habit of seeking realism rather than prettiness, and the real lovers of pre-Raphaelitism were as much offended by the conventional grace of the girl's and her lover's pose as they were by the abandonment of minute detail in the painting. This, however, was not a final abandonment of the awkward gesture. A certain clumsiness in pose never left Millais. His work to the end of his life was frequently marked by that same disposition to put figures into strained and uncomfortable attitudes. It would seem that he had difficulty in avoiding at once Scylla and Charybdis. He must either give the trivial grace of "The Princes in the Tower," of "Rosalind and Celia," of "The Black Brunswicker," or he must paint figures as wooden as those in "Autumn Leaves" and "The Escape of a Heretic." As a figure painter Millais had that handicap; his figures were always awkward and self-conscious, using their muscles with a pronounced assertion which so able a draughtsman should have known how to avoid, and lifting, pulling, pushing, striking, with all the stiffness of the posed model, or else they were prettily posed in the spirit of the illustrations to annuals. It might almost be said that one can search through the great collection of photogravures and half-tones contained in the three volumes which we have before us and not find a single subject in which movement is truly expressed in the drawing of a figure. It might certainly be said that nowhere is the haunting presence of the posed model to be entirely ignored. Even in the vigorous picture "The Last Trek," exhibited in 1895, there is the too evident presence of the black model and the white one. Or if it is thought that we should not take his latest picture, the picture painted just before his death, as a type of his work, let there be compared with each other such pictures as the "Parable of the Tares," "The Romans Leaving Britain," "Locksley Hall," "The Escape of a Heretic," "The Northwest Passage," and "Apple Blossoms," on the clumsy side, with "The Black Brunswicker," "A Flood," "The White Cockade," and "The Knight Errant," on the slight and popular side, and it will be felt that Millais was wise to abandon imaginative figure subjects, first for landscape and then for portraiture.

Indeed, there was in Millais one of the greatest landscape painters of the world. The present writer remembers the shock of delighted astonishment with which in the Paris Exposition of 1878 he first made the acquaintance of "Chill October," which had been painted nearly eight years before. That picture is signed as of 1870, and we learn from the title at the end of J. G. Millais's book that the subject, or, as he says, the model for it was Kinfaun's Backwater, River Tay. From that time until "Lingering Autumn" was painted, in 1890, there was a series of noble landscapes, not as numerous as the admirers of dignified and essentially truthful painting of nature could wish, but still constituting a most important chapter in the history of nineteenth century art. The portraits it is here easy to speak of with conviction, because it is done with authority by the connoisseur of great painting, and constitutes a great portrait. What the modern portrait painter with authority now we know what the nineteenth century artist had to paint—we do not even know what came before the eyes of Sir Joshua Reynolds. The external nature of landscape, of beast, and of man which Paul Veronese painted we have as he had it; and we know what the architecture was which he copied or imagined for his background and the costumes in which he invested his figures. Or, to take the most remote of all possible subjects, such a "Fall of the Angels" as that of Rubens, or such a "Massacre of the Innocents" as that of Tintoretto, it is not impossible for the modern student of painting to feel himself at home with those works and to be able to appraise them in a sense. With portraits the case is different and the problem far harder. Before estimating these Millais portraits—those that one has seen in color and on canvas and those which are only to be seen in photographs—it seems safe to say that they combine in a way uncommon in modern art verity with charm. It is impossible to avoid the tone of vulgarity in portraits of fashionable people fashionably dressed; but the painter can escape from this in his stern old men, (Carlisle, Barlow, Wilson, Quain,) and in his pictures of children, whether nominally portraits or taking such fantastic names as "Little Miss Muffet" or "A Message from the Sea," or, again, in his single figures of young women, especially in his later years, when such a straightforward and simple piece of work as "Shelling Peas," painted in 1889, was possible to him.

The little volume by Mr. Baldry troubles the reader by its too exalted tone of admiration more than one likes to confess. Here and there it is admitted that there were points in Millais's work about which two opinions might be held; but the general tone is as if we were writing of Velasquez, say, instead of a painter whose work is open to as much questioning criticism as to ready acceptance. The tone is that of ardent laudation for everything that can be praised and of most reserved and careful suggestion of shortcomings when it cannot be denied that such exist. Mr. Baldry was more at home in writing about Albert Moore, five years ago. There he had nothing to write about but a series of valuable paintings and their author; and the paintings, moreover, were all of one general character. In writing about Millais, he has evidently been greatly troubled by the importance of the man, of the Englishman, and of the central figure in the little world of English art; and he has, therefore, felt his hand less free.

The same difficulty exists to a far greater degree in the work of Millais's son. It is hard for the child of a powerful and celebrated man to write fairly about his father. That success seems to have been reserved for the younger Darwin, whose book about his father was in all these respects almost faultless, and which has left the most delightful impression upon the minds of hundreds. Mr. Millais has been too much troubled by his father's great personality. To him his father has seemed so important, as a representative Englishman, vigorous, stalwart, and healthy, a sportsman, and a plain, outspoken John Bull, that he mixes up his respect for that type of man with his natural and proper respect for his father's paintings, and is less than a perfect critic of the latter. If it could be suggested to these Englishmen, naturally admiring a man of their own kind, or who fulfills their own ideals, that to the world of art lovers the idea of a sportsman artist is almost as offensive as the idea of a sportsman clergyman, it would seem to them that a new doctrine was preached as heretical as that of the Pre-Raphaelites in 1849. And yet nothing can be more certain than the danger to the artist of pursuits as brutal as the killing of helpless creatures for amusement. The retention of such practices among men who live by and for spiritual and intellectual pursuits is the most serious single obstacle in the way of a more healthy development of art. The artist must learn to live in the spirit—the painter to live for the sake of his paintings, and to cease longing for the money which will give time and opportunity for coarse amusements.

RUSSELL STURGIS.

Scott's Best Works.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

The selection given by a correspondent of THE SATURDAY REVIEW for the reading of Scott's works by a young person is a good one. I should suggest that the historical novels be taken up first and those connected by periods of history be read together, viz.: "Ivanhoe" and "The Talisman," "Anne of Geierstein" and "Quentin Durward," "Woodstock" and "Old Mortality." I could name others, but these are sufficient. At this time, when "Via Crucis" is being greatly enjoyed, I should add to the list "Count Robert of Paris."

JOSEPH PARKER.

The Autobiography of "The Modern London Preacher."

"There are three things I most dislike men to know about me, my own self and my things—which for ignorance of them is the easiest cause for him. But the knowing, better or ultimately and the expressing again, both only are two different things. Here we have not a memoir, but an autobiography, what, par excellence, concerns the man; and there is no task so hard. Most men could as easily describe the seventh heaven.

We lay our ear to Dr. Parker's short, though discursive preface, and listen for the key. We soon suspect it is not the key of autobiography. We detect a dominant note of reminiscence and memories of others. There are many such books to-day, and many that are at least but half light, and serve neither the purpose of biography nor of autobiography, but merge a prurient desire to know more of the out of a man's coat than of the spirit of his mind. And in this preface, before we have time to cry "Hold!" the fanciful doctor has us on Lake Leman, and is talking to us of Calvin, and Rousseau, and Voltaire, and Mme. de Sibel, and Byron. Why not of "Claire" too? She was with Byron there. Doctor, doctor, do observe your own dictum, and "preserve the limited line of autobiography."

Hexham is, as Dr. Parker claims, an interesting place, interesting for the antiquity of the abbey, and he was born "under its shadow" in 1830. But he also claims that it is "no mean city." Hitherto it is just as a city that it has seemed to us mean, extremely so, as it stands there, a little, gray, cold cluster of houses on its bleak and bare Northumbrian moor. Still, the abbey existed beyond Charlemagne and all that, and "invests all its people with an indisputable right to be in an illustrious line." "The heredity," says the doctor, "that goes back but a space of twelve days may have a mushroom flavor, whereas the heredity which goes back 1,200 years, and even then was venerable, covers all yesterday's things with the shamefacedness of conscious inexperience." You do not seriously mean to say, doctor, that this is the sort of thing you call autobiography? Well, we shall make every allowance, for it is, as we have said, not a task for every man.

We repudiate any charge of a hasty incredulity, and feel relieved by the doctor's assurance that he is "not writing fiction," for human experience in the degree to which it is unusual and unconvincing is proportionately valueless for moral ends, and we should be gratified to see the "life" of a preacher of Dr. Parker's notoriety serving a high ethical purpose.

After relating some of the doings and sayings of the plain people of Hexham, in which his own part, as a schoolboy, is three Latin words, he reminds us that, though such a community is apt to be "narrow of criticism, it takes many men to make all men." And in this first chapter of "Early Memories," he transports us, for illustration, to the Valley of Chamounix, where "the oleander is one world and the ice another, yet the two worlds are one." Quite so; the valley in which Shelley wrote his immortal hymn; the "green vales and icy cliffs" which Coleridge saw, and sang of, and seeing, "awhile bowed low in adoration." Doctor, you have scored. Thank you for the occasion, though you do not mention them, of reading those two divine hymns once more.

At Chapter V. we come to the heading "Inner Life." It is an early date for that specific subject. He has become a preacher, at the age of twenty-two. With nothing more than a hint of such a possibility, and no information as to preparation for such a calling, we are suddenly asked to consider him on his way to London to preach in Whitefield's Chapel. It was a hit. "In this way," says the doctor, "I passed into the Christian ministry and took my place among such men (among others) as Adam Clark, Morley Punshon, Richard Baxter, Andrew Fuller, C. H. Spurgeon." Then follows a statement of his confession of faith, in which there is a good deal of mere rhetorical bounce; where we look for one glimpse of the real man in vain; essentially a pulpit utterance, characterised by the unguardedness too common in such a place. In such personal statements there is a gauge of expression by which propriety and good taste may be observed. If there is any theme on which to carry one's heart on one's sleeve gives offense, religion is that theme; and the more so should it chance to be done with a perceptible flourish. We must bring such statements to the test of human experience, and subject them to the touch of consistency. Above all, they must bear the stamp of absolute sincerity. Dr. Parker must know that there are many intelligent and earnest men who doubt those things he designates "the holy verities of the Christian religion"; and must know, too, that these men can only be reached by an intelligent sympathy with their doubts on the one hand and a reasonable presentation of truth on the other. But what may they hope for from one whose "central faith in the Triune God, in the atonement of Christ, in the Deity of the Holy Ghost, in the immortality of the soul, in the inspiration and authority of the Holy Scripture, has never for a moment been shaken"?

What question can they ask after such a statement but, Has this writer ever really thought of these things? The application of such a testimony is beyond the domain of human experience. Doubt is a condition of knowledge. The men who have formed are the men who serve the world. "Without doubt," said the Sermon of the week, "there is no infidel." Dr. Parker calls "doubt a misreading of the heart's life," and the "Sermon of the week" we regret that we do not heard whether he ever laughed or "cried, or sighed, or suffered.

We deny, therefore, dismiss the thought of autobiography and take the book for what it really is. The Doctor speaks with contempt of the practice of keeping a diary, while confessing "that probably no one has commenced more and finished fewer diaries than himself." He has not the diarian mind. We do not think that method is his forte, or exactness of thought one of his distinguishing qualities. It is very likely that the Doctor headed his chapters before they were written, and wrote up to the headings as best he could. There is one on "Heresies and Heretics." We had thought the words all but obsolete: at any rate we do not think Dr. Parker is much of a heresy hunter. It is poor game at the best; it brings neither gear nor glory. Next to self-knowledge perhaps the hardest thing to-day is to know a heresy when you see it. It requires a special equipment to make the hunt at all successful.

The book parts almost literally in two with the end of a touching chapter, entitled "An Irreparable Loss." The critic must drop the pen before such a sorrow as this.

In the second part of the book we have papers on "Author and Publisher," "Critics and Their Ways," controversies, and some ministerial gossip. Then follow reminiscences of Gladstone, Beecher, Norman Macleod, Dale, Huxley, and others. Dr. Parker is on very good terms with the publishers, and has some very pointed remarks on their relations with authors; though we think that probably the young author of to-day is a nearer approach to the simple manufacturer for profit than he is given credit for.

In "Controversial Reminiscences" the Doctor has an episode in a discussion with George Jacob Holyoke—with whom he deals generously, as who would not that knows him?—in which George Jacob came off second best, by an answer which the Doctor gave him, and which he attributes directly to the Holy Ghost. He says of this: "Again and again during these forty years I have looked at that reply and I indorse it now as the sublimest answer that God Himself could give to the superficial and impious criticism of unbelieving men." Mr. Holyoke is, of course, neither impious nor superficial, and between his mental methods and those of Dr. Parker, the difference is as great as it can well be.

Anecdote enters into the plan of the book, but it is not a strong part. Dr. Parker has not a fine eye for what makes good anecdote—his sense of humor is not apparent—and in most that we have, he himself is the radiant object, and this—were they never so good—is monotonous.

For the chapter entitled "Mr. Gladstone" we give the author thanks and praise. It is altogether admirable; highly, though not excessively, appreciative, and subdued to due proportion in eulogy. Its style, though savoring a little of the platform, is exceptionally excellent and effective. In the book generally the style is not subdued, but sadly lacking in moderation. Excessive statement and hyperbole are largely relied on for what force is in it, and are so pervasive as to become at last a weariness. The absence of literary allusion is so marked that one wonders what books, if any, the Doctor is indebted to. There is nothing in the volume to indicate even an acquaintance, much less an appreciation of, any name in any literature.

Dr. Parker's place in London and in English Non-Conformity is an important one, and he has thus undoubtedly come into contact with men of all ranks and professions. His "preacher's life" reaches nearly the half century: but we are bound to conclude that the mere bustle and business which are the bane of the clerical profession to-day have prevented the growth of those habits of close observation and introspection which go toward the making of the autobiographer, and that he has not acquired very largely the gift of looking through every other man with that "sharpened, sly inspection" by which the fine shades of character and personality are detected. There are portraits and pictures in the volume, and the book is handsomely made.

From Modern Bookbinding.

Hold the book with its back on a smooth or covered table; let the front board down, then the other, holding the leaves in one hand while you open a few leaves at the back, then a few at the front, and so on, alternately opening back and front, gently pressing open the sections till you reach the centre of the volume. Do this two or three times, and you will obtain the best results. Open the volume violently or carelessly in any one place and you will likely break the back and cause a start in the leaves. Never force the back of the book.

A connoisseur many years ago, an excellent customer of mine, who thought he knew perfectly how to handle books, came into my office when I had an expensive binding just brought from the bindery ready to be sent home; he, before my eyes, took hold of the volume and tightly holding the leaves in each hand, instead of allowing them free play, violently opened it in the centre and exclaimed: "How beautifully your bindings open!" I almost fainted. He had broken the back of the volume and it had to be rebound.

The Badminton Magazine, formerly published by Longmans, Green & Co., will be brought out in the future by Mr. Heinemann of London. Mr. Alfred E. T. Watson remains, as editor.

TWO MUSICAL BOOKS.

"The Love Letters of a Musician."*

In an attractive volume, save for its arrestingly ugly cover, which might in itself almost prejudice possible readers against the book, comes a story told in letters, in the most poetical and beautiful prose imaginable—a book which, once read, will be taken up again and again for the beauty of its language and imagery.

The story appeared last year as one of the issues of the Roycroft Press, and was so successful that the present revised edition, with a New York imprint, appeared a few weeks ago, which has, we believe, already gone into a second edition.

The arrangement of the story, divided as it is into twenty-eight short chapters, each consisting of a single letter, with a title peculiarly appropriate to its contents, and each prefaced by a bit of music, which also indicates the sentiment of the chapter, is particularly striking. The book could not in any way be called a novel, its style being too dreamy, too suggestive of the essay, but in so far as a story is told or suggested, the little book with its subtile musical atmosphere is a far more successful musical story than any we can remember.

The book is one which may make its way slowly indeed, but once known is sure to be taken up frequently, and so far shares the charm of a good essay that a paragraph, a page, or a chapter can be read at any time for the very charm of its style and the beauty of its expression.

The story is that of a young violinist, who, having been refused by the girl he has so long loved, yet has the feeling about their relations that "if there is a little of the bitter in it, there is much more that is sweet and good and beautiful, like you." The girl has promised to be his friend all her life, though they should never meet; but she was always so vividly present to her young lover that in writing to her he seemed to be doing little more than talking to himself.

> To write as if to a sweetheart, to one who has promised to be my friend, but why need it matter if the letters are not sent? I shall please myself by dreaming that they reach you, even if they are posted in the strangest of places, my trunk! I am going to cut a slit in the side like a real letter box, and put a box inside to hold them. * * * And always, dear, I shall love you, though you do not write, nor know. * * * You are not for me—a wandering musician, with only a violin between him and poverty. Hardship was never meant for such as you; and it would be that with me, try as I would to shield you.

And so the letters are written, and being posted in such a strange receptacle, have a certain charming quality which they might have missed had they been intended to actually reach the girl of whom her lover writes: "I see you in your different moods; you have as many as an April day." The charm of the book is so delicately beautiful that extracts taken out of their appropriate setting in some way fail to convey their full meaning and effectiveness.

The second letter, for instance, has as its musical motive a bar from Raff's "Cavatina," and we find the young poet writing: "You asked me to play to you and I chose the 'Cavatina.' It was not Raff who thrilled you that night—it was I. My story was in the music—all the love and longing and waiting, and I thought you understood. Your lips were parted, your eyes were shining. Ah, love, had I dared to claim you at the moment, you were mine!" A Beethoven adagio furnishes the musical setting for a beautiful chapter, "The Sea and a Shell."

> Beside the vastness of the sea one's little self sinks into nothingness, and with it one's little troubles. What room is there for a human sorrow beside anything so great as this? * * * Still, it is only through suffering that we grow, and when we suffer enough we are great. When we can express it, we are artists, and when we cannot, we are only poor, human children, stricken dumb with grief. Do you remember Abelard and Heloise? He was going to reach a fame too great for her to share, and he lives only through the world's memory of that wronged woman's love. * * * How much of the sonorous glory of Beethoven belongs to Adelaide? I believe that all of it was hers after he began to love her, just as all my music shall be yours. Love makes a tide in the soul—the ebb is minor, the flow major, and the whole a symphony.

"A Dream Sweetheart" is equally fine. The young violinist, in his quiet room, had begun playing the things "you like best, and fancying you were here to listen." In his imagination he pictured them having tea together, and afterward, installed in his easiest chair, pictured her listening while he played

> The "Hungarian Dances," because you like the swing, and dash, and color. You are a barbarian in some ways, dear. And then the softer, sweeter things. Muting the strings, I played "Legende" for you. I remember you said once that a muted violin sounded like a lover's voice, and I wanted to tell you that it sounded as a lover felt.
>
> In "Sunset on the Marsh" the whole description is so exquisite that part of it cannot be resisted.
>
> The tall nodding plumes of grass and iris were touched with an exquisite light; the circling swallows were hovering on silent, expectant wing, and the pools of water were blood-red. * * * The air was opalescent and shimmering, and with a sudden flash of light the pools became gold where they had been blood-red. There was a burst of flame that would be music to finer ears than ours, and then the marsh trembled into shadow, then into twilight, and finally into dark.

And so the book goes on, from one beautiful chapter to another, until finally, through alternating moods of deep sorrow and fresh courage, we reach the twenty-seventh—with its motto from the "Rubaiyat"—"The Angel of the Darker Drink," which is introduced by a bar from Verdi's "Miserere." Here the end of all things seemed to be reached, the young musician ed Richard killed as many enemies with his own hand as Forrest." No less than thirty men met him in hand-to-hand combats, twenty-nine horses were killed under him, and he was severely wounded a number of times.

He was strictly moral in every particular, with the exception of swearing, in which he indulged in a most violent manner when in paroxysms of rage or excitement. At other times his speech was clear, and he would not allow any questionable stories to be related in his presence. He never used liquor except in cases of sickness or injury, and did not use tobacco in any form. He had a profound respect for religion, always had preaching at his headquarters on Sundays, prayers in his tent at night, and before going into battle he would ask the Chaplain to evoke God's blessing on their cause. He despised cowards, and many good stories are related by his companions in arms which show his absolute indifference to exposure. One which he related of himself shows the reputation which he had secured for bravery. He was following his men off the field at Cowan's Station, where the enemy was too strong for him, when a woman came out of a shanty by the roadside, and, shaking her clinched hand passionately at the General, she shrieked: "Why don't you turn and fight, you cowardly rascal? If Forrest were here he'd make you fight."

The war over, he labored to the day of his death for a union, heart to heart, between the North and the South. At a reunion of his veterans in 1876 he said:

> Through the years of peace you have been good citizens, and now that we are again united under the old flag, I love it as I did in the days of my youth; and I feel sure you love it also; and I am sure that I but express your feelings when I say that should occasion offer and our country demand our services, you would follow my lead to battle under that proud banner as ever you followed me in our late great war.

He gave freely of his private fortune for the support of his disabled veterans and the widows and children of those who had perished. Upon his death, in 1877, at the early age of fifty-six, as many mourned the loss of a generous friend as those who mourned the passing of a great Captain. Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, on being asked whom he considered the greatest soldier of the war, replied: "Forrest; who, had he had the advantages of a thorough military training, would have been the great central figure of the war." Gen. Wolseley, Commander in Chief of the British Army, wrote of him:

> Forrest had no knowledge of military science nor of military history to teach him how he should act, what objective he should aim at, and what plans he should make to secure it. He was entirely ignorant of what other Generals in previous wars had done under very similar circumstances. What he lacked in book lore was to a large extent compensated for by soundness of his judgment upon all occasions, and by his power of thinking and reasoning with great rapidity under fire, and under all circumstances of surrounding peril or of great mental or bodily fatigue. Panic found no resting place in that calm brain of his, and no danger, no risk appalled that dauntless spirit. Inspired with true military instincts, he was verily nature's soldier. It would be difficult in all history to find a more varied career than his, a man who from the greatest poverty, without any learning, and by sheer force of character alone, became the great fighting leader of fighting men, a man in whom an extraordinary mind instinct and sound, common sense supplied to a very large extent his unfortunate want of military education.

Dr. Wyeth's book is as interesting as a romance. It is a comprehensive, admirably sustained narrative, and is fascinating in every paragraph. Unlike the biography of Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson, recently prepared by Col. Henderson, which was simply an analysis of a great military career, the present volume is a labor of love, undertaken not only to clear the reputation of a great leader of many unjust aspersions, but also to put the man before his countrymen in his true light, not only as a private citizen, but as a great soldier. Now that the bitterness of that fratricidal struggle has disappeared, we can see Forrest animated with a loyalty to his convictions, fighting to the last with desperate energy and intensity. His superb character, his history, and his fame are part of the glory of our common country. Dr. Wyeth's splendid tribute has shed much light on the obscure features of Forrest's life, and earned for the author the thanks of all students of American history.

Questions and Answers.

"T. R.," New York City: "In what book does the character of 'Sherlock Holmes' appear? Does he appear in more than one book?"

Dr. A. Conan Doyle first introduced the character of Sherlock Holmes in "A Study in Scarlet." Holmes next appeared in "The Sign of the Four." In 1892 Doyle's "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" was published, and in 1894 his "Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes," both published by Harper & Brothers, at $1.50 each.

"T. Bruce Esty," 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City: "A recent book on the Philippine question, not mentioned in THE SATURDAY'S list, is 'The American Press on the Philippines,' which is issued by me, at $1.50."

"E.," New York City: "I have Irving's 'Sketch Book,' printed by C. S. Van Winkle, 101 Greenwich Street, 1819, and Hawthorne's 'Marble Faun' in two volumes. Ticknor & Fields, Boston, 1860. Are they first editions, and if so, what is their value?"

The "Sketch Book" appeared in seven parts in 1819 and 1820, and in original condition is very rare. A bound set brought last Spring, $47.35, which was too much. In 1897 a fair set, but a little stained, fetched $17.50. If our correspondent's "Marble Faun" has additional conclusion, pages 284-286, it is the second issue. The first edition, first issue, fetched last season $6.75, and in 1896 $6.25.

"M. J. Ely," Passaic, Penn.: "I am in the midst of a search for the first publication in book form of the poem 'Hohenlinden,' by Thomas Campbell. I have a copy of the poem in a book published in Philadelphia in 1809, but I am sure that this is not the first publication. Can you help me?"

Campbell's poem was published in the Poetical Register for 1803, and in the Edinburgh Annual Register for 1809. It was published in book form in 1809 in "Specimens of the British Poets," by Thomas Campbell, London, 1809, seven volumes.

"Subscriber," Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Will you kindly inform me if the Rev. Dr. Hall, who died recently, was the author of the book 'Lectures on Nursing,' published by Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, in 1882? If he was not the author, who was?"

The author was Mrs. Lucy Hall Gaston, who died in Atlanta, Ga., in 1887. She was not related to the Rev. Dr. Hall.

"Subscriber," Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Kindly let me know the value of 'Saul and Samuel at Endor or the New Wales of Salvation and Service,' also 'A Brief Account of R. P.; His Missale Vindicatum or Vindication of the Roman Mass,' by Dan. Brevint, Oxford, 1674."

Old religious books, such as the present one, have little value.

William F. Beller, 55 East One Hundred and Twelfth Street, New York City: "I am anxious to secure (either by purchase or exchange) three sermons: first, sermon preached by the Rev. Dr. Henry Anthor in 1845 at the fiftieth anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of St. Mark's Church in 1799; third, another sermon by the same divine delivered in 1800 at the service in memory of the Rev. John Callahan."

F. J. R., New York City: "Has this book any value? 'The Complete Works in Philosophy, Politics, and Morals of the Late Dr. Ben. Franklin,' London, 1806, three volumes."

It is worth about $1.50.

Samuel A. Boyle, 354 City Hall, Philadelphia: "In answer to the inquiry of Joseph L. B. Mayer in your issue of the 2d of December, I wish to say that the first edition of 'Milkanwatha,' a parody on 'Hiawatha,' was written by a man calling himself Marc Antony Henderson, and was published in Cincinnati about 1855. It was out of print for a good many years, but was reprinted about ten or fifteen years ago; but I do not know by whom. I think an order left at any good old book store would secure it."

Eugene Toomey, Stamford, Conn.: "Is the 'Memoirs of Great Britain and Ireland,' by Sir John Dalrymple, Edinburgh, 1771, of any value?"

Its value is slight.

E. Nash, New York City: "I would be grateful for any information you can give me about the 'Harleian Miscellany.'"

When Edward Harley, second Earl of Oxford, died, in 1741, the magnificent library formed by his father, (Robert Harley, the first Earl,) and greatly added to by himself, passed into the hands of Thomas Osborne, the bookseller. Osborne engaged William Oldys, the Earl's literary secretary, to compile a catalogue of the library, which was published (with an introduction by Dr. Johnson) in 1743-5. Under the title of the "Harleian Miscellany" a selection of rare pamphlets and tracts found in the library was made by Oldys and printed in eight volumes, London, 1744-6. The best edition is that edited by Thomas Park, London, 1808-13, in ten volumes. A "Collection of Voyages and Travels," compiled from the same source, appeared in two volumes, London, 1745. The Harley manuscripts were sold to the nation in 1753 for £10,000, and are now in the British Museum. A catalogue of them was printed in 1759-63, another in 1808-12.

William Alden, Brooklyn: "Have these books any value: Cotton Mather's 'Magnalia,' London, 1702; Thomas Mather's 'Seasonable Testimony to Good Order in the Churches of the Faithful,' by Good Order in the Churches of the Faithful, by Good Order, by D. JAMES D. DANA.

The Perfect Man of Science and His Biography.*

The volume which the President of the Johns Hopkins University devotes to James Dwight Dana is full of human and scientific interest. The canvas had to be a broad one, for how otherwise could we understand the man, who was scientific explorer, mineralogist, geologist, zoologist, writer, editor, and teacher? Consider only that Dana worked on almost unceasingly for sixty years. Think of the long interval between Dana's first edition of his "Mineralogy," which appeared in 1837, when he was twenty-four, and his final revision of his "Manual of Geology" in 1895. The bibliography at the conclusion of the volume shows how wonderful was his productivity.

The subject of the memoir, James Dwight Dana, was born in Utica Feb. 12, 1813. His early education took place at the Utica High School. From Utica Dana went to Yale College in 1830, attracted there, it is believed, by the reputation of Prof. Benjamin Silliman. He entered as a sophomore and was graduated in 1833. In his senior year he asked for the position of instructor of midshipmen in the United States Navy. The appointment came, and he reported for service aboard the United States ship of the line Delaware, commanded by Capt. Henry E. Ballard. The vessel sailed Aug. 14, 1833, with Dana as instructor of mathematics. Cherbourg, Gibraltar, Genoa, Leghorn, Florence, Naples, the islands of the Mediterranean, and Greece were visited, and finally the home passage was made, and New York was reached Dec. 10, 1834. The ascent of Mount Vesuvius left its impress on Dana's mind, for he wrote an account of it for The American Journal of Science, and this was "the first of a long series of communications from his pen, by which this journal was enriched." In after years, when he visited the Hawaiian Islands, he formulated his studies on volcanoes and geological phenomena.

Dana now became Prof. Silliman's assistant in the chemical laboratory at New Haven. The duties were not onerous and there was opportunity for study. There were fair collections which could be examined. It was during this period that Dana produced his treatise on mineralogy, which work was to be augmented and revised at intervals during the remainder of his life. Soon came Dana's greatest opportunity, his appointment to the United States exploring expedition which, under the command of Capt. Wilkes, investigated the coasts and islands of the Pacific Ocean between 1838 and 1842. The President of the Johns Hopkins University is among the first who gives due credit to John N. Reynolds, who was the true projector of this expedition. "His name was dropped out of the roll of famous Americans, or, strictly speaking, it has never been there, and yet he deserves commemoration because for a decade or more he was indefatigable in promoting this great naval undertaking." In 1828 Reynolds addressed the Speaker of the House on the subject of a naval expedition for purposes of exploration in the Pacific Ocean and South Sea. Constantly rebuffed, he never lost courage. Finally the scientific men of the country took up the subject, and at last the Government consented to send out an expedition, (1838.) There was some discussion as to the choice of a commander, and finally Lieut. Charles Wilkes was selected. How Dana became a member of the expedition is not exactly known. It is probable that it was due to Dr. Asa Gray. Dana in 1836 received a visit from Reynolds, and was urged by Reynolds to accept the situation. He gave no definite answer, but later accepted the position of a general scientific expert when asked to do so by Asa Gray. Julian Hawthorne in his biography of Nathaniel Hawthorne tells us that his father wanted to go as "historiographer." Dana's ship was the Peacock, and he was the "mineralogist." The author gives the details of the expedition, the route of the ship, and all the necessary information. Dana's own correspondence and Wilkes's volume furnish the data, but many new letters are added. Most interesting are those addressed to Asa Gray and to members of the Dana family.

On his return, Dana at once began that work descriptive of the researches. In the Washington of rather more than half a century ago books of standard science may be said, in a measure, to have had no existence. There was no Smithsonian, no great public library to be consulted. There were obstacles and annoyances to which the scientific corps were exposed in fulfilling the duties of that publication with which they were charged. Congress was narrow-minded, and adopted "a benighted policy in respect to publication." Certain members of the Library Committee of Congress wanted that only "the discoveries" should be published. Capt. Wilkes showed an inclination to follow instructions in their narrowest interpretation. Here is what seems to be an amusing incident to-day, but one which must have horrified the scientific corps of the expedition:

> For example, he (Wilkes) objected to the recognition of European names for the zoophytes and to Dana's thorough recasting, in the light of his own researches, of the classification of genera and species. Dana appealed to Tappan, who reluctantly yielded the point in dispute and gave free scope to the author, but it was not brought to this conclusion until he received Dana's downright refusal to go on with his duties unless the stringency was relaxed.

Some of the correspondence between Tappan and Dana, at the time, [illegible] interested. "I think you shall not trouble with the settling," writes Mr. Tappan; and Dana writes to Asa Gray: "It has been said that some of the Congressmen will, or may, object to the book on the ground of the matter not appearing to be of the expedition's collection—'too complete!'" But for all Wilkes's quarterdeck ideas of science, Dana held him in the highest respect, and wrote to Gray that "the navy does not contain a more daring explorer or driving officer."

In 1844, some months after his return from the Pacific, Prof. Dana married, and after that New Haven became his permanent abode. In time he was a professor at Yale, and his inaugural address is of Feb. 18, 1856. The duties of the position might have been engrossing, but his energy and industry were unsurpassed. He supervised The American Journal of Science, and here his task was endless. As an author his work was continuous. "The three great reports, the successive editions of the 'Mineralogy,' the 'Manual of Geology,' the smaller 'Geology,' and later the works on 'Volcanoes and Coral Islands,' besides numerous contributions to the current journals, are the proofs of his unceasing industry." All this told told, however, on the man, and from time to time Dana broke down under the strain. In 1859 he went to Europe, and was in Switzerland in 1860. After 1880 he was compelled to seek temporary release from college duties, and in 1890 he relinquished them.

Mr. Daniel C. Gilman would have left much that is vague in relation to Dana had he not given us in an admirable manner an insight into what were the religious convictions of the subject of his memoir. Dana was little inclined "toward denominational tenets, or inclined to philosophical and ecclesiastical discussions. * * * No one was ever admitted to his intimacy, on shipboard or on land, as a visitor to his family, or as a correspondent, without discovering the simplicity, the honesty, and the beauty of his Christian character." It must be remembered that forty years ago science occupied the place of lower importance in colleges. Doctrinaires looked on science at first with indifference, then with apprehension. It was rank heresy to doubt the meaning of "day" as interpreted by the Scriptures. It was twenty-four hours, nor more nor less. If there were marine fossils, they taught of the universal deluge. All nature's cataclysms came about when Adam ate apples, and the first earthquake followed the crucifixion. One minister said, according to Dana, "that if it was believed that animals died before Adam's fall, the Bible all goes to naught." Dana's comment was: "Funny, that the sin of Adam should have killed those old trilobites." Dana, with due reverence to his Maker, took the attitude of an uncompromising defender of science. Slowly but surely we are conscious to-day that save for the narrow-minded there can be nothing dangerous in study, no matter what is the topic. Nevertheless, the President of Johns Hopkins University quotes from a religious journal of long-continued authority this passage, printed some two years ago: "Science is the slave of the lamp to the Aladdin of materialism." "Dana was never afraid of the truth, never afraid of inquiry, never afraid to abandon or to modify his previous opinions if his reason was convinced."

Honored and beloved, certain to hold a high place in the ranks of America's leading men of science, James Dwight Dana died April 14, 1895, when he was eighty-two years old.

The President of the Johns Hopkins University has filled the task of biographer in the very best manner. The style of the writing is distinguished for its clearness and impressiveness, and the details of Dana's life are carefully presented. In a graceful preface, acknowledgments are made to the assistance given the writer from many authoritative sources.

Kaiser Wilhelm's Contribution to a Book.

Watson R. Sperry, at one time editor of The Evening Post of this city, and afterward editor and owner of The Wilmington (Del.) News, but who has long been living in Dresden, writes from Dresden to a recent number of The Wilmington News:

> "William II. has just made an interesting contribution to a book which is in course of preparation by a Leipsic publisher, and which is to be called the 'Golden Book of the German People at the End of the Century.' This is what the German Emperor writes:
>
> "'By God's grace is the King: therefore also he is responsible only to the Lord alone. He is permitted to choose his way and his works only under this point of view. This terribly heavy responsibility, which the King bears for his people, gives to him also a claim upon the loyal co-operation of his subjects. Therefore every one of the people must be penetrated with a conviction that he for himself is co-responsible (mitverantwortlich) for the welfare of the fatherland.
>
> "'WILHELM I. R.'"
>
> "'Mitverantwortlich' is a difficult word to understand as it is used by the Emperor. It evidently does not mean 'co-responsible' in the sense of equally or likewise responsible to God with the King, because the Emperor's proposition is that the King alone is chosen by God, and is therefore answerable to God. It probably means that all the people are responsible as compared with each other, each in his own station and degree, for the welfare of the Fatherland, and that this joint responsibility of the people is in a sense taken up by and concentrated in the person of the King, who is answerable to God both for himself and also for all the people. The King alone is responsible to God and the King is responsible to no one but to God; but, by virtue of thus being chosen by God as King, the King has the right to claim and to expect that all the people will cheerfully and helpfully go along the way which the King, under his sense of a special selection by God and of his personal responsibility to God, may point out."

JULIA WARD HOWE.

Her Reminiscences, Amplified, Now Ready in Book Form.*

When it was announced some little time ago that these reminiscences were about to appear, the general feeling was that they would be found unusually interesting. As is well known, portions of the volume came out in The Atlantic for the current year, and were found to be, as had been expected, very charming, and they are even more so now, on the appearance of the completed work. Covering so long a period—nearly eighty years—and touching so wide a circle—the fashionable life of New York in its best set in her early days, and later, meeting intimately the literary, philanthropic, artistic, and musical people, not only of Boston, but of all parts of the world—the record of a life filled to the brim with so many and such absorbing interests could hardly fail to attract and hold the attention of most of us.

Mrs. Howe's style is charming, possessing, as she does, a strong underlying sense of humor, so that she can appreciate and tell a good story, even though partly directed against herself. Then, too, her life, which has not been without its great trials, has, on the whole, been a remarkably happy one. Another great charm—common, indeed, to all autobiography—apart from the personality and life history of its writer—is the new light thrown upon the celebrities met and known more or less intimately. The point of view being so unlike, we get varying impressions of people and places, and from numerous such recorded impressions get remarkably accurate composite photographs of the men and women of a past age. Mrs. Howe, whom, by the way, Dr. Holmes used to call "Madame Comment," first rapidly reviews our closing century, which she thinks pre-eminently worthy of a record:

> It has seen the culmination of prophecies, the birth of new hopes, and a marvelous multiplication both of the ideas which promote human happiness and of the resources which enable man to make himself master of the world. * * * To attain instantaneous communication with our friends across oceans and through every continent; to command locomotion whose swiftness changes the relations of space and time; to steal from nature her deeper secrets, and to make disease itself the minister of cure; to compel the sun to keep for us a record of scenes and faces, of the great shows and pageants of time, of the perishable forms which charm and beauty which deserves to remain in the world's possession—these are some of the achievements of our nineteenth century. Even more wonderful than these may we esteem the moral progress of the race, the decline of political and religious enmities, the growth of good-will and natural understanding between nations, the waning of popular superstition, the spread of civic ideas, the recognition of the mutual obligations of classes, the advancement of woman to dignity in the household and efficiency in the State—all this our century has seen and approved.

Mrs. Howe having contributed very materially toward the success of many of these latter movements—those helping on the moral welfare of our race—it is particularly appropriate at the end of the century to see just what her efforts have been which alone would give these reminiscences great value were they not so interesting in themselves.

Julia Ward was born in New York in May, 1819, coming of good old American ancestry. Her father was of Rhode Island birth; his grandfather, Gov. Samuel Ward of Rhode Island, was a member of the First and Second Continental Congresses; a son, Mrs. Howe's grandfather, was a Lieutenant Colonel in the Revolutionary War, and her grandmother on the Ward side was a daughter of Gov. Greene of Rhode Island, while Mrs. Howe's own mother was a grand-niece of Gen. Francis Marion.

Mrs. Howe's earliest recollection is "of a fine house on the Bowling Green, a region of high fashion in those days. * * * Our favorite resort was the Battery, where the flagstaff used in the Revolution was still to be seen. The fort at Castle Garden had already been converted into a pleasure resort, where fireworks and ices might be enjoyed."

Mrs. Ward's brothers were pupils at the famous Round Hill school; her mother, who had been prominent in society, inherited from her mother "a taste for intellectual pursuits. She was especially fond of poetry. * * * One of her own poems was printed in a periodical of her own time, and preserved in Griswold's 'Female Poets of America.'" Mrs. Ward, who married at sixteen, died in the twenty-seventh year of her age, the blow being so severe that Mr. Ward sold the beautiful Bowling Green house, with new furniture which had been ordered for his wife and never uncovered, the family removing to Bond Street, then the upper extremity of New York City.

It would be most interesting to linger over these early New York days—the school life; the early musical stars the young girl heard—Malibran, then known as Signorina Garcia; Mrs. Wood, whose voice "possessed a liquid and fluent flexibility quite unlike the curious staccato and tremolo effects so much in favor to-day." A little later, however, the religious people of the time set their forces against the drama in every form. The destruction by fire of the first Bowery theatre and of a well-known theatre in Richmond, Va., was followed by sermons which reflected severely upon the frequenters of such wicked places, both sad events being called judgments upon the wickedness both of the theatre and of its patrons.

The second chapter is devoted to literary New York—to Robert Sands, the author of "Yamoden"; his sister Julia, who, having written a biographical sketch of her brother, was spoken of as "a literary woman," as well as to William Cullen Bryant, Fitz-Greene Halleck, and Charles King, who edited a daily paper, The New York American, in which Mrs. Howe's early ventures appeared. Mr. King, who afterward became President of Columbia College, and his brother James, Mr. Ward's junior partner, were sons of the well-known Rufus King, whom Mrs. Howe also remembers. She also frequently met Prof. Anthon, Lorenzo De Ponte, Washington Irving, and many others equally well known; writing also of the usages of society in those early days, the chapter on the latter being most interesting. Silver forks were used only on state occasions. "My father sometimes admonished my maternal grandmother not to put her knife into her mouth. In her youth every one used the knife in this way." The ladies of this period wore, both Winter and Summer, finely embroidered white cambric gowns, and their morocco slippers, pelisses, often of rose pink or blue, were worn in cold weather. Mrs. Howe remembers Mrs. Astor's describing the charming appearance of two brides, twin sisters, who appeared at church "dressed in pelisses of white merino, trimmed with chinchilla, with caps of the same fur."

Dr. Cogswell, coming to pass some months with the Ward family, became interested in the little Julia, and helped her with her studies, particularly with her German. Mr. Ward was a very wealthy man for that time, and had a fine house containing a spacious and well-filled art gallery, and his eldest son, Samuel, returning from Europe, bringing with him a fine library, a study was added whose walls were entirely filled by the collection. Mrs. Howe says:

> I lived, indeed, much in my books, and my sphere of thought was a good deal enlarged by the foreign literature, German, French, and Italian, with which I became familiar. * * * My brother * * * often arranged musical parties at our house, at which trios of Beethoven, Mozart, and Schubert were given. His wit, social talent, and literary taste opened a new world to me, and enabled me to share some of the best results of his long residence in Europe.

Mrs. Howe says that her father's influence went far, in the financial troubles which followed Andrew Jackson's refusal to renew the charter of the Bank of the United States, toward keeping New York from following the example of several other States in becoming bankrupt and repudiating the obligations incurred by their bonds. Mr. Ward even undertook that his firm should negotiate with English houses a loan to carry New York over this period, which was successfully done.

Mr. Ward's death took place when Mrs. Howe was in her twenty-first year, and occurring at a time when he was involved in large transactions, which had to be closed at a great loss, the fortune he was able to leave his children was not large.

A succeeding chapter is devoted to Sam Ward, as he was generally called—Mrs. Howe's eldest brother—who married the eldest daughter of the Astor family, Mrs. Howe, still Miss Ward, and one of her sisters being among the bridal party. In describing the festivities which followed this, she gives us a pleasant glimpse into the New York society of that day.

In 1841 the Wards passed the Summer in a cottage near Boston, where Longfellow and Charles Sumner were among their intimate friends. The latter often spoke of the wonderful results in the case of Laura Bridgman, the result being that a party was formed to visit the Perkins Institution.

> Dr. Howe was absent when we arrived. * * * Mr. Sumner, looking out of the window, said, "Oh, here comes Howe on his black horse!" I looked out also and beheld a noble rider on a noble steed. The acquaintance thus formed rapidly developed into love and marriage with one of whom Mr. Sanborn has written: "It has fallen to my lot to know, both in youth and in age, several of the most romantic characters of our century, and among them one of the most romantic was certainly the hero of these pages. That he was indeed a hero the events of his life sufficiently declare."

Dr. Howe was his wife's senior by a score of years, but the marriage was an extremely happy one. Mrs. Howe tells us that a full biography of the great philanthropist will be published later by his children; in the meantime his best monument is the successful efforts he made toward obtaining

> For the blind, an education which would render them self-supporting; for the idiot, the training of his poor and maimed capabilities; for the insane and the criminal, the watchful and redemptive tutelage of society. In the world as he would have had it, there should have been neither paupers nor outcasts.

Mrs. Howe's marriage was followed by a tour of Europe, where—both from Dr. Howe's fame, and having good letters—they met every one worth meeting. Returning to Boston in 1844, they at once took a prominent part in all the movements of the day, Dr. Howe sharing the educational views of Horace Mann and the political convictions of Charles Sumner. Mrs. Howe reminds us of the change between her position as "a family idol and the superior young lady of an admiring circle to that of a wife overshadowed by the splendor of her husband's reputation. * * * But the change from my life of easy circumstances and brilliant surroundings to that of the mistress of a suite of rooms in the Institution for the Blind at South Boston was much greater."

Space will allow no more references to a book which is in so great a measure the record of our National progress for the last fifty years. It will be found of the most unusual interest. One can only hurriedly refer to Mrs. Howe's connection with the anti-slavery movement, the troubled days of the war, the circumstances connected with the composition and rapidly growing popularity of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," her impressions of the celebrated people she met, her journeyings, children, and more intimate friends, a woman's peace crusade, Santo Domingo and the Samana Bay Company, the woman's suffrage movement, her club life, and especially the Boston Radical Club and the Concord School of Philosophy—to name a few only of her many interests—vivid accounts of all of which will be found in this volume of 450 pages. The book, too, is well printed and fully illustrated, the pictures adding very materially to its general interest, and is one no lover of good biography can afford to miss.

HAPGOOD'S "LINCOLN."

The Book That So Many Readers Are Writing to Us About.

Mr. Norman Hapgood is before the public with a "Life of Lincoln" which will challenge the attention of all thoughtful readers and students of our history. The biographer has brought to his task a rare combination of qualities—a faith in things American which is untinged with provinciality or conceit, a broad and intelligent sympathy with those democratic ideas of which Lincoln is the chief exponent, an undeviating sincerity of purpose, a strong yet subdued reverence for his subject, and a sure and discriminating appreciation of the most representative of all American characters. There is everywhere a firm and unpretentious desire to show us the true Lincoln, unvarnished and undecorated, to select not those details which are exemplary, but those which are characteristic—the homely countenance and the homely wisdom, the stalwart figure and the stalwart purposes, the patience, the gentleness, the humor, the melancholy. How Abraham Lincoln was in these and in many other things, those who know the odor of his own soil can best appreciate. Mr. Hapgood accepts Lincoln just as he was, not wishing him other than he was; and by his scrupulous avoidance of sentimentality and cant he brings home to us the true dignity and worth of the American character. The age when even thoughtful Americans could not speak of America without making the eagle spread his wings and scream is past; and since then we have been duly belabored by the cultivated folk, who tell us that we are materialistic, morally corrupt, and intellectually insignificant. Mr. Hapgood deserves attention as one of those writers who teach us how much there is in which, as Americans, we may still take an honest pride.

The story of Lincoln's life is so familiar in its outlines that we need not repeat it here. We may better call attention to some of the distinctive features of the present book. Chief of these is perhaps the abundance of anecdotes told of or by Lincoln, and of his sayings and repartees. Speaking of biographical materials Mr. Hapgood remarks: "Nothing compares in value with Lincoln's own words, and the two volumes of his papers and correspondence are worth all that has been written about him." Lincoln, politician though he was, rarely spoke or wrote merely for effect, and his words have won their way into the heart of the American people. Mr. Hapgood has selected from these materials with great skill. Could anything be more characteristic than the simplicity and dignity of the following: "In one of his dreams he [Lincoln] was in a great assembly, where the people made a lane to let him pass. 'He is a common-looking fellow,' said one of them. 'Friend,' replied Lincoln, even in his dream, 'the Lord prefers common-looking people; that is why He made so many of them.'" How Lincoln could accomplish his object in the face of obstacles that to the precisian or the pedant would have proved insurmountable is illustrated by an anecdote of the Black Hawk war, when Lincoln held a Captain's commission. "His technical knowledge was naturally slight. Marching with a front of over twenty men he wished to go through a gate. 'I could not,' he says himself, 'remember the proper word of command for getting my company endwise, so that it could get through the gate; so, as we came near the gate, I shouted: "This company is dismissed for two minutes, when it will fall in again on the other side of the gate."'" And his strong common sense is shown by an answer of his to Secretary Seward, who, but for the personal loyalty which he learned to feel toward Lincoln, would have proved on more than one occasion a brilliant troublemaker. The Secretary came into the Cabinet meeting one day in great perplexity. Should the Government try to draw Spain into an alliance, or should it cultivate the support of the abolitionists who sympathized with Santo Domingo, then at war with Spain? The President was reminded of a conversation between two negroes in Tennessee. "One was a preacher and the other an erring brother. 'Dar are,' said Josh the preacher, 'two roads befo' you, Joe; be careful which ob dem you take. Narrow am de way dat leads straight to destruction; but broad am de way dat leads right to damnation.' Joe opened his eyes and exclaimed, 'Josh, take which road you please; I shall go troo de woods.' 'I am not willing,' concluded the President, 'to assume any new trouble or responsibilities at this time, and shall therefore avoid going to the one place with Spain or with the negro to the other, but shall take to the woods. We will maintain an honest and strict neutrality.'" It is significant that one of Mr. Hapgood's chapters is entitled "The New President's Tact." Regarding what Mr. Hapgood has to say of Lincoln as a politician, if we understand his position right, it is that there are wire-pullers and wire-pullers—that one such may be great and good and another feeble and narrow.

Mr. Hapgood says little of Lincoln's foes in the South, but much more concerning his enemies in the North. In doing so the biographer again shows a true scent for character. The real nobility of Lincoln appears less in his consideration for the representatives of a lost cause than in his attitude toward those of his own cause who sneered or cursed because he did not accept their valuable advice. The appointment of Stanton, who had treated Lincoln with the bitterest contempt, to the Secretaryship of War ranks among the most magnanimous acts in political history; yet it is only one of many that show what a wonderful power the President had for forgiving his enemies. It is deeds like this that show Lincoln as one of the supremely noble souls, whose story inspires posterity forever. We cannot thank too much those few biographers, of whom Mr. Hapgood is one, who have sought above all things to give us the true and intensely human Lincoln, who have left rough and unpolished the statue that is to stand on so lofty a pedestal. Such a figure can never become petty or inane. It must remain forever majestic and awe-inspiring.

Some eight or nine months ago Mr. Hapgood remarked concerning biographies: "There are two kinds of biography that I find especially of value. The first is written by friends who knew the man intimately; the second is by those who are sufficiently removed from the man in point of time to judge him dispassionately." In the case of Lincoln, Herndon's "Life" is the best representative of the former class; while in the latter class we think the first place may be claimed for Mr. Hapgood's biography. Born since the close of the civil war, and writing after the Spanish war, Mr. Hapgood is at a sufficient distance to see things in perspective. Having resided in several parts of the country, he is unusually free from sectional prejudice. Perhaps he will appear to Southern readers not always to be entirely appreciative of the Southern point of view; yet we believe that in this respect he will be regarded as a decided improvement on most of his predecessors. And he has probably distanced all predecessors in the skill with which he has estimated the political significance of Lincoln: the man who, rising out of the heart of the people, understood the heart of the people; who guided the people in what was, since the framing of the Constitution, their darkest hour; who highly resolved that the dead should not have died in vain, and that Government of the people, by the people, and for the people should not perish from the earth. All patriots should read Mr. Hapgood's book. HENRY B. HINCKLEY.

Quaritch's Career.

A man whom all the book world knew as Quaritch, so that the name had almost become an institution, died in London last Sunday. THE NEW YORK TIMES has already printed an outline of his career, but some fuller details will interest readers of THE SATURDAY REVIEW. Born in Worbis, Prussia, April 23, 1819, the son of a military officer, Bernard Quaritch became fatherless and practically friendless in his ninth year. From 1834 to 1839 he served a five years' apprenticeship with a bookseller in Nordhausen, Prussia, going in the latter year to a publisher in Berlin. Being determined to enter the old book trade, he came in April, 1842, to London, and was employed by Henry George Bohn for two years. In 1844 he went to Paris for a year's employment in a French house. Returning to Bohn for two years more, he left him finally in April, 1847, and commenced business for himself as an agent at 68 Great Russell Street, London, with a capital of about £70. Owing to a dispute that arose between Bohn and himself, he changed his office and took a small shop in October, 1847, at 16 Castle Street, Leicester Square, at a weekly rent of 16s., but with a reduced capital of £10. In Castle Street his industry and business aptitude produced marvelous results, and he soon developed from a stallkeeper selling penny books into one of the leading second-hand booksellers of London. He did a little publishing and dealt also in the retail of new English books and imported new French books, carrying on, in fact, the bookselling business in all its branches, but the old and rare book trade especially.

As a dealer in rare books he printed in Castle Street, between April, 1847, and March, 1860, 157 catalogues. In March, 1860, he transferred his business to 15 Piccadilly, and his commercial relations began to extend over all parts of the world, his dealing with the United States being particularly active, supplying with rare and important books all our principal libraries and a host of private collectors, including James Lenox, Henry C. Murphy, John Carter Brown, and others. In 1875 he began sending to this country for sale at auction consignments of books, and continued doing so at irregular intervals until his death. A controversy with the Custom House in 1879 as to certain reissues of old books which he included in his consignments caused much sensation at the time, Quaritch publishing in defense of his position an open "Letter to General Starring," Special Agent of the United States Treasury in Europe. Probably a quarter of the rare books in American public and private collections in 1879 had passed through his hands; at this time of writing, twenty years later, it may be said that over one-half of the most valuable books here were at one time and another in his possession. More than a third of the best things in Brayton Ives's splendid library, sold in 1891, were secured, for example, from Quaritch. It will be seen from this that his relations to American book collecting were peculiarly important. He sent over in 1890 for exhibition and sale a wonderful collection of book rarities, but the principal items of value, including the Psalter of 1459, went back to Europe unsold.

Even at the English sales of the fifties, Quaritch's name was one to reckon with; a little later he was the acknowledged leader at all London and Continental book auctions, and most of the collections that were disposed of privately came to him. Name, if you will, the chief sales abroad from 1860 to 1890—the Charlemont, the Daniel, the Perkins, the Tite, the Laing, the Dibdin, the Sunderland, the Hamilton Palace, the Jersey, the Ives, the Beckford, the Towneley, the Huth, the Sunderland, the Ashburnham, the Libri, the Bancroft, the Crawford, the Lenox, the Hoe, the Brayton Ives, the Corser, the Cracherode, the Grenville, the Rosebery, the Spencer, the Heber, the Perkins, the Sykes, the Stowe, the Wodhull, the Roxburghe, the Bedford, the Stanley, the Bridgewater, the Blandford, the Sussex, the Althorp, the Devonshire, the Roger Wilbraham, the Stanley of Alderley, the Hibbert

IS THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT DECAYING?

An examination of the Christmas numbers of our leading magazines seems to show that something of the Christmas feeling is fast departing. The December issues generally have more or less claim to being special numbers, insomuch as they all have attractive covers, and many of them illustrations in colors. The December Century, for instance, is a noteworthy number, but so was that for November. This month's issue contains very little of the old-fashioned Christmas literature; or, in fact, comparatively little that can claim to express the Christmas spirit at all, attractive though its contents certainly are.

Ten or fifteen years ago conditions were quite different. A single glance at the December magazines was all that was necessary to understand the seasonableness of their contents. And in those days, as the Christmas season approached, how freely we indulged ourselves in the purchase of magazine after magazine not regularly seen, because of the Christmas spirit sure to be found between the covers, a feeling which accorded so well with our own feelings.

Is this very apparent change in Christmas literature due, in any measure, to the fact that the December magazines really appear in November, thus, perhaps, losing part of their effectiveness? But as they have always come out thus early, this can hardly be the reason. It may be simply because we are growing older and losing our capacity for illusions, but each year there seems to be less and less Christmas display in the shops. Where are the long tables which used to fill the shops, loaded down with gifts to tempt the holiday shopper? And the attractive window displays—not those ordinarily seen, but those which somehow suggested so vividly the rapidly approaching 25th of December.

There is also a great apparent decrease in the number of jolly-looking people, with tired but happy faces, and arms full to overflowing with bundles, they would not think of carrying at any other season. Surely we all remember how these shoppers, who created a sort of friendly atmosphere all around them, used to crowd the cars, boats, and trains at this season of the year—when most of the public conversation one heard centred around "What shall I give——" and the first question friends asked each other on meeting was whether they had finished their Christmas shopping. The Christmas spirit used to be apparent, too, in the very interested air with which one package-laden individual looked at others who were equally burdened; the whole scene, the shops, the streets, the people, producing a certain friendly feeling—the real Christmas spirit of love and goodwill toward all men.

There are, certainly, a great many Christmas gifts exchanged at the present time, but it would almost seem that, even into this beautiful custom there has crept a sort of materialism—a commercial spirit. We often feel that there is too much of the give-and-take feeling, the balancing of values, and the idea that gifts must be sent because received; until what should be considered a beautiful custom becomes simply a necessary task.

Possibly the very decay of our old-time Christmas literature may have a more or less intimate connection with our growing materialism. The natural law of demand and supply is no doubt the chief factor in determining the selection of what should be chosen to make up the contents of the Christmas number. Have we then grown too worldly wise, too sophisticated, too thoroughly imbued with the materialism which in so great a measure characterizes our century end to enjoy the simple stories which used to fill the Christmas numbers?

Possibly it may be said that the Christmas stories have all been told; that nothing new remains to be said. But if we were to allow that such is the case, some one might suggest that all the love stories which could be planned have been chronicled; that stories of adventure by land or sea, stories of war in all its ofttimes telling—in fact, that the short story in all its phases has been completely written out. Fortunately, one condition is as little true as the other, and it is not because it is no longer to be found that we have to bemoan the passing of the Christmas story. No, it cannot be that such stories are no longer possible in fresh, interesting guise—for surely we are willing to go so far as that assertion would indicate. The reason must be that either those who write or those who choose what should be offered to read at this season have decided that we no longer care for the simple Christmas story.

As we write, a long list of the world's great Christmas books and the simpler tales that used to fill our magazines passes through our minds. First are Dickens's Christmas books, which, being masterpieces, are as fresh and delightful to-day as when first written. Next come the essays on "Christmas," "Christmas Eve," "Christmas Day," and "The Christmas Dinner" in Irving's "Sketch Book." The list might be indefinitely extended, but we are suddenly reminded that our plaint of the decay of the Christmas feeling is an old, old one, by the following lines by which Irving's first Christmas sketch is headed:

But is old, old, good old Christmas gone? Nothing but the hair of his good, gray old head and beard left? Well, I will have that, seeing I cannot have more of him.

Let us then content ourselves with what we have, and, deciding that the fault lies in ourselves and not in any real decline of the Christmas spirit, take to ourselves the lessons taught by Stevenson's Christmas sermon, which for beauty of language and strong ethical value it would be hard to equal. Certainly when we remember the desperate physical conditions under which this beautiful sermon was written, we should find new interest and beauty in its message. And, indeed, where or how could we find nobler words in which to wish our readers the merry Christmas all of us desire to pass than in the following extract from an essay, the reading of which would prove more valuable to us than many of the actual sermons we may hear on Christmas morning:

Dissatisfaction with our life's endeavor springs in some degree from dullness; we require higher tasks because we do not recognize the height of those we have. * * * To be honest, to be kind, to earn a little and to spend a little less, to make upon the whole a family happier for his presence, to renounce, when that shall be necessary, and not be embittered, to keep a few friends, but these without capitulation—above all, on the same grim condition, to keep friends with himself—here is a task for all that a man has of fortitude and delicacy. * * * But Christmas is not only the mile mark of another year. * * * it is a season, from all its associations, whether domestic or religious, suggesting thoughts of joy. A man dissatisfied with his endeavors is a man tempted to sadness. * * * It is well he should be condemned to this fashion of the smiling face. Noble disappointment, noble self-denial, are not to be admired, not even to be pardoned, if they bring bitterness. It is one thing to enter the kingdom of heaven maimed, another to maim yourself and remain without. And the kingdom of heaven is of the childlike, of those who are easy to please—who love and who give pleasure— * * * If your morals make you dreary, depend upon it, they are wrong. I do not say, "give them up," for they may be all you have; but conceal them like a vice, lest they should spoil the lives of better and simpler people. * * * There is an idea abroad among moral people that they should make their neighbors good. One person I have to make good—myself. But my duty to my neighbor is much more nearly expressed by saying that I have to make him happy, if I may.

If we carry out to the best of our ability the lessons above taught, may we not find that both we and our friends and neighbors are passing the merriest sort of a Christmas? It is not so much the cost of a gift, but the spirit in which it is offered, which lends to it its chief value, and our best contribution toward a joyous Christmastide would be first to make ourselves happy and then do what we can to add to the joyousness of all about us.

QUARITCH.

When Bernard Quaritch died in London on Sunday, Dec. 17, there passed from the bibliographical world probably the most remarkable man that ever entered it. Coming into the world of rare books a mere errand boy, he left it the prince of book sellers, having revolutionized the trade, which he made a profession, and having encouraged the gathering of books to an astonishing degree. What were the book dealers of preceding centuries compared to him? They were almost nobodies—dull, worthy gentlemen. He was even greater than Stevens, who continued the work, was brilliant; Sabin, who chiefly labored in the same field, was splendidly industrious. But Rich, Stevens, and Sabin handled only American books—Quaritch bought and sold rarities in every department of literature. As for men like Payne, Bodd, Thorpe, Lilly—mediocrities were they. Hills was the only man of latter days that approached him. The foreign booksellers—Morgand, Maisonneuve, Rosenthal, and the rest—need hardly be mentioned when his name is discussed. He was easily the peer of men so brilliantly and tenaciously commonplace.

For well nigh half a century he had borne his title of "The Napoleon of the Book Trade," and no title ever described its holder better. Historians have not yet made up their minds whether Napoleon Bonaparte exercised, all told, an influence for good or evil in the world. We know what he did and how he did it, but we may not be sure whether it was worth doing. In the same way there may be a difference of opinion as to whether Quaritch did good by turning the traditions of the book business upside down. He defeated his opponents on that field of battle, the auction room, and after his victories naturally dictated his own terms. Book collectors might object to those terms, but they had to accept them. Some of them—or their heirs—afterward blessed "The Napoleon" for raising prices on everything that is rare and curious and beautiful in the way of books. On the other hand, a good many of them grumbled and continue to grumble.

Andrew Lang is one of the latter class. He strongly objects to the "haute école of bibliomaniacs, the school of millionaires, royal Dukes, and Rothschilds." He wants to see again the old days when one could pick up a play of Molière's, with the author's autograph, in a fourpenny stall; when the average bookseller was blissfully unconscious of the value of his wares, and a "poor collector" was not a contradiction in terms.

It is true that Mr. Lang blames the millionaires and the Dukes for this, but he knows as well as any one that Bernard Quaritch was the fons et origo of high prices and the passing of the fourpenny stall. "Andrew of the Brindled Hair," however, like most of the other book lovers of London, admired and was a friend of Bernard Quaritch the man, though he might object to the methods of Bernard Quaritch the dealer. Therefore he blamed the Dukes and millionaires. Indeed, it is difficult to see how any one could help liking Quaritch. He was gruff with strangers, and highly sarcastic at the expense of persons who brought worthless volumes to him with the idea that they possessed great treasures. But to his friends—and these included pretty well every one who collected books in London, not to speak of those from other places—he exhibited qualities that none could do else but love and reverence.

To chat with Bernard Quaritch in his sanctum up stairs in the shop in Piccadilly was a privilege which was valued highly by those who possessed it. The old bookseller was a perfect encyclopedia of information on all subjects. In this he has been compared to Mr. Gladstone, but there was a charm about his conversation that those who knew both men declared that Gladstone lacked. Perhaps it was the added influence of the wonderful things that surrounded Quaritch in Piccadilly that gave this quality, for his room was also the room where the chief treasures in his possession were kept. There one might find the "Book of Hours" of Sir John Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury; there were the most precious Illuminated manuscripts, the Shakespeare folios and quartos, the Elzevir "Pastissier Français," the books which belonged to Grolier, and the bindings by Clovis Eve and Le Gascon. Who could be bored surrounded by such treasures as these? And how could the talk of their owner, who knew every detail of their histories, be dull?

This was one side of Quaritch, which showed the pleasant companion, brilliant conversationalist, and "good fellow." Quite another Quaritch was to be seen at the auction rooms, in Wellington Street, of Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge. It was there that the prince of booksellers won his victories, astonished the whole world of bibliophiles by the boldness of his bidding, and took his revenge on amateurs who had the temerity to bid against him by running the prices up sky-high on everything. All the great collectors sooner or later came to terms with him, finding that it was far cheaper to give a commission to him to buy what books they wanted than to compete with him at the sales. And therefore it was that for the last quarter of a century reports of book sales had the word "Quaritch" bracketed after the description and price of almost every lot of importance.

Mr. Quaritch was like Mr. Gladstone in other ways besides his brilliant conversational powers. He retained his vigor of body and acuteness of mind to the last. He was a man of fine physique, with a springy step, keen eye, and a kindly but sympathetic expression; a large, nearly bald head, broad chest, muscular arms, big, powerful hands—all this conveyed the impression of a man physically and intellectually strong. The impression was intensified when he began to speak, for his voice was the voice of a man who is sure of himself, who, as Kipling would say, has "found himself."

RESULTS OF INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

Mr. Ripley Hitchcock, in the current number of The Independent, presents a brief but careful essay on "In the Ninth Year of International Copyright." After introducing his subject by describing the trying condition of affairs that prevailed before the passage of the act and the many ill-omened prognostications that accompanied its early working, Mr. Hitchcock demonstrates how the International Copyright law has benefited both American publishers and authors. He also draws some interesting conclusions as to what would be the effect on the great popular American novels of the day if they were obliged to compete with pirated issues of popular English books. He says:

But before I touch upon the fact that it is the American, not foreign author, who has earned the widest popularity of late, it is logical to extract such information as may be afforded by general statistics, despite the danger of misleading inferences. From the very useful record kept by The Publishers' Weekly, we found that the number of books published in the United States each year from 1890 to 1898 was as follows:

	Total.	American Authors.		Total.	American Authors.
1890	4,559	....	1895	5,467	3,896
1891	4,665	....	1896	5,702	3,300
1892	4,962	....	1897	4,929	3,313
1893	5,134	2,803	1898	4,856	2,905

Although Mr. Hitchcock admits that these figures only show that the growth of the output of American authors and publishers has been gradual, it has been none the less a healthy growth. While the general figures are of less immediate interest than those which answer the question as to the demand for the American books which have been published, "an extraordinary answer is furnished now, at the close of a year which those who are conversant with book selling declare to be the most remarkable in the history of the American publishing business."

The public demand for "David Harum, A Story of American Life," by the lamented Edward Noyes Westcott, has caused the printing of 350,000 copies up to the third week of November. Of "Richard Carvel," by Winston Churchill, it is announced that over 200,000 copies have been printed. "When Knighthood was in Flower," by Edwin Caskeden, has long since passed the 100,000 mark, and "Janice Meredith," by Paul Leicester Ford, published only a few weeks since, has had a sale thus far of over 110,000. * * *

Before the days of copyright there were isolated successes like "Ben Hur," with its 650,000, and, in earlier years, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," with its measureless popularity, and books like "The Wide, Wide World," "The Lamplighter," "Routledge," and "The Leavenworth Case," but these are isolated cases; instances selected from a long term of years.

"It is an obvious deduction," says Mr. Hitchcock, "that the number of books sold is more significant than the number of titles published." "David Harum," "Richard Carvel," "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "Janice Meredith," and "Mr. Dooley in Peace and War," are but five titles, "but they represent a number of copies well toward the million."

As to foreign authors, Mr. Hitchcock believes that they have received their just dues. Still, the ethical significance of the law is not yet fully appreciated in America, as many suits brought for infringement of copyright indicate. And he concludes:

Certainly popular foreign authors have little to complain of in these days of keen competition on the part of publishers, and the new writers would fare better if they could persuade their English publishers or other representatives to an alert recognition of American requirements. Both "Dodo" and "Ships That Pass in the Night" were offered here in sheets, and time was not given to secure American copyrights. But since it is the effect of the copyright law upon our own bookmaking that forms my special text; the English author and his independent Canadian cousin, and the Continental author with his grievances over translations, must be dismissed in favor of a word regarding the moral influence of the adoption of international copyright. That this had some effect upon the ethical code of the average reader may be conceded, but the effect as yet is not one upon which we can pride ourselves.

"THE NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS."

To seek fame in one direction and find it unexpectedly, and very often accidentally, in quite another, has been the fate of many gifted men. The Rev. Charles Lutwidge Dodgson, grave, dignified, and scholarly Oxford don, devoted to mathematics and logic throughout his long life, could never reconcile himself to accept the renown which came to "Lewis Carroll" as the author of those ingenious and delightful whimsicalities in "Alice in Wonderland," "Through the Looking Glass," "Silvie and Bruno," and "The Hunting of the Snark"—whimsicalities which showed that their creator not only was a true humorist but possessed the soul of a poet as well. In all probability Mr. Dodgson's work as a mathematician and logician will soon be forgotten, but his nonsense stories, with their delightfully preposterous scenes and grotesque fancies, are sure of a permanent place in the affections of all children—including those of a larger growth. The secret of their popularity and of their hold on all our hearts he himself unwittingly has revealed to us in that beautiful verse in "Silvie and Bruno":

Say, whose is the skill that paints valley and hill,
Like a picture so fair to the sight?
That flecks the green meadow with sunshine and shadow,
Till the little lambs leap with delight?
'Tis a secret untold to hearts cruel and cold,
Though 'tis sung, by the angels above,
In notes that ring clear for the ears that can hear,
And the name of that secret is Love!

The merry Christmas season always awakens fresh reference to the name of another who also quite by accident made the whole Christian world his debtor. The secret is the same—the spirit of love and good cheer which emanates from the lines with which his name is connected, and their association with the most innocent of childhood recollections. Yet surely it was one of life's little ironies which gave to Clement C. Moore, expounder of theology and "the faith once delivered to the saints," and a man of profound learning, world-wide and enduring fame as the author of "The Visit of St. Nicholas," more familiarly called "The Night Before Christmas." No poem written by an American has had so wide a circulation or been translated into so many languages as this, yet when it appeared in print no one was more astonished than its author, and his displeasure at its publication was as great as his astonishment, for he thought it had only slight literary merit. And he was right. But the human heart beats in it, the true Christmas spirit pervades it, and it will be dear to the heart of childhood as long as children continue to hang their stockings on Christmas Eve—and may that beautiful custom never die out!

Clement Clarke Moore, who gave this old Dutch legend its poetic form, was born, (July 15, 1779,) reared, and spent practically all his days in this city. His father had a stately mansion and a large country seat on the banks of the Hudson. The house stood on a hill, where the east side of Ninth Avenue, between Twenty-second and Twenty-third Streets, now is. It commanded a magnificently extensive view of the river and the hills beyond, and the land was terraced to the water's edge. The lad was of distinguished lineage, and his father was a man of power and influence in the community, having been rector of Trinity Church, Bishop of the diocese, and President of Columbia College. From this institution Clement C. Moore was graduated in 1798, intending to adopt the sacred calling as a profession and follow in his father's footsteps, but he finally concluded to devote his life to the education of young men for the ministry. He became Professor of Greek and Oriental Literature in the Episcopal Theological Seminary, and was indefatigable in his efforts to further the interests of that institution. In 1818 he divided his heritage, and presented to the seminary the entire block bounded by Ninth Avenue, Twentieth and Twenty-first Streets, and the Hudson River, and the magnificent collection of buildings which adorn the seminary grounds to-day are a fitting monument to his unselfish dedication of himself and his wealth to the cause of religious education.

As a relaxation from his serious work Dr. Moore amused himself by writing short stories and verses for the entertainment of his children, and "The Night Before Christmas" was written to aid their jollifications while celebrating the Christmas season of 1822.

A young lady from Troy, while on a visit at the home of Dr. Moore, saw the verses, and was so pleased with them that she begged the privilege of making a copy of them to show to her friends at home. The following year, without consulting Dr. Moore, she sent the poem to the editor of The Troy Sentinel, in which paper it was first printed on Dec. 23, 1823. The pleasure with which the metric version of the old Christmas story was received and the far-reaching popularity which it immediately secured mollified the good doctor's displeasure over its publication, and its popularity has never waned in the slightest degree.

On July 10, 1863, Dr. Moore died at his Summer home at Newport, R. I., at the ripe old age of eighty-four years. He is a man of fragrant and blessed memory, of whom this community should be especially proud for his example as an upright, learned, highly estimable, and generous citizen. In the intensity of the struggle for material things which now seems to be the most powerful influence in our national life his memory doubtless would ere long be forgotten except by a select few and the religious body for which his munificence has done so much, but his place in the affections of his fellow men is secure as long as there is a pair of childish lips to murmur that happy closing line in his poetic version of the jolly old Dutch legend of "The Visit of St. Nicholas":

"Merry Christmas to all, and to all a good night."

THE EMBERS ON CHRISTMAS EVE.

We have come to be such readers that Santa Claus must surely have added a publishing house to his old-time workshop, and the stocking that will not hold a moderate-sized book is likely to lose some of its share of presents. There is an appropriateness in gifts of books or pictures at Christmas time that is the growing custom's excuse and explanation. Thought can speak to thought, soul to soul, in that way as they cannot in a muffler, a necktie, or a silver toilet article; and so the dreamer, sitting again before his fire on Christmas eve, will not be judged absurdly bookish if in the embers and curling smoke he sees the face, now of author, now of hero, now of heroine, smiling out at him, as they have smiled briefly at him from the year's "gray days and gold." What a literary company will be waiting on the hearth to welcome immortal old Santa this year when he comes stamping down!

There is no light save that of the waning fire. In its flickering feebleness each spark has mission and importance. The faint glow on the back log's further end—see it gleam dully through the smoke!—surely that, in miniature, is the lantern Janice followed on a certain remembered night. And the ashes in the foreground, what are these in the burned-out fire? Do you see among them that bit of charred paper with the writing on it? These must be letters, then. Not, indeed, love letters—for they, when burned, are burned more carefully. Perhaps the white ashes just beyond are those. Yes, the gray, filmy smoke that comes from them spells "R. B." and "Ba.," but these, where the paper is charred, are letters of some other sort—Stevenson's, we wonder? Letters nearly always find a fire at last. Hist! Quick! that spark that was gone as quickly as it came, that snap, and then the stillness—that certainly was like clash of swords in a duel. Look keenly into the darkness, whose face is that you see—Richard Carvel, Jack? Ah! Darthea, why do you dance away in a bit of flame and never note the spark? And now a dull crack breaks on the stillness, like the discharge of a modern gun on a far-off battlefield, and there's a puff of smoke that makes you think again of war. But love must have its way tonight—romance, poetry, love, for the world is tender-hearted on Christmas eve. A Babe is King.

The fire is almost out. The reindeer will soon come cantering over the roofs and the hearth must be cool for Santa. There is one last spark. It floats up the chimney as far as you can see and catches, still gleaming, in the soot. The mantel, fireplace, disappear in darkness. The strange new worlds that the glimmering fire revealed roll away into shadow land, and the men and women, loves and hates, that never were, once more never are. But the spark glows, burns, grows. For an instant the Star of Bethlehem is shining again o'er the fields of Palestine.

ONLY A LONELY MAN KNOWS.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Do you and others in the east know where books are loved? Where the author steps out from his ambush of printed pages and walks with you hand in hand, a flesh and blood friend and comrade through thick and thin?

It is not in green fields or under the skies silver tinted with latent moisture; not in the pleasant firelight, with shadows playing over laden shelves and lingering tenderly on many a plump volume. There is firelight, too, in the land where books are loved, spicy fires or pine knots, with a handful of resinous needles crackling in the blaze, or twisted desert grass and sage and grease wood with just enough of plebeian "cow chips" to recall the pungent "buffalo chip" fires of the plains and the keen, unmistakable scent of Indian encampments.

The shadows steal in and out among the trees or glide across the sand to lose themselves in the outlying circle of darkness, like stealthy Apaches.

Leagues of silence, of limitless horizon and shifting sand plains, over which the bare, brown mountains creep like sleeping pumas basking in the fierce yellow sunshine.

And heat! The purple skies swim with it and the earth below shimmers and shines till a shriveled grass blade stands up against the sky line, tree-like and mystical.

The "cities of men" are far away; here are populous cities of red clay mounds, each marking the home of a fat, patriarchal prairie dog, who will sit up at the door of his tent with his sleek, brown wife and numerous family and boldly challenge you as a trespasser.

Perhaps an antelope will show his head for a moment above some slope or a band of wild horses circle and wheel in curiosity around the unwonted visitor; but the human world is as much shut out as if it had ceased to exist. The very air seems to slumber in silver haze along the hilltops, bathing them with a wonderful, velvety softness. Lost Atlantis and the Egypt of Rameses are nearer than busy New York and Queen London.

Then with the hunger for kind and kindred comes a mighty love for books, such a passion as a miser spends on his gold or a lover on his dearest mistress; a concentration of longing and clinging affection that alone holds the heart from becoming in truth "a shadow in a land of shadows."

You have known Kipling and loved him; you have read the "Barrack-Room Ballads" with pulses stirring to their rough music; you have read the Jungle Books and cried "Good Hunting!" to Mowgli and the Seonee pack. But you have not known those songs that sing out the heart of an army till you have crept along the edge of the foothills through the clumps of cedar and shaggy juniper and stunted pine, silent as twilight and stepping like air lest a twig should snap and betray you, to watch through the gathering dusk a detachment of blue-coated troopers sitting around their campfires and singing "Soldier, Soldier," and "Danny Deever" to the accompaniment of fife and low-drawn bugle and the sough of the night wind through the trees.

You know what the full cry of the pack means, that cry which heard at midday was so terrible, foretelling the letting in of the jungle, when it comes to you over the desert with a blood-red moon passing like a rift of fire behind the inky sandhills and the giant cactus and ghostly yucca palms huddling gray and awful in the shadow-haunted valley. "Ya-i-ah! I-ah! I-ah! I-ah! Ya-e-ah! e, e, e!" it rises and swells and rolls, chopping short with vicious snaps and yells and rising again, till the whole universe is one bedlam of heart-chilling sound.

Then it stops as short as a knife thrust, and one's very breathing jars on the silence. At sunrise, when the light glints along the shaggy Yucca sabres and the Saguarros stand out huge and uncouth, capped with snowy blossoms, Gray Brother and the Pack slink like smoke wraiths across the open spaces, silently circling in some long-eared jack-rabbit destined to furnish breakfast for the pack. You call him "Good Hunting, Brother!" and his eyes laugh as he halts the merest moment till the younger ones have stopped the quarry in a thicket of Ocatias, whose pendulous blossoms are red as the fresh, wet stain on the sand below.

Your heart understands that poor boy in "To Have and To Hold" when he cries, not for homesickness or from fear of death, but for very terror of the wild, strange land around him. Miles Courtenay walks with you through the dusky pines, seeking his lost lady, the bravest, knightliest figure in American fiction for many a day.

And there is another day you can never forget; a day in April, with crapelike clouds drawn in shimmering folds across the sun, as thin as cobwebs or fairy bridal veils, not shutting out the light, but softening, subduing it, till all earth seemed a vast cathedral with the mystical incense of Spring lingering in every aisle.

There was a long day's drive before you, and you let the lines fall idly in your lap while you lost yourself with Bacon and Locke and dreamed of the Court of Elizabeth. Remembering Locke's great feudal empire, which was to be laid out in the New World with courts and camps and lordly citadels, with joust and tourney and all the Old-World splendor, you smile a little, though gravely withal, looking out over endless rolling hills coated with gray-green chaparral and dappled with little cloud-shadows and patches of tender new grass. Here was a part of the New World not in the dreams of the great English philosopher, and it has not changed one grass blade since, for all the steel-clad Spanish explorers and black-robed Franciscans that came and went and set down their thought of it on time-smoked parchment. The hills still roll away to the blue mountains that Atlas-like hold up the far-off sky; the road winds in and out, a narrow thread, between hoary old rocks and over dizzy grades skirting mountain tops and the brink of huge, silent cañons.

The wit and wisdom of Lord Verulam sparkle as freshly as they sparkled in the courts of kings, and back of the stately courtier lingers a pretty picture of the boy friend of Queen Elizabeth, the "Little Lord, Keeper of the Queen's Michaelmas Goose." But it ends sharply enough. "Whoa there! Where ye goin'? Drive right over a man on the steepest grade, would ye?" and an angry man, fairly dancing up and down on the seat of a big freight wagon, showers such compliments on womankind as would fill with music the ears of "Cynic." He steadily refuses to give one inch of the roadway, and even regards in grim silence the skillful driving which takes you around him safely on that dizzy shelf, where one false move would send horse and driver crashing into the pines a thousand feet below. You go on softly repeating Bret Harte's tale of the stage driver, and thankful for four wheels instead of one. The danger was an incident; the deep, twilit cañon, where the wind whispers strange old legends through the dusk pines is a picture in memory; but Francis Bacon and the gentle Locke are friends henceforth, comrades for many another lonely drive and many a wakeful midnight.

Only a lonely man knows the true friendliness of books. To a happy man with friends and loved ones at his fireside to give him back smile for smile and sympathy for sympathy, they can at best but make brighter hours already full of sunshine; the lonely man grasps their very soul and wrings from them all life has denied. Love and hope and friendship and the unquestioning faith of youth flame up a moment under their spell; in the cold ashes on the long-deserted hearth burn again the fires of ambition and belief. For a brief moment we are what we might have been; the soul bathes in the Fountain of Youth and steps forth all knightly as it stood in the sunrise long ago, armored with splendid dreams and visions and bearing in its hands the Grail of faith in man long since lost forever.

You may gather in city streets the wisdom of humanity, but you must go to the desert to come at the heart of books. Only a lonely man in a lonely land can weigh them at their true value.

A CACTUS FLOWER.

Orchard Ranch, Arizona, Dec. 10, 1899.

The Christmas Night.

The day is done; upon the winter air
The darkness falls with all its mystic power,
And once again for wearied hearts and glad
Breathes the deep quiet of the evening hour.

But stay—no rest to-night my spirit craves,
No slumber hastens on its mission here;
A gentle wakefulness boasts my soul
Like the soft touch of a vague presence near.

And o'er the world of nature moves a hand
Transforming all the still wild scene I love—
The woods and river, hills against the sky,
And starry watchers in the heights above.

From far away there comes the cry of sheep
To shepherds unattendant on their wrongs.
But lo! the voice is lost as to my ears,
The star-lit heavens fill with angels' songs.

Then silence folds the earth in her embrace,
Save for a stir amid the leaves upplied,
And murmurs through the trees—but the night wind
Sounds like the wailing of a little child.

Through distance great a bright gleam sends its ray,
Perchance from some low cottage window seen,
And yet beneath its glow I seem to watch
Two toil-worn figures o'er a manger lean.

It is enough. The ages melt away.
Clear breaks the light above the meadows shorn;
My own brown fields are Bethlehem's rolling plains,
To-night within my heart the Christ is born.

LONDON LITERARY LETTER.

Opinions of Current Books and Authors.

SAY REVIEWS ARE

William R. Alden.

LONDON, Dec. 12.—It is a pity that there cannot be a law requiring every man who wishes to write a book to pass an examination in Herbert Spencer's "Essay on Style" before receiving permission to publish. The number of young authors who have been wrecked on the rock of style must be enormous. They fancy that words have another office besides that of conveying ideas, and that style consists in finding some new way of arranging words. Spencer taught that there is a right way in which every sentence should be written, and that every other way of writing it is wrong. The youthful searcher after style thinks that to make words perform difficult acrobatic feats is the main object of writing, and that the more boldly an author's sentences stand on their heads, the more attractive is his style.

Mr. Bernard Capes affords a conspicuous illustration of this curious belief in the merits of word juggling, but Mr. Stephen Crane, in his last book, "Active Service," is, of the two, by far the worse offender. I greatly admire Mr. Crane's genius, and was among the first to perceive the power which he displayed in his "Red Badge of Courage." His "Active Service" is in several respects a decidedly clever book, but it is marred by his persistent effort to use words in a way that is novel. In so doing Mr. Crane not only defies reason, but he mocks at grammar. There are readers who will probably mistake Mr. Crane's eccentricities for genius, but the average reader will forget the author's story to wonder at his efforts at word juggling.

This sort of thing usually grows on a man. Mr. Capes's style was much more sane and intelligible in his first book than it is in his last; and Mr. Crane goes on steadily from bad to worse. He needs to be dealt with sharply. I am not so absurd as to fancy that I can have any influence with him, but if the majority of the critics would show him plainly that his present style is vicious, and to a certain extent vulgar, it might have some effect upon him. It would not be of the slightest consequence were Mr. Crane an ordinary man, but he is not an ordinary man. He is a writer who is capable of great things, and who, in at least one of his books, has come very near to achieving them. But if he persists in the delusion that words have some other and more important office than that of conveying ideas easily and plainly he is lost. The public will weary of him, and he himself will lose sight of substance in striving after form. I hope he may yet be saved, but after reading "Active Service" I have little expectation that he will repent and strive to enter the right path. It is easier for a drunkard to give up his habit than it is for the author who has once delivered himself over to the bondage of an artificial style to emancipate himself, and to write as a sane man should write.

There must be a large proportion of lunatics in England, else why would a publisher risk putting upon the market an English translation of two of the ponderous works of the notorious ex-priest Abbé Constant, who called himself "Eliphas Levi?" One of these books, the "Dogme et Rituel de la Haute Magie" formed the basis of Mme. Blavatsky's "flapdoodle"—which was the candid name under which she once spoke to me of "Isis Unveiled." It is, of course, a preposterous book, and the state of mind of the person who could have the patience to read it through would not be enviable. Doubtless the publisher of this, and another work by the same impudent charlatan, knows his public, and the chances are that his venture will be a success. If Blavatsky's "Isis Unveiled" could actually bring money both to the authors and the publisher, Eliphas Levi's rubbish, upon which Blavatsky's "theosophy" was founded, may reasonably be expected to have even a better sale.

Miss Cholmondeley's "Red Pottage" is the success of the season among novels. Every critic praises it, and the public is buying it in spite of the war. This success is fully deserved, and it makes amends to some extent for the success of certain other authors whose books sell by the hundred thousand, although a self-respecting trunk maker would hesitate to use them.

***

Mr. Haggard's "Jess" is having a fresh boom since the war broke out. It is by far the best book Mr. Haggard ever wrote, and is worth a dozen of his tales of bloodthirsty Zulus and invincible hunters. Probably it sold less extensively than his other books, for that would account for the author's return to his early Zulu style and his failure to write a successor to "Jess." I am glad that the war has benefited "Jess," and sincerely hope that Mr. Haggard will be encouraged by this unexpected success to write another novel worthy to be placed beside it.

Mr. H. G. Wells's "Tales of Time and [illegible] Mr. Wells is a writer who is capable of great things, and who, in at least one of his books, has come very near to achieving them. But if he persists in the delusion that words have some other and more important office than that of conveying ideas easily and plainly he is lost. The public will weary of him, and he himself will lose sight of substance in striving after form. I hope he may yet be saved, but after reading "Active Service" I have little expectation that he will repent and strive to enter the right path. It is easier for a drunkard to give up his habit than it is for the author who has once delivered himself over to the bondage of an artificial style to emancipate himself, and to write as a sane man should write.

Mr. George Gissing has published a new novel entitled "The Crown of Life." Mr. Gissing has won a place among English novelists, and to doubt his ability would be ridiculous. I confess I am unable to read his books with any pleasure, but I presume the fault is mine. I saw promise in his first book, "Democracy," and since then he has more than fulfilled that promise. I am confident that there must be some peculiarity in the man which renders him uninteresting to many people who will cheerfully acknowledge his ability as a novelist. On the other hand there are men whose opinion is worthy of the utmost respect who find Mr. Gissing's novels intensely interesting. It is the old case of the meat for one man which was poison for another. At any rate I am glad of Mr. Gissing's success, for he has won it by hard and conscientious work.

I see that some American publisher has discovered Bernard Shaw's "Cashel Byron's Profession" and is about to publish it. I am sure that it was republished in America by the Harpers at the time it originally appeared here; but it never had any marked success and has been forgotten by nearly everybody. It is a remarkably clever book and ought to have been the novel of its year, but somehow it did not attract notice. The same fate has overtaken other clever books, and there does not seem to be any way of explaining their failure. Now that Mr. Shaw has made a name for himself, his early novel will probably be read by the very people who passed it by unnoticed when it was new. It has all the elements of a successful novel, and I hope that this time its success will be assured.

The Stevenson Letters are, I see, to be published in two octavo volumes. I hope this means that the selections from them which were published in Scribner's Magazine were only a small proportion of them. To my mind, those letters were the most delightful of all the publications of the year; and I am looking forward with eagerness to the prospect of having two fat volumes of mainly fresh letters. The price is to be rather high—25 shillings being about the equivalent of $8—but if they contain many new letters they will be easily worth the price.

***

Those odd people who find delight in writing to newspapers to say that they like or dislike certain books, have been enjoying themselves over Mr. Kipling's "Stalky" stories. Some of them think that Mr. Kipling's boys are not true to life, and others insist that they are absolutely truthful portraits. In fact, the number of men who are now understood to have been the originals of McTurk and Stalky is not only large, but is constantly increasing. Those who think that Mr. Kipling cannot draw boys truthfully simply mean that they have never met precisely the same sort of boys whom Mr. Kipling knew. It does not seem to have occurred to any one that whether the "Stalky" stories are truthful portraits of British boys, or whether they are not, is not of the slightest consequence. They are boys created by Kipling, and they are extremely interesting boys. They are quite as much alive as the average boys of an English school, and they are much more entertaining as acquaintances. Why should we require Mr. Kipling to paint the boy precisely as he is? When Zola paints the French peasant as he is we cry out that his book is an outrage on good taste. The faithful portrait of the average boy could undoubtedly be painted by Zola; but that the result would be half so edifying as the portraits that Kipling has given us no one will seriously maintain. Relief From the Regular Staff.

To The New York Times' Saturday Review:

One knowing a thing well done likes to have others approve it, and I am sure all readers of your SATURDAY REVIEW will agree with your claim for the "influence of the supplement." But why did you omit all use of the column for reading critics? Amusement relieves the mind after the solid reading. "A. Z. S.'s" review of the campaign is enjoyable. I know many who have enjoyed the lovely cynicism of the average man and woman. Who was it said, "Learned and unlearned may sail the sea of ink"? What a prosiness would come o'er the spirit of THE SATURDAY REVIEW should you "decline with thanks" the effusions of those fun-loving folks! Please don't do it. Not since my boyhood days and the pages of "Obadiah Oldbuck" has any publication quite equaled your columns for critics. By the way, who was the guilty author of Obadiah? I. S. A.

COLONIAL ENGLAND.

Two Volumes in the British Empire Series That Have Special Interest Now.

The first two volumes of the British Empire Series have appeared, bearing the titles "India, Ceylon, Straits Settlements, British North Borneo, Hongkong" and "British Africa." They include a series of writings, most of which were originally given as lectures in the Sunday afternoon course at South Place Institute, London, from 1895 to 1898. The purpose of these lectures was to afford trustworthy information concerning the various colonies, settlements, and countries which go to form the British Empire. These lectures were presented by colonial officials, natives, travelers, and others who possessed unusual knowledge about the various dependencies of Great Britain. In general, each address was intended to include a short account of the country prior to its annexation or incorporation, its colonial history, the effect of British connection on the country and the natives, the outlook for the future, the conditions for colonization, trade, and commerce, the State and local government, and the laws of the country. It will be seen that this information, even when epitomized, results, when put in print, in formidable volumes. The interest in the subject among the people of England is so great that there will undoubtedly be a large demand for these volumes from thousands who, in the course of military, touring, or commercial experiences have visited or contemplate visiting these outlying territories of Great Britain. Many stay-at-homes will also want to know more about these lands beyond the sea, and they will find it difficult to place their hands on more satisfactory volumes than those included in this series. They are decidedly useful, and from them American readers can glean much information. It would be unfair to select for special commendation the names of a few out of the over twoscore in the tables of contents, including as they do some of England's foremost scholars, thinkers, and travelers.

The first volume is largely devoted to a consideration of the presidencies and districts of India, for it is chiefly as mistress of India that the greatness of England is measured by foreign nations. The articles in this volume evidence at once the vastness of the physical, ethnological, and political problems which were presented to the men who have carried on the work of government of that country. These articles, though somewhat unequal in range, are all animated with first-hand knowledge and observations. They picture the countries to the reader as they exist in all the kaleidoscopic variety of life and customs. India is not so much a country as it is a small continent. Its population is not less than one-fifth of the estimated number of inhabitants of the world. There is no question but that British rule in India has been specially distinguished from all previous governments by the inestimable blessings it has conferred in security, justice, and material development. It was not the intention of the lecturers to dwell at length on the wonderful development of India in the physical and economic spheres, nor are the portions of the volume which enlarge on those features as of absorbing interest as the parts which display to us the social development of the country. In the field of education and of moral and political thought the ground was fertile and the advance has been immeasurable. Industrial enterprise, of course, has had a marvelous awakening, as the indigo, cotton manufacture, and tea cultivation all attest. Agriculture is the prevailing means of subsistence, and supports, directly or indirectly, three-fourths of the population. Over 90 per cent. of the people dwell outside of the towns, and agriculture is carried on with ancient tools and in a primitive fashion.

Interesting articles detail the features of Madras, Bombay, Sind, Bengal, Assam, the Northwest Provinces, the Punjab, the Central Provinces, Burmah, the Native States, Ancient India, Ceylon, Straits Settlements, British North Borneo, and Hongkong. In this brief notice we can only give these titles and refer the reader to them for a vast quantity of information. We note three chapters which deal with the condition of women in India, and we will make a few extracts which may prove of interest. These are "Hindu Women," by Krishnaro Bholanath Divatia; "Mohammedan Women," by Mohammed Barakatullah, and "Parsee Women," by Zulirka Soraiji Cavalier. These essays from the pens of native authors are unusually fascinating and are possessed of genuine stamps of authenticity. Hindu girls as a class are practically illiterate, being taught only practical work, such as sewing and cooking. They [illegible] and [illegible] the age of ten and thirteen, their husbands being selected for them, and a marriage once contracted is indissoluble. The wife cooks the meals and takes her own meals after the husband and other members of the family have taken theirs. Polygamy is practised only in cases where no sons are born, a law being considered necessary according to the Hindu religious code, inasmuch as it is through the son that the father reaches heaven. The Hindu childless widow of the higher castes is forbidden to remarry by the laws of custom, and is a living picture of silent suffering. In the East life is looked upon as simply preparatory to a higher state of life hereafter, and Hindu women in every act of their daily life intermix religion with labor. In her domestic virtues the Hindu woman is a model for the whole world. She is a loving wife, mother, daughter, and sister. She is obedient, sympathetic, and charitable. She does not indulge in the habit of drinking or smoking. It is interesting to note that the present century has witnessed a perceptible improvement in the general condition and status of Hindu women.

The seclusion of Moslem women is universal, and in India it is considered disrespectful for Mohammedan women to walk in the streets unless advanced in years. They are absolute queens in their homes, having full authority in the government of the house. They dress gorgeously and indulge in garden parties and many pleasant home amusements. Their education is generally confined to religious books, and they have to learn a part, if not all, of the Koran. Marriage is always arranged by the parents, the contracting parties having no previous personal acquaintance. Divorce is of rare occurrence, but is permitted in extreme cases. The general practice is monogamy, excepting with the aristocracy, which in every land has been notorious for its transgression of the laws of morality. Mohammedan women seldom meddle with politics, but there have been a number of Moslem Queens, a notable example being her Highness Shah-Jehan Begum, the only Moslem Queen serving under the Empress of India.

Parsee women are Zoroastrians and are not idol worshippers. Women do not marry as early in life as among the Hindus, but it rarely happens that a man chooses his own bride. They are in advance of their Hindu and Mohammedan sisters in the way of education, and glory in the fact that they can cook as well as any good housewife. They are fire worshippers, but God, according to the Parsee faith, is the emblem of glory, refulgence, and light, and in this view a Parsee, while engaged in prayer, stands before the fire or turns his face toward the sun, because they appear to be the most proper symbols of the Almighty. You will see neither a Parsee drunkard nor a Parsee beggar on the streets. They are called by the Christians "the good Samaritans of the East," for no tale of woe goes unheard. The Parsee women shine in society as doctors, lawyers, linguists, musicians, artists, and nurses. They are intensely religious, and with them religion is not a cloak to be put on for one day.

These extracts will suffice to indicate the mass of valuable information contained in this volume. A perusal of the chapters devoted to "Famines in India," "Industries in India," "Indian Literature," and "Administration of Justice" will afford much satisfaction.

The wonderful development of Africa during the past fifty years is largely due to British enterprise and daring. Livingstone began the work which transformed the map of Africa and filled it with features and people of striking interest. Prior to that we were ignorant of the source of the Nile, and the Congo scarcely existed on the map. In fact the interior of the continent was a blank from the Tropic of Cancer to the Tropic of Capricorn. When the results of the wonderful journey of Stanley through the dark continent were made known, the powers of Europe began to give serious attention to Africa as a field for industrial and commercial activity. Belgium led the way in the partition of Africa in 1880, when Stanley went there as the agent of the King of the Belgians. Germany entered the field a little later, and although both France and England had been at work before, it was not until 1883 that the real scramble began. By 1888 the respective spheres—British, French, German, Belgian, and Italian—had been blocked out. The agreement entered into between England and France during 1899 delimits their respective spheres in the Sahara and on the Niger. So far as area goes, France has fared the best, her sphere covering nearly a third of all Africa. England's share, exclusive of Egypt and the Soudan, exceeds 2,000,000 square miles, while Germany and Belgium claim about a million each.

The present volume comprises addresses given in the British colonial series on the following districts: The Cape of Good Hope, Rhodesia, Bechuanaland, the Transvaal, old and new; Natal, the Highlands of Natal; Zululand, British and Central Africa, the Protectorate of Zanzibar, the East Africa Protectorate, Uganda, the Niger, the West Africa colonies, Mauritius. This list will give, at the best, but a faint idea of the amount of information contained in the lectures. Each topic was handled by a specialist, in most cases former or present colonial officials, and the treatment is so adequate that it leaves but little to be desired by persons seeking information relative to the British colonial possessions in Africa. The means by which the Orange River sovereignty, (now the Orange Free State,) the Transvaal, Cape Colony, Natal, Zululand, and Rhodesia were brought under British rule, and how the first two were abandoned by, or broke away from, their masters, are here graphically outlined. During the present strife in South Africa the articles on the Transvaal and the Boers will be found of absorbing interest. A chapter on "Briton, Boer, and Black in South Africa" presents an English view of the Boers in a decidedly anti-Boer strain. It is by James Alex Liebmann, a former professor in the University of the Cape of Good Hope, and should be read by all persons who are studying the South African situation. There we read of England's former control of the Transvaal, the revolt under the leadership of Pretorius, Kruger, and Joubert in 1880 and the final Boer triumphs at Laing's Nek, the Ingogo River, and Amajuba Hill. The author speaks of Krüger's Government as follows:

Under this ideal (?) Government, which is really a sixteenth century oligarchy flourishing at the end of the nineteenth, and is certainly not a land where "a man may speak the thing he will," you have a press censorship as tyrannical as in Russia, a State supervision of telegrams, a veto on the right of public meeting, a most unjust education law, and an Executive browbeating the judiciary; and in order to accomplish so much the Transvaal has closed its doors to its kinsmen in Cape Colony, for you must not forget that the oldest Transvaalers, from President Krüger downward, are ex-Cape Colonists and quondam British subjects, and imported a bureaucracy of Hollanders to plait a whip wherewith to castigate her children.

This volume is useful, not solely on account of the excellence of its articles on South Africa, but for the thorough treatment which it gives to all the British possessions in Africa.

An Empire That Was.*

"The Moorish Empire" grew out of an attempt to acquire some knowledge of the antecedents of the Moors, the better to understand them as they are to-day. The material of the volume has been culled from choicest sources, and all facts not of vital interest have been cast out. The subject is practically new to English literature, and it may seem that one so remote from English interests is hardly worth so much pains as it has received here, but to this may be responded that the study of the Moor is of far more than ethnological or geographical importance. As part of the story of the human race its incidents assist the study of mankind. In the spirit in which Arnold edited Thucydides, Mr. Meakin entered on this work, not as an "idle inquiry about remote ages and forgotten institutions, but as a living picture of things present, fitted not so much for the curiosity of the scholar as for the instruction of the statesman and citizen." Only as seen as a whole, magnified in scenes long past, do the effects of Moorish thought and principles upon the national life become apparent, and then only can their influence upon the individual be rightly weighed. For this purpose it is the internal history, as seen in the people themselves, which is of greatest value. It is extremely disappointing that native authorities have shed so little light as to the condition, past and present, of their nation.

The origin of the Moorish Empire is wrapped in deep uncertainty. The earliest accounts of it depend largely upon myths and legends which are not at all reliable and it remains till the Carthaginian Hanno made a colonizing expedition beyond the Herculean Pillars for any accurate account to be met. One thousand years after this expedition a Roman scribe, Procopius of Caesarea, wrote that in his time there were two white columns of stone near Tangier on which was the inscription, "We have fled before the face of Joshua the robber, son of Nun." Procopius thus claimed an ancestry for these people among the Canaanites. It is also interesting to note that the Arab historians attribute the same origin to the nation. With the advent of the Romans the history assumes a more authentic form. For a while later Mauretania became subject to the Vandals, subsequently to the Goths, then followed a period of darkness of which we have no true accounts. In the seventh and eighth centuries Mohammedanism gained its foothold in Morocco, and a little later (1061) the Moorish Empire became established after numerous conflicts with foreign powers and invaders. Before the close of the eleventh century (1096) the Moors enlarged their territory and were masters of Spain. The history of the Moorish Empire during succeeding years was a history of war and conflict. The Mohammedan realm on both sides of the straits was in chaos. The empire reached its lowest ebb and Spain was irretrievably lost to the world of Islam. In Morocco a call was issued for a rise to a "Holy War" which won the empire for Mohammed. A peculiar tribute our author has paid to Mulai Ismail, the last Moorish Sultan to leave an indelible mark on his country, albeit a scar:

There is in his character, nevertheless, something which commands admiration; his ferocity was but the outcome of the times in which he lived, and he was only stronger, not worse, than those around him. Notwithstanding his tyrannical behavior and wholesale butcheries, he succeeded in making his power so thoroughly respected that public life and property were never more secure than under his rule. While during his lifetime not a human being failed to tremble at his name, it is strangely significant of the real tendency of Islam that Ismail is remembered to-day, not as the tyrant, but as the great and religious Sultan. As his rule of life he used to have a copy of the Koran borne before him. It would hardly be possible to credit the accounts of his carnage. He was a bloodthirsty villain, but he had better moments, and moments, one is thankful to say, of remorse.

The personal appearance of this human creature is thus described by Windus:

He is a middle-sized man and has the remains of a good face, with nothing of a negro's features, though his mother was a black; he has a high nose, which is pretty long and thin. He has lost all his teeth. His beard is white and thin; his eyes seem to have been sparkling, but their vigor decayed through age, and his cheeks very much sunk in.

Busnot describes him "as nearly black, with fiery eyes, a strong voice, and greatly given to jumping, being remarkably agile even when past middle age, and able by one action to mount his horse, draw his sword, and behead the slave who held the stirrup. Several times a day he would change his costume, suiting the color to the mood he was in, green being his favorite, but white the most propitious, and yellow fatal."

There is only one instance of many in which Mulai Ismail entered into friendly relations with European rulers, and in 1721 was secured for the first time the recognition by treaty of the right of foreign protection for foreign subjects and their interests in Morocco. Portions of the famous stables of this Sultan still exist. They were three miles long, and contained 12,000 horses. Thirty thousand men and 10,000 mules, it is said, were employed in building his palace at Mequinez, which is his greatest monument to-day. His remains were placed after his death, which occurred at the age of eighty-one, in a solid building erected for that purpose near Kubba Majub.

Since the year 1724 eight Sultans have reigned, yet few have left any places in the memory of their subjects. Anarchy and horrors worse than ever prevailed. But whatever of peace and order Morocco has since enjoyed must be attributed to Si Ahmad's firmness and political skill. It is certain that not for years has Morocco known such an administration, and the question arises, How long will it last? The Circassian mother of the present Sultan is credited with a strong and beneficial influence over her son.

All Mohammedan States have apparently a similar administration, but upon close observation it is evident that Morocco has sufficient individuality to warrant a separate study. It has, however, like the other Moorish States, principles and standards set by the Koran. The Sultan of Morocco is the highest spiritual and temporal power recognized by the Moors. It would be vain to attempt to estimate the actual number of the Moorish Army. With the exception of a few thousand under European instruction, there are none deserving the name of "regulars." To be quite up to the times, the Moorish Army boasts of a band which plays upon foreign instruments and is under foreign instruction. The band has been taught a number of national and sentimental selections, the words of which, to a European ear, are often incongruous. Commands are given in French or English, according to the language of the instructor. The Moorish Navy consisted of four frigates, a brig, and a sloop-of-war at the beginning of the present century, and in 1880 a schooner of four guns, a brig of twelve, and four gunboats were all that remained.

Modern Christian missions to Morocco date from the early part of the thirteenth century. Protestant mission work is of altogether recent introduction, the London Society for the Propagation of the Gospel Among the Jews having been the first in the field. In 1895 the Gospel Union of Kansas City, U. S. A., sent its missionaries. In 1899 a "Christian" cemetery was opened outside of Marrakesh, due to the efforts of the British Minister, Sir Arthur Nicholson. To enter upon a discussion of the relations which Morocco maintains and has maintained during the past with foreign nations; to consider her diplomatic customs, her commercial intercourse and foreign protection, and to describe the Moroccan literature would here be impossible, but our author has most thoroughly and admirably summarized each of these subjects.

The book is a splendid work, and worthy of the highest commendation. It is amply supplied with maps, copiously and beautifully illustrated, and replete with information and references for the student.

An Elysium in Rochester.*

In Rochester there is an "imperium in imperio." Mr. Robinson may not care for whatever there may be of grandiose in this expression. Any how, in Rochester there is a Third Ward. Sometimes it has been called the "Ruffled Shirt Ward." It is no Little Pedlington. This portion of Rochester retains all that is best of the old ways. Time is regulated by the same clock which has ticked away for the last century. That clock may stop occasionally, but that makes no matter. Of Summer nights all the Third Warders live on the piazzas. The men and women there are not precisely ceremonious. Good behavior is the passport. There are certain social functions peculiar and particular to these Third Warders. It may be that there is some little of a Southern flavoring, and they are none the worse for that. It is not an arrested civilization, because it is in sympathy with all the rest of the world. Of this delightful abode Mr. Charles Mulford Robinson writes in the happiest manner. There is a certain quality about the writing of this little volume which makes the reader think of Charles Lamb. The manufacture of the book is of the prettiest. It is neatness and niceness personified.

Letters Addressed to Washington.

The second volume of "Letters to Washington" comes from the Riverside Press, (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) this week. The Colonial Dames of America, in their dedication to the first volume, state that it was issued at the opening of the year in commemoration of the death of Washington; on the anniversary of his death, at the close of the year, they present their second volume to the public. They are encouraged to continue the work that has been so ably conducted by their editor, Mr. S. M. Hamilton of the Department of State, Washington. His familiarity with the archives, added to his exact and conscientious methods, renders him peculiarly fitted for the task of preparing these transcripts from the original manuscripts in the department, which were preserved for future use by the wise forethought of Washington himself. As the work advances the wider circle of the correspondents will excite a more personal interest in addition to that which exists from the letters being addressed to Washington, and as they unfold they add lustre to his character, showing him, even in his youth, as "he stood head and shoulders above his fellows," known to them, trusted by them, beloved by them, and claiming their reverence.

The Committee on Publication consists of J. J. Boudinot, Julia Livingston Delafield, and Elizabeth Fisher King.

How to Read Scott.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In reading Sir Walter Scott a good and interesting course is to take the novels in chronological order, that is, the oldest in date to begin with.

No one novel is a sequel to another, but the scenes portrayed are fitting to the times in which they are laid, and many being historical, following in order of time is serviceable to fasten events in memory. Thus in "Woodstock" we see Charles II. fleeing from Cromwell, and in "Peveril of the Peak" Charles is restored, and Sir Geoffrey Peveril is girding to serve him as a trusty cavalier. The following is the chronological order of the Waverley novels:

	Date.	In Whose Reign.
Count Robert of Paris	1090	—William Rufus
The Betrothed	1187	—Henry II.
The Talisman	1194	—Richard I.
Ivanhoe	1198	—Richard I.
Castle Dangerous	1306-7	—Edward I.
The Fair Maid of Perth	1406	—Henry IV.
Quentin Durward	1470	—Edward IV.
Anne of Geierstein	1474-7	—Edward IV.
The Monastery	1559 &c.	—Elizabeth.
The Abbot	1568 &c.	—Elizabeth.
Kenilworth	1575	—Elizabeth.
The Laird's Jock	1600	—Elizabeth.
The Fortunes of Nigel	1620	—James I.
A Legend of Montrose	1645-6	—Charles I.
Woodstock	1652	—Commonwealth.
Peveril of the Peak	1660 &c.	—Charles II.
Old Mortality	1679-91	—Charles II. and William and Mary.
The Pirate	about 1709	—William III. or Anne.
My Aunt Margaret's Mirror	1700	—William III.
The Bride of Lammermoor	1700	—William III.
The Black Dwarf	1708	—Anne.
Rob Roy	1715	—George I.
The Heart of Mid-Lothian	1736-51	—George II.
Waverley	1745	—George II.
The Highland Widow	1755	—George II.
The Surgeon's Daughter	1750-70	—George II. and George III.
Guy Mannering	1750-70	—George II. and George III.
The Two Drovers	1765	—George III.
Red Gauntlet	1770	—George III.
The Tapestried Chamber	1720	—George III.
The Antiquary	1795	—George III.
St. Ronan's Well	1800	—George III.

May Mutilate but Cannot Cast Down Idols.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

A few years later than the "shrinking schoolgirl" period I took up "Les Miserables" after a brief convalescence. No one had "pushed me into the arms of that Moloch of dreariness," nor did the reading of it "entail such a strain on my endurance as to leave me wan and enfeebled for six months afterward." Had some kind fate suggested one-tenth of the grandeur contained therein I would have read it sooner.

Like to some traveler who climbs a mountain in the dark, and reaches the summit just in time to catch the glory of the sunrise, so, as I read, out from the depths and darkness of depravity rose in majesty a sun-kissed picture of the ideal.

I was spellbound. The magnificent struggle and triumph of conscience, the pure nobility of Father Blanvenu, the crystallized courage of Enjolras, the gradual development of Marius's manhood, the sweet unfolding of Cossette's womanhood, and, finally, the little waif, Gavroche, stood out in clear relief against a background of dismal conditions and social murkiness. It is impossible for any earnest man or woman to read that masterly portrayal of "the unfortunate ones" and remain indifferent to or without sympathy for his fellow-beings, however degraded or deformed.

"Be noble, and the nobleness that lies
In other men, sleeping but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own."

If Mr. Newberry really has "the courage of his convictions" and is in earnest in this crusade against the established order of things literary, it would be unreasonable to call him a mere [illegible]

A BRITON'S VIEW OF US

Mr. Muirhead, Who Has Been Here Much, Writes a Good Book.*

Philosophers have discussed with great solemnity and learning why the people of the United States should feel so extraordinary an interest in what other folks said about them. The more elaborate their analyses and conclusions the more likely they were to be nonsense. The truth probably is simply that the people of this struggling competitor for the world's trade and surplus people is anxious that nothing should be said about her likely to hurt her reputation and interests. We solicit immigrants and investors, customers and tourists, even brides and bridegrooms, and hence we want a good report to be made of us abroad—or at least a fair one, based upon competent knowledge and sympathy.

This last condition is abundantly fulfilled by Mr. James Fullarton Muirhead, whose book, "The Land of Contrasts," is the latest effort to tell the English-speaking world abroad what manner of place and folk the United States, geographically and socially, seems to him to be. His capability, so far as fullness of information is concerned, is assured by the fact that he has not only spent much time in this country during the past ten years, but has traveled to every part of it for the very purpose of studying it, being required to do so as the compiler and editor of "Baedeker's American Handbook." This task, to which he brought long training, was the very thing to furnish minute knowledge, and at the same time to balance and equalize the local errors and influences from which the best-disposed visitor to a single region, or a few big cities alone, must suffer. When we find the book dedicated to "the land that has given me what makes life most worth living," we feel sure of his friendliness; and when we read his opinion, that the best touchstone for an intending (British) visitor to the United States is to ask himself whether he enjoys the comediettas of Mr. Howells (since these are the most perfect expression in literature of the real American and his surroundings) we are sure he has an insight which will make his adverse notes as truly welcome as his praise will be delightful; for there is nothing for which the enterprising business man (and he is the American) will pay so eagerly and well as for information how he may truly improve himself.

The incessant contrasts presented to the eye and ear and mind of the European visitor survive as the strongest impression made upon this author's mind, and he gives a chapter to them; but he shows, after all, that most of them are very natural, and confesses that he points them out for the purpose of showing how futile it is for a hasty observer to generalize about us, and to suppose that the complexities of American life can be covered by a few epigrammatic statements. His "Lights and Shadows of American Society," which he takes pains to point out is not at all properly represented by "the Newport set," (by which certain foreigners have mainly judged us,) is a pursuit of the same thought into the social phases. In the course of it, as elsewhere, Mr. Muirhead finds fault with almost all recent critics of American life and manners, except Mr. Bryce, from the brutal stupidity or snobbishness of Sir Lepel Griffin, Count Bleichen, or the Rev. Mr. Haweis, and the offensive prejudice of Matthew Arnold, to the more good-natured misapprehensions of Bourget and "Max O'Rell," and various lesser critics. Much of this "International Misapprehension" (the title of another chapter) arises, the writer thinks, from difference of temperament, especially when the American and Briton are compared. The English reserve, as contrasted with American geniality, he illustrates by saying that "the American poet who found his song in the heart of a friend could have done so, were the friend English, only by the aid of a post-mortem examination." He adds: "It requires, however, an intimate knowledge of both countries to understand that when an Englishman congratulates you on a success by exclaiming, 'Hallo, old chap, I didn't know you had it in you,' he means just as much as your American friend, whose phrase is: 'Bravo, Billy, I always knew you could do something fine.'" Of a class with this, and due to similar causes, is the fact, in Mr. Muirhead's estimation, that the moral feeling and principles of the people in the United States in respect to domestic and social matters is distinctly higher than in Great Britain, while the plane of commercial and political morality is lower.

After this it is perhaps needless to say that the author of this friendly book has the highest appreciation of American women, to whom he devotes a chapter full of discriminating interest; and here he rules Bourget out of court altogether, declaring that he has analyzed the American woman until he has lost her altogether, like a flower picked to pieces by a botanist. Some of the rest of us had suspected that this was the outcome of the French critic's methods in some other spheres. Mr. Muirhead has to confess, however, that my lady has the defects of her qualities. "When she is bad she is horrid." Alluding to the lack of individuality in the European girl—her fixture in a set, of which all are alike, and the variety of patterns small, he declares that in the United States every new girl is a new sensation. "Not that the surprises are invariably pleasant. * * * The very force and self-confidence of the American girl doubly and trebly underline the undesirable. Tragedy that would be stilted and stodgy in Middlesex becomes blatant and aggressive in New York."

Other chapters are devoted to sports and amusements—and this is one which those who are interested in comparative athletics will read with great interest—to the humor of the "man on the cars," which Mr. Muirhead finds excellent, and to American journalism, in which the author sees rather more to condemn than in any other phase of our life. Literary chat fills another chapter, largely with an appreciation of Howells and James, which seems to be written rather for the information of the British reader than in a critical spirit, and the latter part of the book is filled with pleasant talk about our cities, railroads, steamboats, (the best in the world,) hotels, &c., all from the pen of a man who evidently meant to take everything at its best.

The largeness of information, the fairness of judgment, trying always to discover whether a custom has not a good foundation, or at least an excuse, however objectionable a stranger may think it at first glance, and the gay spirit of the author recommends the book not only as good reading, but as wise counsel whenever it criticises us.

Not Prostrate Before Idols.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Having been a reader of THE SATURDAY REVIEW for two years, this is my first outbreak, so I hope for pardon. The reason I write is because I am glad to see that some readers of THE SATURDAY REVIEW are not prostrate before the literary idols of the present generation. Any mediocre writer nowadays can win the bay of literary renown by means of a partial reviewer and unscrupulous publishers. Mark Twain is a shining example. What good in a literary way has he ever done? Is he an accomplished stylist, a promoter of some good, ethical motive of benefit to mankind? Does he brighten the human heart through a code of morals? "Joan of Arc" simply showed Twain's ignorance of the art of writing, either as a biographer or as a historian. His other efforts, such as "Huckleberry Finn," are suitable to the intellect of a schoolboy. The famous Rudyard, that blatant literary gymnast, is another of the same ilk. He is simply a fraud when likened to a genius. A few of his stories are fair, the majority decidedly inane. His verse is passable, but in no circumstances can it be called poetry, though an exception might be made in favor of the "Recessional." Such a conglomeration of childish nonsense as "The Day's Work" only shows how much people can be fooled by the "ads" of the publishers when such stuff is actually hailed as the work of a talented mind. What with the decadent school and the modern school, the canons of morality and the canons of literature are decidedly being altered for the worse. Both try to get away from all decent restraint as fast as possible, and then such men as James and Caine pose as men of genius. Men like Lang, Gosse, &c., are really men of talent. As regards fiction, we have no really good second-class writers. Those of the present day are ephemeral without doubt, and ten years from now "The Christian" and "Diana of the Crossways" will sleep side by side, relegated to oblivion in saecula saeculorum. Laying all prejudice aside, it must be admitted that when men like Austin and Caine succeed to the mantles of Tennyson and Dickens, something must be done or this generation will become the laughing stock of posterity.

Timrod's Beautifully Pathetic Life.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

The request of the President of the Timrod Memorial Association appeals to me with peculiar interest and I heartily thank THE SATURDAY REVIEW for publishing it.

Like Timrod, my husband was a native of Charleston and a loyal son of South Carolina. Like Timrod, he was of German and of Swiss descent; he was a poet, too. What cordial recognition would he have given to the young poet of the South! Timrod's life was noble and beautifully pathetic. After such long neglect the memorial to his genius should be at once consummated. It is a privilege to add my mite by the purchase of a copy of the memorial edition of Timrod's poems. MRS. Two Baxters in Neglected Graves.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Under the heading "Benefits Forgot" I have read your several interesting articles about the neglect of the grave of Col. Charles Baxter, who was killed at Chapultepec Sept. 13, 1847. They recall the fact that Col. William Baxter of "Baxter's Flying Camp," killed at the battle of Fort Washington, Nov. 16, 1776, lies in an unhonored grave at Fort George, Tenth Avenue and One Hundred and Ninety-second Street, New York.

In 1894 the place was, and perhaps is yet, a public resort, and near the wooden observatory the proprietor pointed out two unlettered stones, one of which marked Col. William Baxter's resting place. Baxter's command comprised men from Bucks and Northampton Counties, Penn. He was from Bucks County, and one of the earliest to take the side of American liberty. Would it not be well to put his remains in Greenwood alongside the other Baxter? If necessary, why not start a dollar subscription for the purpose?

"The Degeneration of Dorothy" Again.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

When in reading one comes upon such a sweeping dictum in regard to "Degeneration of Dorothy" as "Honest Reader's" it gets on the nerves to the extent of forcing one into print, and as at home it is the habit of the wrathy or the wronged to relieve themselves by writing to The Times there, (England,) I beg to take advantage of this opportunity of relieving myself in THE TIMES here, which seems to occupy as important a position with its public. Therefore, I ask you to print these few words from over the border.

I enjoyed the novel very much, finding it decidedly original in plot; found that it treated the startling plot in a very probable manner; and also found a very keen sense of humor shown all the way throughout in addition to the sparkling and snappy manner in which it is written. And these are all qualities which I fully enjoyed in spite of the fact that we English are supposed to regard our Punch as a criterion of mental pabulum. The chapters on the Pettibone-Peabody ball are a delightful commingling of fun and wit, the whole winding up with the striking finale of the tragic note struck in the midst of the feverish frivolity. "Honest Reader" practically admits that he was entertained, for, as he puts it, he was led by the nose through a series of cunningly contrived incidents. The only inference to be gleaned from his letter, then, is that his nose is long, but his sense of fairness woefully scant. He reminds me of a man who eats a good dinner and then abuses it because of a fit of dyspepsia, when the fault really lies, not with the dinner, you know, but with himself. There is something wrong with "Honest Reader's" mental being, and while he may contend that he has a good head—for the matter of that so has a pin, and the pin would have the advantage of being sharp and to the point, which "Honest Reader" does not seem to be. Congratulating you on your stunning holiday edition of last Saturday, which, like every edition, was vastly appreciated in our vicinity, I have the honor and pleasure so to remain, very truly,

H. MALCOM FITZHERBERT.

Why Mr. Kinsella Wrote the Book.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

As there appears from your REVIEW to be a variety of opinions for and against my novel, "The Degeneration of Dorothy," as voiced by readers in your columns, I ask that you kindly afford me this opportunity of explicitly stating my motives, and also clear up a few disputed points. It is a novel, first of all, designed for a few evenings' entertainment; it is, to a degree, a respectful effort to uphold religion; it is, above all other considerations, a rebuke to materialism. While the elements of humor, pathos, and dramatic interest, which go to make up fiction, predominate, there has also been a humble effort made to outline material for reflection. To what extent any or all of the particulars have been successful only the critic or reader can decide.

As to improbability of plot, I make bold to say that any author is perfectly justified in these days "of nothing new under the sun" in making use of any plot, however startling, which may reveal itself, only in this case I sincerely regret that the author of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" had not forestalled me on this particular theme, for then the public would have had it served up in a decidedly more artistic and masterly manner.

As to some several phrases of moral obliquity—and which I endeavored to treat as delicately as possible—they were only of a necessity exploited because they were stones making up a mosaic of the whole, steps in the progress of the story, finger-posts along the road to the inevitable end—simply that and nothing more.

I am infinitely pleased with Boston's commendation, not that I love Chicago less but Boston more, and congratulate this latter city on the noble and substantial support it has given the grand opera season just now finished in its precincts. This appreciation is unquestionably a criterion of the Hub's transcendent taste in all artistic matters, and, naturally, one cannot help but note in what marked contrast it is to—however, comparisons are odious, even though inevitable.

Thanking you for the privilege of this communication, I am,

FRANK KINSELLA.

Bishop Whipple's Recollections.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Please allow me in your REVIEW an opportunity to saw a few words to your readers with reference to Bishop Whipple's account of his early philosophical sermon, as compared with effective Christian preaching. If the Bishop's friend, Judge Beardsley, could only place that hand of his upon the shoulders of nine-tenths of our New York preachers and repeat his warning, he would be doing us a favor. No matter into what kind of a church or meeting house we go, it is always the same old story. We hear everything except the simple religion of Jesus Christ. That is why religious dissolution is in the down-town air. The laboring classes expend their hard-earned savings in a modish support. They have but small surplus for unnecessary things. And they are possessed of too much of the ordinary common sense to believe in the necessity of those ecclesiastical gentlemen whose only business it seems to be to discourse on Sunday mornings upon philosophical and ecclesiastical nothings, or perhaps to discuss the relative merits and demerits of the Boers and Filipinos. Bishop Whipple's adviser was clearly in the right when he cautioned the youthful clergyman to stick to the old soul-saving Gospel. That is the mightiest medicine that ever came to earth. And we venture to use the good Judge's words, and say to every preacher whom we have heard during the last six months: "Henry, no matter how long you live, never preach that sermon again. You should preach to the tempted, sinful, heavy-laden man, and tell him what you know of Jesus Christ. Only thus—as a preacher—may you become a power in the land."

"His Defense, and Other Stories."

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Harry S. Edwards, who it will be recalled first caught the public attention some years ago as the winner of the ten-thousand-dollar prize offered by The Chicago Record for the best story written for its columns, has again stepped forth in a neat little volume, "His Defense, and Other Stories." Many of these tales we recollect having read in some of the magazines of several years ago, but, nevertheless, the volume lends all the charm of freshness and interest to another perusal.

Most of the stories here collected are centred about the old Southern planters during that happy period "fore de war," when the negroes were still slaves, and, in many cases, in spite of what has been said to the contrary, very happy ones.

The fresh breath of the Georgia roses fills our nostrils while we read the little sketches of that life which is now only a matter of history to us. In the first story, which lends to the book its title, pathos and humor are gently interningled, and the man who is arraigned for "cussing his mother-in-law" pleads his own cause so unconsciously and eloquently that the plaintiff herself, moved to remorse, "pleads guilty."

"William Marshal's Awakening," a tale of two lovers reunited after nearly twenty years of misunderstanding and separation, presents less of the negro element than do the other sketches. The tale is somewhat longer than the rest, and, somehow, we find that we love the dear little "Hummingbird," who makes the "birdies sing," better than any of the other characters, and we find ourselves wishing she would "do it some more."

The author introduces us again to Major Crawford Worthington and the faithful Isam of "Two Runaways" fame, and in their goodly company we spend many a pleasant half-hour.

While the pathos of the tales is apparent, and the lump will rise in our throats, still the smiles come, too, in plenty, and even, like the Georgia weather, we find the sunshine chasing the shadow, and the rainbow gleaming through our tears. G. S.

"The Western Rubaiyat."

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In all the interesting discussions of the Rubaiyat that have brightened the pages of our TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW I have seen no mention of a variant, a tangential output, by Mr. John Kenworthy of England, as published by the Society of the Rose. Mr. Kenworthy calls his quatrains, which have the repetend and break of rhyme we know so lovingly, "The Western Rubaiyat." He sings the Christian joy of faith, and his utterance is large and fine. His stanzas sometimes rise to the mystery and ecstasy that bring the thrill of the Tentmaker's passion which burns upon us through the Celtic magic of Fitz Gerald. As in the Persian, there is no connection but the will-o'-the-wisp trail of poesy between the quatrains. A few stanzas will show the level of the argument and the aptness of the phrasing:

Space infinite, where no star is the last—
The silences, Time Coming and Time Past—
And O the wonder of the Soul in Me
That measures the Immeasurable Vast!
Of Heaven and Hell I lost the map and key
And make inquiry where these bournes might be.
The Lazarus showed me Heaven, and Dives Hell,
And each went in that gate he showed to me.
Beside the Sea of Faith the pilots sit
Debating as to Heaven, the place of it
And points of navigation. But who dares
Hoist sail? Who dares the shores of Mammon quit?

The work is not all inspired, not instinct with the nameless grace that plays in opal splendors in all of Fitz Gerald and parts of many others who have passed on the words of the truest Star Gazer, but it is notable, it seems to some of us, as another effluence of the light that shone at Naisapur when our forefathers still believed in Aralow.

MRS. EDWIN MARKHAM.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Dec. 12, 1899.

A Criticism from Florence.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Mr. Edwin Markham's familiar quatrain, (cited recently at the request of your correspondent "K. A." of Chicago,) which was pronounced the best among 496, is a very remarkable composition. Referring to Poetry, the writer affirms that—

"Her touch is a vibration and a light
From worlds before and after."

Now, leaving aside the question whether a touch can ever be, in itself, a vibration, it is quite certain that it can never be a light, much less a light "from worlds before and after." Before and after what? Is the "touch," which is also a vibration, a light from worlds created before our earth, no less than from others destined to exist after this globe shall have rolled away?

Had the gifted author endeavored to describe, instead of Poetry, the "touch" of a comet colliding with this planet, his definition—although, even in that case, not strictly accurate—would be more nearly correct. In the event supposed, there would be a "touch" and probably some sort of "vibration"; there would be a "light before" and at the time; whether there would be a "light after" I leave to Mr. Markham's fertile imagination.

This gentleman is really entitled to a prize, not for his quatrain, but for his feat in condensing in thirteen words more confused ideas than, probably, were ever contained in the same number. It might be unreasonable to ask him to elucidate the meaning concealed in his verse, and, after all, his obscurity is preferable to Kipling's triviality.

Whatever poetry may be, it is not nonsense, neither is it vulgarity; and if a definition be desired, we already have one (implied at least) in a couplet penned by Thomas Gray nearly 150 years ago:

"Bright Rapture calls, and soaring as she sings,

I need not inform your readers that these lines may be found in the third division of the Pindaric Ode, entitled "The Bard," just before the epode, or, more properly speaking, at the end of the antistrophe.

"In Chimney Corners."

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

The presentation of folk-lore is not usually an achievement in literature, but it is always in some sort a contribution to history. The more at variance is this embodiment of wild and savage imagination with our more commonplace trend of mind, the more of strange interest it offers to our contemplation. In the last book, "In Chimney Corners," by the young Irish schoolmaster, Seumas MacManus, we open doors into a past of which, it seems now, like a romance, to dream. We sit with him in the chimney corners and listen to tales, so old that they have found their way into almost every language—amused, as well as amazed, at the audacities of purpose, the barbaric daring, and splendid irresponsibility of bygone inventive genius. There evidently was a time in human history when fact could be by no possibility as strange as fiction! In good truth, the perusal of these pages leads us to the serious conclusion that we have no fiction at the present day, nothing that can rightfully be called so. We read, with a sense of being transported, into that mental attitude of receptivity, which makes it natural to listen with a feeling of belief, in the power of the single hand, the colossal weakness of giants, and the wisdom of henwives. Much, indeed, is due to the art of the story teller and to the charming art of this especial story teller, it being decidedly of that rare quality which is said to conceal itself. The raconteur has endeavored, and successfully, to repeat the tales as he gathered them from "word o' mouth," by the cabin peat fires of his native town land, and from the archives of his boyhood memories. Many of his Irish readers will recognize the truth, both of tradition and expression, notably in the quaint set phrases that begin and end these tales. The volume is strikingly illustrated by Pamela Smith with an appropriate savageism of outline and color, and is a fine example of bookmaking throughout. MADELINE S. BRIDGES.

Still of "David Harum."

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

If there is left in THE REVIEW space and patience for something additional apropos of "David Harum," it would gratify the subscriber to go on record with those who do not comprehend the continually advertised popularity and phenomenal sale of the book.

To people whose affection for the horse is abnormal, who delight in rural dialect and "country talk," often coarse and vulgar, and whose ideas of fun are realized in a circus clown—people, in short, never conspicuous for much refinement, "David Harum," is, perhaps, a treasure and a delight.

Among others the name is never mentioned.

The Newport breakfast, with its disgusting egg episode; the dinner party at the same place, at which David, encouraged by the hostess, narrated the story of an animal, the name of which is an offense; the tobacco juice expectorations on hot coals to emit a steam from the office grate; the explanation of the birth of David's son, and other similar incidents make a combination of vulgarisms and a collection of nastiness quite exceptional in books having a reputable publisher's imprint.

And those horse trade incidents—what do they amount to, even with the crude wit that indirectly ridicules religion?

There is nothing ennobling or uplifting in the book, nothing that will make men or women the better for its reading. David is not an ideal man, even allowing his generous impulses upon some occasions. His precepts and maxims may create a laugh among those having easily affected risibles, but do not point a moral or adorn a tale.

If there is a redeeming feature it is the courtship of Mary Blake and John Lenox, albeit neither is a strong character, but the side lights at the beginning and end are pretty.

In brief, "David Harum," like asafetida, is an acquired taste. For those accustomed to a better and more wholesome quality of things printed it is repulsive fare.

The stage management of the book has been commercially skillful. Thousands have purchased, no doubt, because of the hurrah and furor. The attraction of numbers has its influence on the sale of books as well as in the concentration of a mob.

To estimate the literary value of a novel by its sale, real or rumored, is precarious. Popular taste is not always refined. Witness "Trilby," the earlier works of Kipling, et al., unnecessary to enumerate at this time. But since we are told that "David Harum" has paid the debts its author left, and has produced a sum sufficient to invest for his family it has served a purpose in one way. In all others it seems ineffectual.

"The Ship of Stars."

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

You have given us in THE REVIEW many such admirable reviews of new books, and some such really valuable ones, that it was with a distinct feeling of pleasure that I saw in THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW that you had a notice of Mr. Quiller-Couch's beautiful story, "The Ship of Stars." It was with a feeling not unlike indignation that I laid the paper down after reading the notice. The review was a synopsis of the plot, by no means an unusual one, and so given as not only to spoil the book for the considerable number of readers who care much for the story, but to make unduly prominent the painful and too common episode which so influences Taffy's blameless life. And this with scarcely a hint of the uncommon beauty of the characters, Taffy's father and mother and himself. The lovely surroundings of Taffy's babyhood, the strength of purpose to do and renounce, who would gather from the review? It was not fair to your readers, nor to your paper, nor to Mr. Quiller-Couch, who has given us in "The Ship of Stars" a book of great beauty and strength, and one written in a most admirable style. Even his completion of "St. Ives" and his "Splendid Spur" had not prepared us for this remarkable contribution to the literature of the year. Perhaps it is because you have taught us to expect too much that I am moved to remonstrate.

New Calendars.

The Youth's Companion Calendar for 1900, which will be presented to all new subscribers to the periodical, is worthy of notice. It is made of three heavy half-tone plaques, attached so that when opened they may rest upright. The oval centrepiece, in dainty colors and inclosed in a border of embossed gold and flowers, represents "A Dream of Summer," and is supported on each side by an admirably executed figure piece in delicate tints.

E. P. Dutton & Co. are publishing over 150 different designs of calendars for 1900, including everything from the simple card and block calendars to elaborately painted boards of flowers, and reproductions of paintings and of etching on various subjects. Outdoor sports and indoor games furnish subjects for some of the designs. There are, too, over twenty-five varieties of purse, pocket, and miniature calendars. There are literary calendars—Shakespeare, Dickens, Phillips Brooks; art calendars—the English cathedrals in colors, the Holy Family, the Fra Angelico, the Madonna and the Landseer. The army and navy are also represented. Together they make a very beautiful and large display.

The English Illustrated Journals.

Looking over in the most casual way the English illustrated journals, always so resplendent at this season of the year, one cannot but think that the "holiday season" is not one of rejoicing in the heretofore "Merry England." Publishers cannot always look a year in advance, and so the large colored prints, which accompany the illustrated papers, have to be arranged for months before their issue. In many a home, once happy, there is sorrow to-day. Following their usual custom, The Illustrated London News, The Graphic, The Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News, The Gentlewoman, The Sketch, and The Figaro all send forth their holiday numbers. These are all remarkable for their colored prints. There is a picture of Caton Woodville's, "Up, Guards, and at Them!" that episode of Waterloo, and another of Lance Calkin's, "A Story That Will Never Die," showing how the English soldiers, over 400 of them, went down on a sinking ship, the Birkenhead, while a little bugler sounded their death call. It is a wonderful display of color all these journals show. The publishers of these illustrated journals seem to impose no limits to expenditure. Pear's Annual is not a whit behind any of the regular journals. In its full-page illustrations there is a Landseer facsimile reproduction of "Shooting the Bay Mare," with Miss Mutrie's "Summer Glory," a fine study in flowers.

De Quincey's Interpretation of Coleridge.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

I should refer any one curious as to the meaning of Coleridge's "Ancient Mariner" to De Quincey. In "The Spanish Nun," about half way through the paper, is an interpretation, or rather three, which will prove enlightening, I am sure. S. W.

NOTES AND NEWS.

I.—NEW YORK.

The Vogue of Sea Tales.

The season just drawing to a close has been a remarkable one as far as the action of the sea is concerned. Frank T. Bullen's tales, "The Log of a Sea-Waif," "The Cruise of the Cachalot," and "Idyls of the Sea," published by D. Appleton & Co., have found many readers. Then there is Herbert E. Hamblen's "The Yarn of a Bucko Mate," published by Charles Scribner's Sons, which has aroused much discussion as to the treatment of sailors on the high seas. W. Clark Russell, too, has recently produced a couple of books, "The Ship: Her Story" and "Voyage at Anchor," which have not only appealed to many, but have created a new demand for earlier works by this author. One significant sign of the times is the fact that "Smith Brunt," published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, passed into its second edition within ten days after publication. Many copies of the book have been purchased by the old sea dogs on Long Island, where many of the scenes in Mr. Post's novel are laid. There has been much wagging of gray beards over the author's seamanship, particularly where it concerns the manœuvres of frigates or "frigots," as they call them on the Long Island coast. In the description of the capture of the Essex the author has included a map with a tracing of the courses of the two British vessels, showing how they could take advantage of their long-range guns to destroy the American ship at their leisure.

A Magazine of Contemporary Thought.

The first number of The International Monthly has just been published by the Macmillan Company. It contains five articles. Edouard Rod writes on "Later Evolutions of French Criticism"; Prof. Shaler, "Influence of the Sun Upon the Formation of the Earth's Surface"; Charles de Kay, "Organization Among American Artists"; Prof. Trowbridge, "Recent Advance in Physical Science," and Norman Hapgood, "The Theatrical Syndicate." The magazine is simply bound in a green wrapper, and contains about 150 pages. Most of the articles are timely. Mr. de Kay's article, for example, will have much interest for the isolated painters who, although possessing talent, even genius, have failed to succeed because of their lack of combination and their disregard of any attempt to apply business principles to their work. On the other hand, regarding dramatic artists, Mr. Hapgood tries to show that the commercial and combining elements are not nice. The other articles are important expressions of contemporary thought concerning subjects of the day. The editor of the magazine is assisted by an advisory board, which is made up of well-known specialists in the various departments of arts and sciences.

Two Christmas Souvenirs.

Among the privately printed but published Christmas souvenirs which are now on sale at most newsdealers are "Imperial Christmas: 1811," and "The Newsboys' Christmas Party." The first is a translation from the French by Dorothy Lamon, a lady of Washington, and the other is the work of Miss Jane Zacharias of Baltimore. The first is a description of the emotions that moved the first Napoleon as he stood by the cradle of the little King of Rome on the Christmas eve and early morning of the year 1811, when he is said first to have given expression to his desire to become the master of the entire world. The text is well printed, and the fifteen pages are bound in a light green wrapper bearing a portrait of Napoleon. "The Newsboys' Christmas Party" is an entertaining description of an actual annual function in Baltimore, but so written that it has all the charm of a Christmas carol. The little book is prettily illustrated with half-tone reproductions of photographs.

Meeting of the American Historical Society.

The American Historical Society will hold its fifteenth annual meeting in Boston, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, Dec. 27-29, 1899. The headquarters of the society will be at the Brunswick Hotel. Addresses of welcome will be delivered by the Hon. Josiah Quincy, Mayor of Boston, and by his Excellency Roger Wolcott, Governor of the Commonwealth; Mr. Paul Leicester Ford will take for his topic "A Plea for Economic History." There will be a discussion on "Foreign Relations," the Hon. George F. Hoar, Prof. John B. Moore, Mr. Edwin V. Morgan, and Prof. H. Morse Stephens taking part in the same. An "Address of Welcome" will be delivered by Mrs. Louis Agassiz. On Saturday members will have the opportunity to visit Plymouth, Lexington, Concord, Salem, or any other points of historical interest in the vicinity of Boston. All correspondence should be addressed to Mr. A. Lawrence Lowell, 171 Marlborough Street, Boston. The officers of the society are: President—James Ford Rhodes, LL. D.; First Vice President—Edward Eggleston, L. H. D.; Second Vice President—Moses Coit Tyler, LL. D., L. H. D.; Secretary—Herbert B. Adams, Ph. D., LL. D.; Treasurer—Clarence W. Bowen, Ph. D.; Assistant Secretary and Curator—A. Howard Clark; Secretary of the Church History Section—Samuel Macauley Jackson, D. D., LL. D.

New York Public Library Acquisitions.

The last bulletin of the New York Public Library announces the acquisition of transcripts made for the library from the public Record Office at London, relating to the American Loyalists and to provincial troops during the war of independence. The number contains an English translation of the Benavides report, on New Mexico, of 1626. There is a list of works relating to South Africa, also material relating to the first two Congresses of the United States. The Benavides Memorial is a very curious one. The manuscript of this was bought for the Lenox Library in 1894. Friar Benavides says about the Mexicans: "We have used all methods, as must be the usual ones for the security of the road, and both by their barbarity that they do not let us speak to them. The Lord will be pleased to let the time come of their conversion as of others."

Mrs. Crowninshield's Story of Mme. Adam's Abbey.

Mrs. Schuyler Crowninshield, who has written some charming books, in entirely different styles, however, since her return from Europe has been employed upon a modern novel, whose scene is laid in France, within the walls of an old château and convent, where she was a visitor during a part of her stay. The place is historical, and of such importance that a thick volume has been written, by a father of the Church, dealing with its history. The abbey and convent were in existence in 1150. The owner of the abbey is Mme. Edmond (Juliette) Adam, the literary woman who has just retired from the editorship of La Nouvelle Revue. Mme. Adam has expressed herself as pleased that so much interest should centre around her estate. The tale deals, incidentally, with a crime of terrible atrocity, none the less atrocious because concealed beneath a mask of apparent friendliness and bonhomie. Mrs. Crowninshield has changed the scene somewhat to suit her people, but the main points of interest remain. Much of the old convent, with its narrow barred windows and its thick and high walls, (which surround the large estate as well as the dwellings,) is intact, but the abbey church is open to the sky. Great trees are growing in the interior, where once the nuns chanted their midnight chorus, their roots imbedded in the aisles where the "religious" used to walk in solemn procession to their holy service.

How Popular Novels Circulate.

Some two or three weeks ago we gave, as an index of the demand for certain popular books, a statement of their circulation in the Buffalo Library. The following statement from the same library continues the history and chronicles of in interesting change in the relative positions of the books. Considering past figures and the time that has elapsed since the publication of "David Harum," almost everybody in Buffalo must have read Mr. Westcott's tale. From present data it would seem that the other books mentioned are to be equally fortunate. The library has now on hand the following number of copies:

"David Harum"	54
"When Knighthood Was in Flower"	47
"Richard Carvel"	79
"Janice Meredith"	47

The following is the waiting list:

For "David Harum"	3
"When Knighthood Was in Flower"	55
"Richard Carvel"	120
"Janice Meredith"	132

The three of the above books which are published in New York are now selling as follows: "David Harum," 400,250; "Richard Carvel," 285,000; "Janice Meredith," 143,000. So far this month orders for "David Harum" have been filled at D. Appleton & Co.'s to the amount of 43,000 copies.

Many important changes and improvements have been made in the scheme of education conducted by Chautauqua. For example, the price of the books and magazines used by the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle has been reduced one-third. George H. Licks, Hudson County Secretary of the Circle, has just started a monthly four-page leaflet entitled Literary Notes.

Col. Richard Henry Savage has just completed a new novel, which is now in active preparation by Rand, McNally & Co. It is entitled "Captain Landon," and is said to be the best work of the author. The scene is laid in Rome, the characters are American, and the action is rapid from beginning to end.

"Year Book of the Art Societies of New York, (1898-9)" will shortly be published. The work will be brought out under the auspices of the National Sculpture Society. It will contain reports of meetings, summaries of reports of important committees, reviews of exhibitions, notable papers, and discussions of public moment, together with sixteen illustrations in half-tone that have been prepared expressly for this publication.

John Lane is publishing "Poems by Matthew Arnold," with an introduction by Arthur Christopher Benson, and illustrations by Henry Ospovat; "In Cap and Bells," by Owen Seaman; "The Decay of Sensibility, and Other Essays," by Stephen Gwynn, and "The Real Malay (Pen Pictures,)" by Sir F. A. Swettenham.

Col. R. J. Hinton expects to issue his new "Richard Realf" volume early in 1900. Mention has already been made of this work in these columns. The plan of the new volume embodies a collection of prose writings, a number of remarkable war letters, the poet's lectures, and some thirty or more additional poems, a number of which have not been published heretofore. The book will be issued by the Literary Life Publishing Company of Norwalk, Ohio. The Roycroft Shop proposes to print "The Little Journey" thereto, which Col. Hinton furnished to THE SATURDAY REVIEW of Dec. 9 in a booklet de luxe.

One of THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW list of 100 books for holiday gifts, printed in the issue of Dec. 9, perished in the Lippincott fire. This is Anne Hollingsworth Wharton's "Salons, Colonial and Republican." The whole edition was nearly ready for distribution just as the fire came and destroyed it. It is hoped that the volume may be reset, printed, and bound in time to bring it out for the Easter season.

The appearance of the one hundred and fiftieth thousand of "When Knighthood Was in Flower" has been celebrated by the publishers by the issuance of a new edition, printed from new plates on a new and heavier paper. To this edition is added a portrait, and biographical sketch of the author, and a portrait of Miss Julia Marlowe, for whom the book is being dramatized.

II.—BOSTON.

BOSTON, Dec. 14.—"What is the use of buying a complete edition of Dr. Holmes?" asked a wicked person while yet the Autocrat was on earth; "he will spoil it within a week by writing a new poem for somebody or something." What is the use of publishing a list of holiday books? might also be asked, if before the ink is dry a small army of new books march up and ask to be enrolled. Here is one day's Boston list, for instance:

First, the ponderous fourth volume of William Laird Clowes's "The Royal Navy," with a portrait of Nelson never before published, and painted when his style was only Sir Horatio Nelson, Viscount Nelson, K. B. It is taken from a picture in the possession of William Pugsr Thornton, Canterbury. This volume brings the history down to 1802, and the editor announces that the complete work will consist of six instead of five volumes, as originally intended. The voyages of Cook, the Revolutionary battles, and the story of Cape St. Vincent are the most important things in the volume, but its lists of losses in the English and foreign navies, and its statistics of many kinds make it valuable to the men of all the fighting races. Like the other volumes, it abounds in text pictures, besides having photogravure portraits of four more Admirals and seven full-page pictures.

With this comes "Philip Nolan's Friends," Dr. Hale's historical novel, prematurely published in 1876, before the "Revolutionary" offspring of many sorts began to flourish, and therefore hardly noticed, except as a pleasant variation from the ordinary magazine story of the time. Its scene is what was then the Far West—that is, the Louisiana which the King of Spain was about to cede to the French Republic, leaving his Governors and subjects to settle their difficulties with one another, the French, the Americans, and the Indians as best they might. In the preface Dr. Hale suggests that the Southern hatred of Spain may proceed in part from the memory of Nolan's murder, which is possible, although the more recent Texan and Mexican wars must probably bear the heavier part of the burden. The publishers of these two books, Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., issue also "The Rebel's Daughter," a novel by J. G. Woerner, a very large book and not exactly entitled to be called light literature. In truth, its characters are very stiff and their speech is dull, but the author, being well acquainted with the subject, has been able to show the position of the German immigrant in the slaveholding South, and to expound his views, and the story is really worth the attention of a historian. It need hardly be said that the German dwarfs all the mere Americans. One expects that, and it is not necessary to quote Mr. Leowell in reference to it.

"The Puritan as Colonist and Reformer," by the Rev. Dr. Ezra Hoyt Byington, is half a world away from Mr. Woerner's novel. The author is not in the least disturbed by the discoveries made by the pseudo-historical societies; he does not admit that the Puritan stock was only one among many in the New England colonies, but credits it with the ancestry of nearly all New Englanders up to the close of the last century, and he gives the Puritan credit for as much education and taste as his contemporaries, and makes out a very good case for him. The closing chapter on Shakespeare and the Puritans is curiously independent in manner and thought. Lastly, Messrs. Little & Brown issue "In Ghostly Japan," by Mr. Lafcadio Hearn, with translations of proverbs and poetry; with stories of spirits that make table tipping seem a sport too low for anthropoid apes; with a paper on incense, and with page on page of courageous speculation connecting each soul with all existing or about to exist, and compelling the dullest reader to try to use his imagination.

"The Two Legacies," by Miss Georgina Lowell Putnam, is a puzzle. It is printed in an old-fashioned way, but the story itself might have been written in Palestine, or any place remote from the real struggle of civilized nineteenth century life. The legacies are a little brother, whom the hero's dying mother charges him to protect, and a box of money left by his father. He cherishes the boy very tenderly, but when the money is stolen he has not the courage to live from hand to mouth without saving, and economizes in order to renew his reserve fund. The little boy dies just as the money is made up and—that is all. "Well, don't pity him," says the author. "We'll lay his little coffin down gently by his mother's. Ned is living: pity him." In the whole book there is not one sordid touch; not an unkind word, nothing but unselfish love; and yet one sees that Ned will all his life be pursued by a ghost whispering that he might have kept his little brother with him. It is such a story as a tenderly nurtured child might write to make herself weep, but all that is known about it is that Mr. Lowell, the author's uncle, thought very highly of it. Perhaps he found it a blessed relief from some of the "real" stories. Mr. Horace E. Scudder has made a little "Book of Legends" as a companion for his "Fables" and "Folk Stories." It uses simple language to repeat tales which the modern child is not allowed to read where his fathers found them, St. George, King Cophetua, William Tell, Gelert, and eleven others. One looks at it, remembers those board school children discovered by Arnold, unable to tell what a steed was, and is thankful. These two are from Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

Messrs. Small, Maynard & Co. issue seven poems by Mr. Bliss Carman in a new slip of a book. Two have more rhythm than one expects to find in the verses of poets like Mr. Carman, and seem as if they might be written in answer to a challenge, but they are as carefully wrought as the others. The best are "Migrants," a greeting to Northern birds found in a tropic orange tree, and "In Bay Street," a ballad carrying the lesson that none can sell or buy "the power to love and see." The book is dedicated to T. B. M., Mr. T. B. Meteyard. "In Case of Need," by Mr. Ralph Bergengrin, a series of rimed and pictured lessons, both purposely absurd, and Mr. Oliver Herford's long announced "Alphabet of Celebrities," accompany Mr. Carman's book.

THOREAU.

His Teaching that All Have Time to Be Wise and to Cultivate the Spirit.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Among the many interesting letters called out by your editorial article on "Autumn with the Poets," the beautiful and suggestive quotations from Thoreau led me to take up a certain little soft leather copy of essays, bearing his name, and to try to learn anew how "in every life there might be time to be wise, opportunity to tend the growth of the spirit."

We cannot perhaps give up the strife of life and depart into the woods and live upon 27 cents a week, but we may occasionally call to mind that cabin on Walden Pond, and find in its contemplation what Stevenson calls "a station on man's underground railway from slavery to freedom." Oh! this slavery of living—spending one's real life in the struggle for physical existence, while the unfulfilled craving for wisdom and knowledge cries out for leisure, for freedom. So, though we may not build a hermitage away from the turmoil of life, may we not claim a portion of each day—and not the left-over, and most worthless, portion—for a soul-hermitage where we can stop and think and study?

One must read as he runs, says a practical man; yes, but one gets weary reading and running at the same time, and either the running becomes a walk and the race is not won, or the reading degenerates into hasty and superficial perusal of papers and magazines. Information thus gained is untrustworthy as a guide and unfit for use, so reading is gradually dropped and the sordid days are reached.

Another hard worker contends that we gain wisdom, and that wisdom best fitted for our special needs, by our daily life, by contact with people, by doing and not by reading of what others have done, in, perhaps, totally unlike circumstances. He declares that there is entirely too much reading, and that of the making of books he is sick. Granted that there may be too much reading and that there is, certainly, much unwise reading, still the mind must be exercised, fed, and recreated as well as the body, and in our search for truth, which is mental food, we must consult others, wiser and more thoughtful than ourselves. Thoreau says, "For what are the classics but the noblest recorded thoughts of man?"

This man, Thoreau, bred in a New England home where the fugitive slave was received and sent on, encouraged, to the next hiding place; where the family lived most frugally, that the intellectual life might be nourished, and cheerfully stinted itself that he might have his education at Harvard, must surely have imbibed lessons of the value of freedom and the beauty of self-sacrifice that sank deeply into a temperament already molded to such traits—traits inherited, presumably, from his Scotch grandmother. From his French grandfather he, doubtlessly, derived his facile touch, enabling him to earn a living at any manual work, such as the making of lead pencils, (at which industry he, later in life, supported his family;) also to this grandparent he probably owed his mastery of words, finding always the one most exactly suited to his meaning. By the way, one of the most amuging episodes in Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy," it seems to me, is Tommy's loss of the prize for literary composition because, after starting well and hopefully, he consumed the allotted time in seeking through his mind for a particular word he wanted, but could not find. The consternation of his teachers and friends, who were sanguine of his success in this line of work, is the one touch needed to complete the picture, which none but a literary artist could have conceived.

But to return to Thoreau—can we not learn from this "poet-naturalist," or, as Mr. Roberts, with finer insight, prefers to call him, this "Liberator," some truths on the favorite topic of reading?

He speaks of his residence at Walden as being more favorable to thought and to serious reading than a university; and after his two years there, his book of essays attests the truth of his statement and fulfills the purpose for which he went—viz., to grow in health and mind and to work and seek truth for himself and for humanity.

He loved and revered the old masters, and thought they should be read in their own language, saying: "It is worth the expense of youthful days and costly hours if you learn only some words of an ancient language, which are raised out of the trivialness of the street, to be perpetual suggestions and provocations."

It has always seemed to me that the happy people are the busy people—those that live out each day fully and roundly, and at night behold a larger horizon than at morning. Eliminating fret and worry, one can scarcely work too hard. Some physical work, some mental work, blending with both a moral purpose and a cheerful spirit, if nicely apportioned, will make a complete character.

Thoreau evidently did not consider reading as a mere recreation, for he says: "To read well—that is, to read true books in a true spirit—is a noble exercise, and one that will task the reader more than any exercise which the customs of the day esteem," and again he speaks of that reading doing us good which we have to stand on tiptoe to read, and to which we must devote our most alert and wakeful hours. Referring to the fact that Alexander carried the "Iliad" with him on his expeditions in a precious casket, he asserts that a written word is the choicest of relics, being the work of art nearest to life itself, being carved out of the breath of life and capable of being breathed again by others.

The same questions have presented themselves to man in all ages and have been variously answered—it is as if the great have said, "We who are about to die salute you"—and shall we not listen? "How many a man has dated a new era in his life from the reading of a book?" And, finally, can we not say with this gentle stoic, "If we live in the nineteenth century, why should we not enjoy the advantages which the nineteenth century offers?"

HELEN CHURCH.

Brooklyn, Nov. 29, 1899.

Notes of a Recent Visit to Walden Pond.

The walk from Cambridge to Concord by way of Lexington is a delightful one, and to the person interested in the early struggle for liberty, doubly so. The journey can be made in a day by one accustomed to walking, but too much time must not be spent on the many by-paths of historic interest. This preliminary walk somehow inclines the mind to a receptive mood for what follows, foreign as it is to the memory of those stirring scenes of ancient days, mileposts to which are to be found on the King's Highway.

The most direct road from Concord to Walden Pond runs across a fertile though somewhat uncultivated meadow, bordered sparsely by shade trees. The signs of recent changes in the landscape are few. The ascent of the hill lying between the pond and the termination of the traveled path is by means of a wood road that shows signs of continued use, winding up and over knolls thinly covered with sprouts of oak and chestnut. Frequent pine stumps give evidence of the predominating quality of the former woods. This road, shaded by no tree, bordered by a fire-blackened undergrowth, somehow breathes of desolation, and is the antithesis of those charms which commonly attach to a rural pathway.

The top of the hill reached, the visitor finds the hand of destruction stayed. Here is a forest, the trees of which are of fine growth, and diverse in species. Thinned here and there by the woodman, glades and vistas are afforded, the cool retreats of which are inviting to the eye.

The pond, which is now to be seen through the trees, is of such uncertain shape as to impress the beholder with a sense of magnitude quite in advance of the truth. The somewhat indented shores furnish bays and headlands in miniature, like those of a large lake held in bounds by mountainous surroundings. The survey of this sheet of water as made by Thoreau one Winter, when its surface was firmly frozen, gives the total area as about sixty-two acres. Unless the observer stands at either end near the axis of its greatest length, its true size is not apparent. The surrounding hills rise quite abruptly at the southern border, but on the side from which the described approach was made the descent is gentle. The color of the water is that of the sky when revealed by rifts in the clouds after a Summer shower has passed. As described by Thoreau himself, "a matchless and indescribable light blue, such as watered or changeable silks and sword blades suggest, more cerulean than the sky itself."

The objective point of every visitor to the pond is the site of the little house, or cabin, which furnished Thoreau a home for two years. The experience there gained of life in the woods added to much earlier knowledge of the same sort, along with the exercise of his rare genius for contemplation, laid the foundation for his principal book, "Walden." The house, of which there is no known picture except that which serves as a partial frontispiece to the first edition of the book just named, was a very small affair, as seen in the picture and as described by Thoreau. It was built by its tenant, and not long after his occupancy ceased it was removed by a near-by farmer, and then by accident destroyed.

The greatest length of the pond is east and west, the deepest bay, though not the largest, is on the northern shore, about an eighth of a mile from the extreme western limit. Coming down from the hillside to meet this bay is a small ravine, which widens somewhat as it goes downward. Every summer shower or settled rain has furnished a fugitive brook, which here finding course, has gradually brought down with it some grains of sand or portion of mold, which, spreading out as the stream grew less rapid, formed a slight plateau about midway between the top of the hill and the little plain just above the before-mentioned bay. Upon this natural level the house was built. The hill in the rear served as a wind-break, the southern exposure moderated some of the chill of Winter and furnished a pleasing prospect of shore, water, and the distant hills. The ravine was a natural drain for superfluous water. No remnant of the stonework upon which the building rested is in its former place, though it is probable that the larger portion of it is to be found in the cairn here erected. A depression indicates the situation of the cellar. The visitor does not need to draw very largely upon his imagination to picture the scene presented to the beholder of fifty years ago, which is about the date of Thoreau's occupancy. The chestnut tree which he describes as shading his dwelling was absent, and the writer was unable to find the trees standing on either side of the path which were passed between by Thoreau, even in the darkest night, with the ease born of long experience. The larger trees now standing near the site of the cabin were by, and an oak some distance down the hill toward the lake, give evidence of sufficient age to have been classed as sturdy trees in Thoreau's time. The path to the pond and the by-path which leads to the eastward are plainly marked, both mute witnesses of the past. The glint of the sun is still seen reflected from the polished boles of the black birches; the sunlight falls upon the path, sifting down through the boughs of the hemlocks that stood near the door of Thoreau's rude cabin. The humble flower raises its petals to delight the eye of the beholder, colored by the never-failing alchemy of nature, a constant reminder of the resurrection of matter. Yet that master mind to whom all of these mentioned simple things were a double delight is but a memory. Human life seems trivial when compared with the continued forces of nature and their ever-present results in field, flower, and tree.

Walden Pond is attractive as a beautiful expanse of water nestling down among the hills, and will ever so remain unless the seeming need for fuel should make it necessary to devastate the surrounding woodlands and thus remove the setting of this rural gem. Since no brooks contribute or acknowledge it as their source, it is to be hoped that its waters may not be diverted to a use less pleasing than the reflection of the sky or its wooded shores. Its greatest attraction, though, and ever will be, is its association with Thoreau and his self-enforced hermitage. It is not the purpose of the writer to discuss any cause leading to that retirement. He said it arose from a desire "to anticipate not the sunrise and the dawn merely, but if possible Nature herself!" Let that remain a sufficient reason. The experience gained here enabled him to "demonstrate triumphantly and forever that this life of ours may be of infinite value, and joy, even, when lived under circumstances ordinarily regarded as most discouraging."

A. S. CLARK.

"Dutch Courage."

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

The phrase "Dutch courage" has been popularly used to reflect upon the bravery of the Hollander. Strange that this should be as we view him in the light of history! At the opening of the present war, together with other disparaging epithets, this was thrown up at the Boers of the Transvaal. That mode of warfare, however, has now ceased, and, whether victorious or defeated, the Dutchman will hereafter never be regarded as cowardly. Dr. Griffis quotes the phrase in its base sense in his book entitled "Brave Little Holland." I have been interested in discovering, as I think, its origin. It means an enforced and boastful courage when in an intoxicated condition. An example of this is given in Sir Walter Scott's "Heart of Midlothian," Vol. II., Page 68, Household Edition. The scene is in the old barn by the wayside, where was a gathering of desperate characters, including Madge Wildfire and her mother. The conference is between the mother and Frank, a robber. The old hag says: "Why, you must know, Frank, but first taste a snap of right Hollands." She drew a flask from her pocket and filled the fellow a large bumper, which he pronounced to be the right thing. "You must know, then, Frank—wunna ye mand your hand?" again offering the flask.

"No, no—when a woman wants mischief from you, she always begins by filling you drunk, D—n all Dutch courage. What I do I will do soberly. I'll last the longer for that, too."

The Literature of India and Persia.

It is announced by Columbia University that a course of lectures on "The Literature of Ancient India and Persia," open to all students of the university and to the public, is being given during the Winter months of 1899-1900. The first six of the series are being delivered by Dr. A. V. Williams Jackson, Professor of Indo-Iranian Literatures. They are held on Tuesday afternoons, at 3:30, in Room 305, Schermerhorn Hall. The remaining subjects and dates of Prof. Jackson's series are as follows: Jan. 9, "The Mahabharata; or, Sanskrit Epic Poetry"; Jan. 16, "The Ramayana and Other Heroic Poems"; Jan. 23, "The Hindu Drama and Kalidasa"; Jan. 30, "The Successors of Kalidasa in Sanskrit Dramatic Poetry." No tickets are required for these lectures.

Two Anecdotes.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

It has often been said that unconscious humor is the best, and the following anecdote seems to prove the truth of the saying: The other evening at dinner a little lady who had been seriously reading Mr. Frank Stockton's collection of strange and wonderful tales contained in "A Story Teller's Pack," gravely announced that she had been reading Mr. Stockton's "A Pack of Lies." The application seemed so ludicrously true that a general roar went up and the little lady retired in calm indignation behind her coffee cup.

It was the same lady who after returning from one of Mr. Ian Maclaren's dialect lectures complained of the difficulty of understanding him. "What did he lecture about?" inquired an interested if less grammatical friend. "Oh, I should judge about an hour and a half," came the weary reply.

THE Book on the Transvaal.

Twenty thousand copies of the work have already been sold in England, and the publishers both there and in this country have scarcely been able to keep it in stock.

Lord Rosebery recently said: "I would simply suggest to you that you should procure a book called by J. F. Fitzpatrick—a book which seems to me to bear on every page and in every sentence the mark of truth, and which gives you wholesale and in detail an extraordinary and, I think I may say, an appalling record of the way in which the government of the Transvaal was carried on and the subjection to which it reduced your fellow countrymen."

The author, a South African by birth, a resident of the Transvaal since 1884, was Secretary of the Reform Committee, and he has made a record that will be part of the history of South Africa. With index.

eral books. Her first was the history of the Parish of Shiplake, where she has lived for thirty-three years. This book, a true labor of love with her, took four and one-half years to write, and contains papers of much interest from the different Crown records for nearly every reign from the Conqueror to the present Queen. It is getting to be a scarce book. It is profusely illustrated. In 1896 she wrote a "Historical Guide to Henley-on-Thames," a neighboring town. She has also a book on animals, and a smuggling tale of the last century not published yet. Besides this, she has written in various magazines.

Shiplake is interesting for many reasons. Granger wrote his "Biographical History of England" when vicar there. Gray once staid here. Tennyson was married from the house this author lives in and in the church of which her husband is vicar. The church contains magnificent colored windows from the ruined Abbeys of St. Bertin and St. Omer. Mr. Swinburne once resided there with his parents.

The author has just had the whole of her great-great-aunt's, the famous Mrs. Montagu's, correspondence given to her. She hopes to string together not only her letters, but letters from Johnson, Mrs. Thrale, Lyttleton, Chatham, Pitt, Sterne, E. Wortley, and hundreds of others.

The Briton and the Boer in Conflict.*

It seems unphilosophical to find it stated that most of the troubles in this world arise from racial hatreds. In "Briton and Boer" there are many authorities giving reasons for the war in the Transvaal. Mr. Bryce does justice to both sides. He does not overlook the personal equation. Mr. Sydney Brooks is decidedly for the English. He wants to know how an American would have stood years of snubbing. The Boer, from all accounts, belongs to the sixteenth century. His best traits are the animal ones, and these are by no means to be despised. He shows what a determined fighter he is. He is, however, unconscious of the changes the world has made, and is indifferent to them. Mr. Carnegie's main point is that the Dutch, being the more prolific race, will always outnumber the English in South Africa. Max Nordau's theme covers all humanity and is of universal application. Mr. Demetrius Boulger belches forth fire and flame. He scales the loftiest volcano of politics. Russia and France are to rule the destinies of the world. Everybody is to unite in the wiping out of the hateful Britos. Mr. Boulger's argument is as applicable to us as it is to England. Mr. Boulger is a distinguished example of the [illegible]

THE WEEK IN ART.

The week in the art world of New York has not been one of any particular incident or excitement. There have been no new exhibitions, with the exception of some fifty paintings and drawings by Julius Rolshoven at the American Art Galleries, and of a number of paintings and pastels by the Boston art writer and painter, Philip L. Hale, at the Durand-Ruel Galleries. The event of the week was the private view on Wednesday afternoon of the new Appellate Court Building, at Madison Avenue and Twenty-fifth Street, which, although it still lacks exterior sculptures and finishings, is virtually completed as to its interior decorations and furnishings.

***

A review of the interior furnishings and appointments, and especially the mural paintings in the main hall and courtroom, of the Appellate Court Building was published in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Thursday morning last. Attention was called in this review to the significant fact that the building is the first public one in the United States which has been produced by the co-operation of the allied arts of sculpture, painting, and architecture. Mr. James BROWN Lord, the architect, deserves the greatest credit for having arranged his plans with reference to the co-operative work of the sculptors and painters whom he called in to aid him. Further than this, when, after long and careful study of the work of America's best-known mural painters, in the Congressional Library at Washington, the Court of General Sessions in this city, and such buildings as the Astoria and the Manhattan Hotels, Mr. Lord had decided upon the men best fitted to carry out the general scheme of decoration which he had determined upon, he gave to the six painters selected, all men of diverse temperaments and methods, full scope and play. As a result, not only these painters, but the sculptors of the groups which are to go on the exterior of the building, have co-operated with a cheerfulness and willingness which has brought about a most harmonious general effect.

***

It was a great disappointment to Mr. Lord that all the sculptures for the two facades are not yet in place. This is due to no fault of either architect or sculptors, but to the fact that a disagreement occurred as to the subjects for some of the statues. The caryatids, by Thomas Shields Clark, were placed in position some time ago, and all that need be said is that if the rest of the work is as successful as they are, the Court House will be as fine in its adornments on the exterior as it is in its interior—and that is saying a great deal. Until the structure is relieved by statuary it will necessarily present an incomplete appearance, and description, much less criticism, of this exterior would therefore be out of place at this time. For this reason the interior furnishings and paintings were dwelt upon at length in the review already published. It may, however, be proper to say that the posts of masonry in the balustrade that crowns the edifice will eventually be surmounted by statues, and that Charles H. Niehaus is at work upon the composition representing the "Triumph of Law Over Anarchy," which will fill the pediment supported by the six Corinthian columns of the southern facade. W. F. Ruckstul is also at work upon two seated colossal statues, "Force" and "Wisdom," which will be placed upon bases on either side of the entrance steps, and M. M. Schwartzott is fashioning figures representing the four quarters of the day, to fill the pediments over the windows on either side of the entrance. Those eminent sculptors, Daniel C. French and Karl Bitter, are at work, the first on an allegorical group of "Justice," and the other on one typifying "Peace," which will be placed in the main pediments on the east and west sides, respectively, of the building. J. S. Hartley, J. T. Donoghue, Herbert Adams, H. J. Bush-Brown, A. Lukeman, George E. Bissell, Charles A. Lopez, Philip Martiny, E. C. Potter, and William Cowper are to furnish the figures typifying eminent jurists of the past, which will be placed on the upper balustrade and fill the sky line of the building.

***

As has already been said, Mr. Lord's design is classic in character, having a portico in the centre of the southern façade. This portico is composed of six Corinthian columns supporting an entablature and pediment. The tall, narrow windows of the main floor have triangular and circular tympana, the windows of the second floor are square, and the third, or attic, floor, is illuminated with simple square lights. The material of the building is white marble from the quarries at Adams, Mass., while the steps and substructure are of granite. The portico is extremely impressive, and gives the building, which is built upon a comparatively small lot, the desired monumental character. Mention should also be made of the intelligent and effective use in the interior of a warm mountain Siena marble and onyx paneling. The general color scheme of the main courtroom, which was, as it were, a sober lightness, with its yellowish marble wainscoting, dark oak fittings, and decorated walls, must be highly commended. In some ways it is the most effective bit of interior decoration in the country. The crescent-shaped, tall screen of carved oak which forms the back to the Judges' desk, is a remarkably fine piece of woodwork.

***

But the writer feels that further description of this remarkably effective and artistic building may only weary the reader, who, if he or she is truly an art lover, must wish to see and study for themselves this new building—the most complete and artistic, as a whole, of any, with the exception of the Congressional Library at Washington, yet erected in this country. The building will probably be thrown open at an early day for public inspection.

***

Some fifty paintings and drawings by Julius Rolshoven, whose work is not over familiar to New York art lovers, are now on exhibition at the American Art Galleries. The artist is a pupil of the German, French, and Italian schools. He is versatile, a good draughtsman, and his color schemes are, as a rule, agreeable and effective. The most important of his paintings is that of a large reclining female nude figure, "La Venera Bruna." The figure, although somewhat distorted, is well drawn, and lies upon a satin couch against a background of Oriental stuffs, whose texture and the details of their decoration are extremely well rendered. His portrait works are marked more by broad and vigorous handling than by refined or delicate treatment. His full length standing portrait of his wife is effective and individual, and the portrait of his mother is richer in color than the others, and sober in treatment. Perhaps his best portrait is that of Miss Hilda Stewart, a young lady gowned in white and wearing a large picture hat. In this the values are well preserved and the color and tone are excellent, although it has a somewhat sketchy effect. The portrait of "H. A. R.," a young man, is almost a direct copy of a Sargent in color and treatment. One of the most satisfactory of the portraits is the double half-length one of the two daughters of Mrs. Labau, who was Miss Vanderbilt—Mrs. Tiffany Dyer and Mrs. Aymar. The drawing and color in this work are especially commendable, and the likenesses are good. Mr. Rolshoven's copy of a portrait group by Frans Hals is good and interesting. His drawings do not call for any special mention.

***

Mr. Philip L. Hale, who is better known as an art writer than as a painter, has now on exhibition at the Durand-Ruel Galleries a number of canvases which show him to be a devoted follower of the modern French impressionists, whose methods he has closely followed. In fact, he may be said to out-impression the impressionists. He seemingly delights most in the depiction of maidens of tenuous form and vacuous expression, standing or sitting in a golden sunlight that "never was on sea or land," and each surrounded by its own halo. He fairly riots in yellows. It was once said of an American painter, "when he gets to his greens one trembles for him," and one certainly trembles for Mr. Hale when he uses yellow. His punishment should be made to fit his crime, and he should be immured for a year at least in a studio with yellow ochre walls and ceilings, and be made to paint under yellow gaslight in nothing but yellow. Then we might have hopes for his art. Seriously speaking, it is evident that Mr. Hale has capabilities for other and better work than that now shown, for he displays two or three sane canvases, an excellent still life, a cool interior in which the light is effectively managed, and a spring landscape done in cool grays and blues, which has much of atmosphere, sentiment, and feeling.

***

Following the exhibition of the Rolshoven pictures at the American Art Galleries will come one of a number of colored prints by Joseph Millet, the brother of Frank Millet, who has revived the old art of Japanese color painting. These will be on exhibition next week. On Jan. 11 or 12 the press and private view will be given at these same galleries of some one hundred canvases by the well-known genre painter, Henry Mosler. Mr. Mosler, who has had a studio for the past few years in Carnegie Hall, this city, where he has been engaged in painting and in conducting large and successful art classes, has decided to go abroad for an indefinite stay and to dispose not only of a number of his finished works, but of the sketches and studies which have filled his studio and of its appointments and furnishings as well. With Mr. Mosler's pictures and studio appointments there will be exhibited some 500 Japanese color prints owned by Capt. Henry Brinkley of Tokio and Prof. Conder, for twenty-five years chief architect and instructor in the Imperial University of Japan. The sale of Mr. Mosler's pictures and studio effects will be held at the galleries on Jan. 10 and 11.

***

The most important art sale of the Winter at present announced will be that of the collection of American pictures owned by Mr. W. T. Evans. These will be placed on exhibition at the American Art Galleries on Jan. 24. The sale will take place at Chickering Hall on the evenings of Jan. 31, Feb. 1 and 2. The sale of Mr. Evans's pictures will be an event of importance everywhere in art circles. He has been known for many years as an intelligent and discriminating collector of American paintings and a firm friend of American art, and since he sold his collection of foreign pictures on March 6, 1890, he has devoted himself solely to the acquiring of American canvases. There are 270 pictures in the collection to be sold. It is only natural to compare Mr. Evans's collection with that of Mr. Thomas B. Clarke sold last Winter. Mr. Evans's collection is not so rich, perhaps, in superior examples of Inness and Winslow Homer, for example, as that of Mr. Clarke, but he has an unusual selection of Wyants and eight superior examples of Homer Martin. His collection also embraces canvases by the earlier men, such as Henry Peters Gray, William Hunt, Kensett, and Sandford Gifford, who were not so well represented in the Clarke collection. The sale will draw buyers from all over the country.

***

The Grolier Club has at present in its pretty clubhouse, in East Thirty-second Street, a very timely little display of a number of engraved portraits of George Washington. The collection has been made with great care and discrimination, and has afforded much delight and instruction to members of the club and their guests. The display is fully as good as, if not better than, that of the portraits of Lincoln made by the club last year, and embraces all the best-known portraits of the "Father of his Country."

***

A collection of pictorial photographs taken from the private collections of Miss Weil, Miss Watson, Alfred Stieglitz, John Beeby, Joseph Obermeyer, Joseph T. Keiley, and others, are now on view at the rooms of the Camera Club, 3 West Twenty-ninth Street, and will be shown there until the evening of Jan. 5.

***

The issue of The Collector and Art Critic of Dec. 15, of which Mr. David Preyer is editor and publisher, is worthy of a special note for the varied and excellent nature of its contents, which cover the field of American art. The number is illustrated with twenty-two half-tone reproductions of modern French canvases from the remarkable collection of H. S. Henry of Philadelphia. Some of these, and especially those of the Corot, "Ville d'Avray"; the Jules Dupré, the Géricault, and the superb Troyon, "On the Road," are such faithful representations of the original canvases as to be worth preserving in any art library.

There is now on exhibition at Sherry's a remarkable painting, entitled "A Day's Hunt," by Ben Austrian of Reading, Penn. Before it was brought to New York it was on exhibition at Earl's Art Gallery in Philadelphia for eight weeks, during which time 35,000 people viewed it. The picture has since been purchased by J. H. Sternberg, the millionaire, of Reading, Penn.

The painting is really an optical illusion. A lot of game, tied by the feet, hanging upon the shutters of a barn window—that is the picture. As a matter of fact, the window frame is a real window frame, but the shutters and all the rest of the composition are the work of the artist. But where the real window stops and the painted canvas begins is the problem that confronts all who view the painting. The artist is not yet thirty years old. "A Day's Hunt" was an early impression of his life. It was well thought out before he started to paint it. He went hunting and saw how the game was strung. In order to paint the picture he had to have the models—the old window, the casement, and the old shutters. So he obtained them from an old building which had been torn down, had the window casement and shutters placed in his studio, and hung up the game as it came in from the hunt, and painted it from nature. The price paid to Austrian for this work is probably the highest ever given for any single picture of still life. Austrian had many offers, but preferred that the picture should go to Mr. Sternberg and remain in Reading. Among the owners of Ben Austrian's beautiful pictures of dogs, cats, chickens, and game are John Wanamaker, the Hotel Netherland, the Horse Show Association, and others. Within the last few years he has painted as many as thirty characteristic pictures, and all are now sold and scattered over the United States. Austrian has also painted an ambitious and somewhat imaginative picture, the theme of which is "Music." It is now being exhibited at Berlin. For this he painted a piano top on which rested a violin and a flute and some threadbare scores. To the left of the picture the gorgeous background of spread peacock feathers fades to mist, and therein appears, dreamily suggested, the head of a beautiful woman.

Conversation as a Lost Art.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Upon reading the very excellent articles on conversation by Mrs. Hartwell and Miss Harris, this thought enters my mind: To be a good entertainer, is it more important to be a good conversationist or a good listener; which of the two is more essential to a person's popularity? Take, for instance, a person you have just met; he or she listens attentively to you, seemingly with much interest, and by a few well-directed questions keeps you talking on the subject upon which you are conversing. When you leave it is always with a very pleasant recollection of the evening spent in their company, for you have, or think you have, entertained them. On the other hand, a brilliant conversationist will entertain, amuse, instruct once, possibly twice. Then some begin to tire. After being thrown together for any length of time you know in what channels their minds run; consequently, you are aware of the opinions they may have upon most subjects discussed before they have expressed them, but you must listen, and you are bored. Sala says that the art of conversation is not only to say the right thing in the right place, but to leave unsaid the wrong thing at the tempting moment.

Burke says that the perfection of conversation is not to play a regular sonata, but, like the Aeolian harp, to await the inspiration of a passing breeze. Miss Harris rightly says that "prepared speeches are rarely apropos and their preparedness sounds like a forced note." Wait, then, till as our good old Methodist brethren say, "the spirit moves you." Never monopolize, for some you are bound to bore. Remember that Edison has a patent upon a talking machine; do not infringe, for you might be prosecuted.

Napoleon, Wellington, Washington, Grant, Lee, and Stonewall Jackson talked little; they were good listeners, and the oldest reigning monarch, the Queen, upon whose domain the sun never sets, has the reputation of having little to say. The leading men of the world have followed the advice given by Polonius to Laertes. "Give thy thoughts no tongue." They said little, but listened well. The public has little confidence in a constant talker; seldom is a raconteur, and never in a wit. The masses want representatives who will listen to them; be interested, or pretend to be, in their many troubles and voice their thoughts in legislative halls. Few, I think, are egotistical enough to imagine they can entertain the same company all the time; few, indeed, possess originality enough not to grow tiresome occasionally, for the art of talking has no need of cultivation in a few of my friends, who sometimes are called tiresome, while good listeners never tire. In closing, I would say that my humble opinion is that the art of entertaining lies not in brilliant repartee, nor in learned dissertations, but in talking little, and always to the point; and last, but by no means least, in listening well. I write this not as a seeker of controversy, but of knowledge on a subject I think most essential to all.

W. J. TULLIS.

The Foster Family.*

Ponderous is this handsome volume with its glowing red binding. How could it be otherwise than weighty when it holds the life histories of 9,923 persons, all Fosters, or having at least Foster blood in their veins? The biographical notices are, of course, short but definite. No possible Foster who has ever existed has possibly escaped the notice of the compiler of this genealogy, Mr. Frederick Clifton Pierce. So far as the American Fosters are concerned, town, city, county, and State records have been studied and many disputable points of relationship have been settled. Whence the name of Foster? Is it derived from the French Forestier? The first and original Foster or Forester might have been a wild man of the woods, or a maker of faggots. The name may be derived from the verb "to foster." There is fair authority for the belief that early family names belong to the eleventh century. Be the origin of the Fosters what it may, as every family must start somewhere, the editor makes the original Foster, Anacher, great Forrester of Flanders, who was born no one knows when, but who left this world supposedly in A. D. 837. As to the Americans bearing the name, four sons of Allen Foster, an Englishman, came early in the seventeenth century to the colonies. One settled in Maine, another on Long Island, and Samuel in South New Jersey, and from the New Jersey settler sprang the bulk of the present Fosters. Some one has written that if two soldiers of the time of William the Conqueror had remained in England, had married, and had progeny, all the descendants of these followers of the Norman King, even if they were to be counted by the millions, would be cousins in 1899. And so through the Duke and the clodhopper runs some little of the same blood. The volume is copiously illustrated.

Trial of Sicilian Mafia Murderers at Milan Throws Discredit on Crispi and di Rudini—The Escape of Mahmoud Pasha.

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—Dreary indeed is this Christmastide in England. The London streets are thronged with crowds as usual, and all the shops are displaying their accustomed wares, but there is no mirth, and business is not active. From the West End, especially, complaints come that the overturn will be poor, because nobody has any money to waste or any heart to spend. We shall be chanting "Peace on earth and good-will to men" in the churches at this festive season, and the words to many will sound almost a bitter mockery.

How changed is everything from a short three months ago! Then our Generals and rank and file were trooping gayly to South Africa as to a pleasant picnic. They expected the war to be over by now, and he was considered a pessimist who ventured to say it might last till the end of January. Now we mourn our dead, and digest the bitter morsels of disaster upon disaster that have been given to us as best we can.

The subject is too painful to dwell upon, and I am not going to inflict upon you a discussion about tactics and Generals' mistakes.

We are commencing our holiday under the shadow of a great though but half-confessed fear that it may be made gloomier than ever by the news that Ladysmith or Kimberley has surrendered—or both of them. Neither place was provisioned for a siege, for the significant reason that nobody expected to be beleaguered. History furnishes many instances of the power of human beings to live while hungry for periods much beyond what could beforehand have been anticipated. But however great their endurance may be, the day must be at hand when the populations of these places must elect either to die outright or surrender.

THE VOLUNTEER RECRUITS.

Meantime we are busy changing our Generals, and raking together the very last fragments of our army. Enthusiasm is being displayed in certain quarters about the volunteer yeomanry and bands of irregular horse, but I am not sure that beneath this show of zeal there is not much heart quaking, and I do know that in many influential quarters the idea of calling upon volunteers to furnish recruits for the front is considered a mistake certain to be fatal to the future efficiency of the volunteer force. As Lord Wemyss, who, as Lord Elcho, had more to do with spreading enthusiasm for volunteering throughout the country than anybody else, has declared, nothing could be more disastrous for the force, because it will now be divided into those who want to fight and those who want to stay at home, and the latter will gradually be eliminated. The final consequence will be that there will be no more volunteers for home defenses.

We are scraping together a seventh, and talk of an eighth division, but they are only skeleton divisions, about one-third size. Such as they are they are being sent to South Africa without any clear idea as to what they are to do there.

The confusion at the War Office remains indescribable, and I fear that Lord Roberts is too old a man and too worn with his long Indian campaigning to be able to dominate that nest of incompetents and corruption. Poor old man; it is pathetic to see how loyally and briskly he obeys the call to duty, without pausing a moment even to mourn the death of his only son. What his plans are no one knows, but for the next six months it is to be feared that our troops in South Africa will contend against other forces besides those of the Boers, and that Field Marshal fever may soon partly supersede Field Marshal Lord Roberts.

RECRIMINATIONS AT HOME.

At home the bitterest recrimination continues against the officials responsible for the light-hearted manner in which the War Office neglected to prepare for the war, and the language used about Sir William Francis Butler, late Commander-in-Chief at the Cape, is generally of a description wholly unprintable. When the critics are beaten off from this good soldier and honest man they turn upon Lord Wolseley, and when it is explained that he has no control except as an executive officer obeying the War Office, Lord Landsdowne is set upon and torn to pieces.

All this time it is unquestionable that the blame lies with the routine-bound permanent heads of departments at the War Office and on their principal subordinates. Our army, British and Indian, costs the empire more than £40,000,000 a year, and it breaks down at the very first strain against undisciplined bands of intrenched sharpshooters. Clearly we are not getting our money's worth. No other power in the world pays so much a head for its fighting material, or spends anything like the amount of money that we do upon the furniture of war, guns, ammunition, and so on. But directly energy, foresight, and resources are required, and it becomes necessary to set an army fully equipped with everything necessary for a campaign in the field, we make the discovery that nothing is ready.

No wonder the nation is angry, no wonder the War Office officials skillfully shunt this anger on whatever prominent individual they can. We always hunt down the wrong man on these occasions. The officials were too lazy to read Butler's reports. They pigeonholed them, and when painful events forced the truth of his statements upon them the fainéants expressed surprise and called him names to screen their own delinquencies.

Perhaps we shall get some good from the smitings we have had, although that is doubtful. Never a campaign in our history has been begun except in some such fashion as this one, and only when thousands of lives have been lost and millions upon millions of money thrown away does the nation doggedly, resolutely rouse itself. Whether this will be the case in the present instance or not I cannot say, but all the newspapers declare it means to do so, and the banks, insurance companies, and other large employers of clerks, who go to form the rank and file of our volunteer forces, are behaving generously by giving either half pay all through, or full pay for a term and half pay afterward, to those of their staffs who elect to serve at the front. Subscriptions, too, are coming in with tolerable abundance to equip new forces, and yet it would be hiding half the truth to deny that beneath all this superficial manifestation of enthusiasm there is a gnawing at the heart and a doubt whether after all the game is worth the candle.

NO PROVISION FOR THE WOUNDED.

Great indignation has been excited by the discovery made by The Morning Post that the convalescent homes for which provision had been made are none of them ready to receive the wounded coming back from the war. This is only one other example of the sort of thing that has been going on. No nurses have arrived, no resource has been provided, nor have any of the hurt been taken to the homes which were to be made ready.

Yet in February last the War Office pledged itself that preparations would be made. You see, it did not expect any wounded back; Boers were to be killed, but not any British soldiers, according to its idea.

THE LATE DUKE OF WESTMINSTER.

Let us turn away from painful things of that kind. Yet we have few other things to speak of. The most important social event of the week has been the death of the first Duke of Westminster, announced this morning. He was not a great man in a political sense, and except when he severed his connection with Mr. Gladstone he never appeared prominently in any political conflict. But he was essentially an aristocrat of the best British type; kindly, benevolent, unassuming in some ways, jealous of his dignity and position, but, as a rule, caring little for any outward manifestation of his grandeur.

The Duke was full of schemes for bettering the condition of the population on his estates; a judicious but munificent patron of art; a diligent, not to say extravagant, builder, and yet in some respects a shrewd man of business. Part of his fortune came from an ancestor in the seventeenth century having married a lady who owned a farm of some 500 acres, on which the wealthiest portion of the West End of London now stands. It is estimated that the income is at least £500,000 a year from this property now, and as it has all been built over upon the short-lease system the revenue within the next quarter of a century may come to exceed £1,000,000. Whether the citizens of London in the next generation are going to allow rentals of this description to remain unchanged, without any direct contribution to local expenditure, may be doubted; but no matter what happens, the Grosvenors can hardly become poor.

Although a great patron of the turf from personal tastes and hereditary instincts, the Duke of Westminster was never in the ordinary sense a sporting peer. He did racing in the grand way, and did it well.

QUARITCH'S STOCK MAY BE SOLD.

Another and a very different man has died this week in the person of Bernard Quaritch, the well-known second-hand bookseller. He began life as a porter at 18s. a week in the office of Mr. Bohn, whose libraries of classical and other books are still to be obtained. Starting in business for himself, Quaritch devoted his energies to the collection of rare editions, rare bindings, and curious books of all descriptions. I have heard him declare that there would be a fall in the price of scarce books when he died; and unquestionably he was, although a keen collector and shrewd trader, more disposed to hug books than to sell them in his latter years. There ought to be a grand dispersal of rare works, therefore, when his stock comes to the hammer, as no doubt it presently will.

ALL EUROPE GLOOMY.

Nothing of a light or pleasant description can even be got out of foreign politics this week. All places have got the old year sadness about them, and France hardly pauses to laugh over the contemptible exhibition the Duc d'Orléans has made of himself in attacking the editor of the Gaulois, Arthur Meyer. As for Déroulède, it is a good job for him and everybody else that he has been sent into seclusion for two years. His behavior before the High Court was outrageous, and hardly excusable in a man entirely bereft of his senses.

TRIAL OF SICILIAN BANDITS.

Perhaps the most remarkable incident on the Continent this week is the trial that has been proceeding at Milan of certain Sicilians accused of the murder of Signor Notarbartolo, at one time manager of the Bank of Sicily at Palermo. From revelations made at the trial it is evident that Signor Crispi and the Marquis di Rudini, who are both Sicilians, connived at the tyranny exercised by the secret society known as the Mafia.

Signor Notarbartolo was ousted from his position because he was an honest, fearless man, and refused to allow some of the chiefs of the Mafia to rob the bank. One of them, named Palizzolo, was actually put in his place, and although his character was well known, he was decorated by the Central Government. This ruffian not only made away with the funds of the bank, but is accused, apparently justly, of having contrived the murder of his predecessor.

Only under the present Ministry have the ringleaders of this far-ramifying secret band of robbers and assassins been arrested and brought to trial. It would have been impossible to try them in Sicily, so the whole machinery of the court, including witnesses and counsel, was taken to Milan to render the proceedings free from terrorism.

The revelations have been such as positively to cause a sensation in Sicily itself, and it is now stated that Palermo is going to endeavor to cleanse itself. Arrests are being made right and left among people known to be connected with the Mafia, and for very shame the respectable inhabitants of Palermo are getting subscriptions throughout the island to help refund to the Notarbartolo family the cost of the trial.

A strange light is thus thrown upon the condition of the outlying corners of Europe, and raises doubt whether the progress and enlightenment so much talked of have yet permeated far into the human mind outside the great centres of population. I remember an enlightened Spanish nobleman telling me some years ago that the Government of his country had always brigandage at command when elections were troublesome in any district, and could let loose the thieves upon recalcitrant electors. The case of Sicily is a parallel one, but considerably worse.

MAHMOUD TO WRITE PAMPHLETS.

The escape of Mahmoud Pasha from Constantinople does not politically signify a great deal, because the Sultan is subject to periodical fits of either real or simulated dread of plots for his destruction, and then orders arrests and murders right and left. He has been pursuing the Young Turkey Party with great rigor recently, and as one of that party his brother-in-law felt himself in danger.

Mahmoud is coming to England, it seems, and is going to write pamphlets telling all about it. They will be very interesting if he merely tells the truth, for the state of things at the Porte is such as the world would not tolerate were it not terrified at the consequences of dispossessing the Turk of his inheritance. TWO WOMEN GARROTED.

Held Up and Robbed on Central Park South—Thieves Made Away Before Help Came.

Miss Katherine Tighe, who lives at 724 Fifth Avenue, and a young woman friend, whose name she declined to give, were attacked at 9 o'clock last night on Central Park South, near Seventh Avenue, by two thieves, who took Miss Tighe's pocketbook from her, after choking her, and then vaulted over the wall into Central Park and escaped before help came.

The young women were going eastward and were approaching Seventh Avenue, when in the shadow of a building the two men jumped out upon them and seized them by the throats, preventing an outcry. Miss Tighe was carrying her pocketbook in her hand. She had been shopping, and there were only 80 cents and two keys in it. One of the thieves snatched it from her and the two ran swiftly across the street and leaped the Park wall.

The two young women set up a scream as soon as they could collect their wits, and a number of policemen and passers-by ran to their help. As soon as the police learned what had happened and where the thieves had gone they made after them. The thieves had a good start, however, and they were not caught.

The young women were taken to the Central Park Arsenal and there gave a description of the men who attacked them. A general alarm was sent out to all police station houses, and in addition Sergt. Dillon called up at once the gate houses all over the Park and instructed the police on duty at gates to look for the men of the description given. It was thought that they might hide for a while and attempt to leave the Park in the ordinary manner later.

One of the thieves was about 5 feet 10 inches in height, about twenty-five years old, wore a dark overcoat, light trousers, soft, dark hat, and had a black mustache. The other was about the same age, two inches shorter, and wore a gray suit.

ROBBED AT HOTEL ENTRANCE.

Woman Going Into the Marlborough Victim of a Negro—Crowd Wanted to Handle Him Roughly.

Hundreds of Christmas shoppers and visitors to the city were passing on Broadway in the vicinity of the Hotel Marlborough last night when a negro snatched the purse and bundle of a woman entering the hotel with a friend. He was caught after a short chase, and the crowd would have handled him roughly had not a policeman protected him. The negro is Charles Davis, twenty-two years old. He refused to tell where he lives.

The woman who was robbed is Mrs. Jeannette Fisher of 363 West Fifty-eighth Street. She was carrying a purse in one hand and a bundle under her arm while she walked with a woman friend. Davis had hid himself behind one of the posts, and though there were many persons standing and walking about the entrance of the hotel, he took the chance of stealing.

The woman screamed as the negro grabbed the package and purse, the latter containing some bills, and a crowd was immediately looking in that direction. They saw Davis dart across the street and rush toward Sixth Avenue. The men in the crowd followed, joined by Policeman Northrup of the West Thirtieth Street Station. Davis dropped the package and the purse on the way, as he saw that the crowd was gaining on him. Policeman Northrup soon got up to him and struck him in the right arm with the club, almost breaking the arm, and bringing Davis to terms at once.

The crowd pressed in on Davis and some called for immediate justice. Northrup called out that he would allow none of it, and he made the crowd give away. Davis acknowledged that he had stolen the property. Neither purse nor package could be found.

SLAVERY FOUND IN NEW YORK.

Immigration Officers Discover Its Existence in an Italian Colony in Avon, Livingston County.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—The immigration officers of the Treasury Department have found a virtual state of slavery in Avon, Livingston County, N. Y. An Italian colony of 270 persons exists there, headed by Salvatore De Loatis, who is their padrone and appropriates their wages. He hires out the Italians to farmers and fruit growers.

The matter came to the attention of the department through a report made by Milton Smiley, Immigration Inspector at Cincinnati. De Loatis's brother-in-law, Michael Santori, had asked De Loatis to advance the money necessary to bring Santori's wife and young son from Italy. De Loatis did so at a cost of $36 and then demanded $124 from Santori, holding the woman and child as pledges. He added them to his colony, farming them out and receiving their wages. All they got was board and clothes. The boy, who was badly used, escaped and got to Cincinnati, where his father lived.

Santori reported the case to Smiley. Inspector J. R. De Narry of Buffalo was detailed to investigate the case. De Narry went to Avon and rescued the woman with considerable difficulty. Commissioner Powderly has instructed the officials at New York to look out for Italians landing there and declaring their intention of going to Western New York. De Loatis probably will be prosecuted.

Woman Dies from Amputation.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., Dec. 23.—Miss Louisa McCann of Towner's, N. Y., died this morning as the result of the amputation last week of one of her legs. Miss McCann was standing near a boulder which her father was moving with a crowbar when the boulder suddenly rolled, crushing her leg against a stone wall. The leg was splintered and crushed, but Miss McCann coolly directed the efforts of the men who rolled the boulder from her.

MR. GAGE IN WALL STREET

Thinks the Financial Disturbance Has Run Its Course.

SEES NO REASON FOR PANIC

Elements of Healthy Liquidation Apparent to Him—To Offer No Further Relief at Present.

Secretary of the Treasury Lyman J. Gage came to the city yesterday from Orange, where he had been the principal speaker Friday evening at the Forefathers' Day dinner of the Orange New England Society. Upon his arrival here he went to the Sub-Treasury, and at different times during the day held conferences with President James Stillman of the National City Bank, J. P. Morgan, Vice President A. B. Hepburn of the Chase National Bank, John A. Stewart, President of the United States Trust Company; William Sherer, manager of the Clearing House Association; Assistant Treasurer Jordan, and others.

When Wall Street heard of the Secretary's presence there was not a little excitement, and all kinds of rumors were afloat to the effect that the Government intended to take further and immediate action for the relief of the situation. These statements, however, were effectually set at rest by the Secretary himself, who in a general statement made to reporters said that he did not purpose at present to offer to buy any more United States bonds, or to extend the time under the present offer, which expired yesterday, with only about $20,000 of the $25,000,000, offered to be purchased, presented. He declared it as his opinion that the trouble had run its course.

MR. GAGE INVESTIGATES.

Later, before leaving for Washington, the Secretary, discussing the general situation with a NEW YORK TIMES reporter, said:

"I was over at the Oranges last night and I thought I would come over to New York to see exactly what the situation was since I left up. As soon as the police learned what had happened and where the thieves had gone they made after them. The thieves had a good start, however, and they were not caught.

The young women were taken to the Central Park Arsenal and there gave a description of the men who attacked them. A general alarm was sent out to all police station houses, and in addition Sergt. ROBBED AT HOTEL ENTRANCE.

Woman Going Into the Marlborough Victim of a Negro—Crowd Wanted to Handle Him Roughly.

Hundreds of Christmas shoppers and visitors to the city were passing on Broadway in the vicinity of the Hotel Marlborough last night when a negro snatched the purse and bundle of a woman entering the hotel with a friend. He was caught after a short chase, and the crowd would have handled him roughly had not a policeman protected him. The negro is Charles Davis, twenty-two years old. He refused to tell where he lives.

The woman who was robbed is Mrs. Jeannette Fisher of 363 West Fifty-eighth Street. She was carrying a purse in one hand and a bundle under her arm while she walked with a woman friend. Davis had hid himself behind one of the posts, and though there were many persons standing and walking about the entrance of the hotel, he took the chance of stealing.

The woman screamed as the negro grabbed the package and purse, the latter containing some bills, and a crowd was immediately looking in that direction. They saw Davis dart across the street and rush toward Sixth Avenue. The men in the crowd followed, joined by Policeman Northrup of the West Thirtieth Street Station. Davis dropped the package and the purse on the way, as he saw that the crowd was gaining on him. Policeman Northrup soon got up to him and struck him in the right arm with the club, almost breaking the arm, and bringing Davis to terms at once.

The crowd pressed in on Davis and some called for immediate justice. Northrup called out that he would allow none of it, and he made the crowd give away. Davis acknowledged that he had stolen the property. Neither purse nor package could be found.

"I cannot see, therefore, looking at all the facts of the case, that the panic conditions are justified by the facts, especially when the Associated Bank statement, issued to-day, shows a surplus reserve in excess of legal requirements of over $10,000,000. In fact, I cannot see anything in the situation other than the elements of a healthy liquidation. It should not be lost sight of that even in the present so-called 'panicky' times money now appears in the market from many directions for the purchase of what may be called bargains in stocks and securities. What that signifies it is not difficult to infer."

"Are you satisfied with the results of the Government's recent measures in coming to the relief of the situation?" the Secretary was asked.

"I hardly like to speak of it as 'coming to the relief,'" was the reply. "I may say that I am well satisfied with the results of divesting the Government Treasury of an undue absorption of public money which might operate to the prejudice of commercial and industrial interests.

"As to the general currency question it is the Government's desire that a bill shall pass both houses that shall make the currency of the country more responsive to conditions than it now is.

"Whether, as some people suggest, the panicky condition in Wall Street is not at an end, I know nothing. What I do know, and what I repeat, is that to discover the causes of the panic you must discover it other than in the conditions of the banks."

"Have you anything to say," the Secretary was asked, "in respect to the talk that there has been discrimination by the Government in favor of the National City Bank in designating it as the depository of the internal revenue receipts?"

DENIES ANY DISCRIMINATION.

"Any such statement," was the reply, "is made under a misapprehension. It simply isn't true. The Government is working in the best interests of the country. We ordered the internal revenue receipts in the National City Bank so that we might intelligently distribute the money from one place to all those qualified to receive it in proportion to the amount of bonds deposited. The reason we took the National City Bank was because it had already a good many bonds up, and through these previous deposits had ample margin as security to the Government for the fidelity of the institution in receiving the $1,000,000 daily revenue receipts. There was no discrimination whatever. We simply had to have a common centre from which to make the distribution.

"It must be borne in mind that all told there are 156 Government depositories, some permanent, some temporary. The permanent depositories receive the deposits of internal revenue collections, and they have been in the habit of remitting them to the Sub-Treasury. Under the new plan we simply asked them to remit, instead, to the National City Bank, and then we could the better make the distribution."

Asked as to the European financial situation, Secretary Gage said: "I don't believe I want to discuss that. It is beyond a reasonable doubt that London will want some more gold from us, but we have the ability to furnish it."

ON GEN. THOMAS'S PLAN.

Produce Exchange Trust Company Trustee Doubtful About Resumption.

Accountants and clerks were busy yesterday in the offices of the Produce Exchange Trust Company preparing data and information for the meeting on Wednesday, when Gen. Thomas's plan of reorganization will be considered. A committee of the Trustees was examining the securities of the corporation. One of them said:

"We are busy at work, as you see. We want to get in money as soon as we can to pay depositors. We are proceeding with an examination of affairs. We cannot say anything about resuming business until we get further ahead."

Another Trustee said: "I am not so sure about resuming, and I am not clear about the proposition submitted by Gen. Thomas. It looks to me like a scheme to acquire control and go into liquidation. You see, the proposition involves the resignation or disposing of the special committee of which Edwin Gould is Chairman and the resignation of every Trustee. As I understand it, however, the stockholders will have to ratify any arrangement that may be arrived at."

BOSTON BANKER ACCUSED

TAKING OF $900,000 ALLEGED

Charles H. Cole Left the Institution on Account of Heavy Loans for Stock Transactions.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 23.—Charles H. Cole, formerly President of the Globe National Bank of Boston, is under Federal surveillance at a hotel in this city. Mr. Cole is charged, in a complaint mailed today by the Boston authorities, with the embezzlement of $900,000.

United States District Attorney Flint received a letter yesterday from the United States District Attorney at Boston, asking that Cole be taken into custody upon a charge of misappropriation of the funds of the Globe National Bank, now in the hands of a receiver. United States Marshal Osborne proceeded to the hotel where the Cole family had been stopping, and learned that Mr. Cole had gone to Redondo. Mr. Cole's son accompanied Osborne to his father's stopping place at Redondo, where Mr. Cole was informed that the Boston authorities had requested his detention. Mr. Cole agreed to return to Los Angeles, and disclaimed any intention or desire to escape. He said that the family was in California for the benefit of Mrs. Cole's health, and assured the officer that he would make no endeavor to avoid the service of a warrant.

Later Mr. Cole said that during his career as President of the Globe National Bank there had been overloans, but these he had made good from his personal property, and this he could demonstrate. He said he intended to return to Boston, in justice to himself, to answer all charges and disprove or explain them. This was substantially all that the banker would say concerning the case. He has engaged legal advice to safeguard his interests.

NO WARRANT YET SERVED.

Mr. Cole's son seemed astonished at the accusation, and declared that he knew nothing concerning his father's affairs and was not authorized to speak for him, saying that the only reason he could offer for bringing his father into the case was that the securities he had advanced to cover the overloans had been rendered insufficient by reason of stock fluctuations. He said that his father owned copper mines in Utah. No warrant has been served by the local United States officials.

After his first statement regarding his connection with the Globe National Bank, Mr. Cole refused to be interviewed, and spent the day in his apartments.

BOSTON, Dec. 23.—News of the detention of Charles H. Cole, formerly President of the Globe National Bank of this city, at Los Angeles, Cal., reached here this afternoon, after an unusual effort on the part of the United States authorities to keep secret the fact that any action had been taken to bring about the arrest of the man. Dispatches from Los Angeles, Cal., last night said that United States officers were after Cole, but no one at the office of the United States District Attorney here would acknowledge this morning that a warrant for Cole's arrest had been issued. As soon as word was received that he was under surveillance, however, it developed that the warrant had been issued early to-day, and that the authorities had little trouble in finding the man when they actually wanted him.

The warrant was sworn out before United States Commissioner Fiske by Special Examiner Daniel G. Wing, acting under the orders of the Controller of the Currency. At the District Attorney's office late this afternoon it was learned that the warrant contained four counts, two charging embezzlement and two misappropriation of the funds of the bank. The aggregate amount mentioned is $900,000, being the total of two sums of $600,000 and $300,000 covered by the respective counts. No time is mentioned in the warrant, but it is understood that the misdeeds alleged covered a considerable period. Cole will be held in California pending the arrival of the official documents.

BANK'S TROUBLES NOT NEW.

The action of Special Examiner Wing in the matter was taken after he had been in charge of the Globe National Bank only one day, the institution having been ordered closed by Controller of the Currency Dawes yesterday morning and Mr. Wing placed in charge as temporary receiver. Mr. Wing refused to make known the nature of the facts which he discovered and which led Controller Dawes, as soon as he was acquainted with them, to instruct Mr. Wing to take legal steps. Bankers, however, who have been in touch with matters connected with the Globe Bank say that reasons for the action are not hard to find, and they refer to the history of Mr. Cole's connection with the bank and the circumstances under which he resigned last November.

The bank's troubles date back far beyond that time, but early in November the Directors of the Globe Bank decided that certain loans had been made on terms considered unsatisfactory. These loans, it developed, had been made largely in stock transactions in which President Cole was associated with Edward A. Clark and William Coolidge. The deals were made in United States Mining and United States Oil and certain coppers, and the amount of the loans aggregated $1,500,000.

On the strength of these facts the Directors requested Mr. Cole to resign, and he withdrew as President Nov. 16, having arranged with the Directors that he and his colleagues, Clark and Coolidge, should assume the loans, additional securities being deposited with the bank. The recent and repeated declines in coppers retarded a settlement, and last week the bank found itself embarrassed and forced to ask aid from the Boston Clearing House Association. Three and a half million dollars was advanced by the Clearing House last Saturday, and it was thought no further trouble would be experienced. Early in the week, however, heavy depositors began to withdraw their accounts, and in a few days more than $2,500,000 was taken from the Globe Bank and placed elsewhere. This proved too great a strain, and the concern being unable to obtain further loans, Controller Dawes was advised of the situation and the bank was closed.

HOW THE FACTS LEAKED OUT.

The first intimation to the general public that there was anything about the Globe Bank's affairs which might lead to an arrest was received yesterday, at a meeting of the creditors of John P. Squire & Co., when H. W. Chaplin, the assignee of the corporation, said that the indebtedness of the concern to the Globe Bank had been misrepresented, and made to appear almost double what it really was. Mr. Chaplin today, when asked about the matter, said that the trouble had been known to exist for some time, but that until the bank was closed it was considered unwise, for business reasons, to make known the conditions. It was intimated, however, that no steps in the matter were proposed by the Squire creditors, and it is not known to what extent discoveries in this connection made by Receiver Wing may have influenced his action.

It was considered likely that another phase of the situation was of more importance. Bankers understood when the difficulties of the bank first came to light that an indebtedness of $900,000 to the Clearing House was found. This, it was claimed, was not on the bank's account, although the money was borrowed in the name of the bank. The amount, it is alleged, did not go through the books of the bank, but passed to individual accounts. It also was understood among those acquainted with the bank situation that this sum was included in the $1,500,000 indebtedness assumed by Mr. Cole and his associates when he retired from the Presidency of the institution.

Many savings banks in this State are stockholders in the Globe Bank. Among the heaviest of these are the City Institution, Lowell, 290 shares; Haverhill Savings Bank, 100 shares; People's Savings Bank, Worcester, 217 shares; Leominster Savings Bank, 68 shares; Salem Five-Cent Savings Bank, 200 shares, and Worcester Five-Cent Savings Bank, 100 shares.

CITY AND STATE DEPOSITORS.

Both this city and the State of Massachusetts are among the depositors at the Globe National Bank. City Treasurer Turner said to-day that the deposits of the city aggregated $370,088.76. He said that the deposits were made when Charles H. Cole was Chairman of the Sinking Fund Commission. The present Commissioners voted last week to withdraw the city's funds, but in view of the assistance given the bank by the Clearing House it was thought there was no need of haste. Mayor Quincy said that the city would not be seriously inconvenienced by having the money tied up in the bank. The amount of the State deposit is about $60,000.

E. A. Clark, whose name has been mentioned with that of Mr. Cole in connection with the bank's affairs, when told of Mr. Cole's arrest, said: "The time is not yet ripe for any statement. The most that I can say now is that an interview published on Thursday, which spoke of an inclination on the part of certain people to make Mr. Coolidge and myself scapegoats, hits the nail very nearly on the head. This is all that is necessary or proper to say at present. Pending further investigation into the affairs of the bank, it would be hardly becoming in me at this time to say that which might be said."

Notwithstanding the heavy over-loans, it is generally believed that the depositors will be paid in full or nearly so, and that it will be the stockholders and Directors who will suffer. The Globe Bank probably will never open its doors again.

FALSE REPORTS IN BALTIMORE.

Losses Caused by Rumors Affecting Financial Institutions.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Dec. 23.—The harm which has been done to legitimate investors by the circulation of false and malicious reports respecting the condition of different financial institutions during the past week can hardly be estimated. The names of the most substantial institutions and individuals in Baltimore were bandied about without regard to the injury that might result.

An especially aggravating case reported was that of an employe of one of the courts, who is said to have told a crowd in a café that one of the larger trust companies would file a deed of trust. This announcement, coming from an employe of a court, excited business and financial circles. There was not a particle of truth in the report. The company mentioned is one of the strongest in the city. It is now gathering evidence with the view of taking action against the person guilty of circulating false reports of its condition.

The reports created such nervousness that the Clearing House Committee and the Baltimore Stock Exchange have held meetings to investigate the situation and endeavor to fix the responsibility for the disturbed conditions. The losses as a result of the false reports foot up many thousands of dollars. During the height of the demoralization a man rushed into a well-known brokerage office and gave an order to sell 350 shares of stock of a certain trust company at a price which caused him a loss of $27,000.

PROVIDENCE BANK CHANGES.

One Institution to Liquidate and Another to be Absorbed.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 23.—The stockholders of the Manufacturers' National Bank unanimously agree that it is in their interest to have the bank go into liquidation. They have accordingly authorized the Directors to close the institution on Jan. 1 and turn over its affairs to the new Manufacturers' Trust Company, which will settle the bank's accounts.

Arrangements for the absorption of the Third National Bank of this city by the Industrial Trust Company were practically completed at a meeting of the Directors of the bank to-day. The Directors and some of the stockholders have already disposed of their holdings to the company. A meeting of stockholders to vote on the question of liquidation has been called for Jan. 20. The Industrial Trust Company is the second largest banking institution in the State, with deposits of about $9,000,000. The Third National Bank was organized in 1836 as the Marine Bank, and became a National bank under its present name in 1865. It has a capital stock of $300,000 and deposits of about $500,000.

Against Chicago Banker's Bondsmen.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—A verdict for $231,367.98 against the bondsmen of Charles Warren Spalding, and in favor of the University of Illinois, was returned to-day. The sum sued for was $378,933, the amount of the university funds in the Globe Savings Bank, of which Spalding was President at the time of its failure.

Washington Authorities Try to Prevent Suicide by the Drug.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Though death by carbolic acid is one of the commonest forms of suicide in New York it is almost unknown here. Some time ago a schoolgirl bought some carbolic acid and killed herself with it. This single instance created a great sensation. It was declared that the "New York carbolic acid monster" was beginning to show itself in Washington and that prompt measures of prevention must be taken.

Preliminary action has been taken toward hedging the drug stores about with restrictions. Detectives have been assigned to investigate the drug business, and have reported to the Chief of Police the number of unregistered pharmacists doing business, the number of pharmacies which have no registered pharmacists as assistants, the number which do not keep lists of poisons, the number of relief clerks, and everything relating to the drug business as conducted in the city. It is not known what final action will be taken.

ROOT FOR VICE PRESIDENT.

National Committeeman H. C. Payne Predicts His Nomination.

MILWAUKEE, Dec 23.—That President McKinley will be the choice of the next Republican National Convention, that he will be nominated by acclamation, and that Secretary of War Root will be his running mate is the opinion of National Committeeman Henry C. Payne, who returned from the East to-day.

Mr. Payne says that Mr. Root is the choice of the Washington people for the Vice Presidency. Mr. Root is very highly thought of in Washington, and all through the East, he says, and he has the confidence of the people. As to whether he, also, will be nominated by acclamation is uncertain, as there may be complications in New York sufficient to upset any such idea.

Paid $113 for Hounding Deer.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Dec. 23.—The Fisheries, Game and Forest Commission has proceedings under way to recover penalties for several violations of the game laws. Many of these violations occurred in the open season, and grew out of the methods employed in taking game. One case was settled recently by Leonard Phinney of Minerva, who was detected hounding deer in the Keene Valley, and, rather than have his case go into court, paid over to the State $113.

GAS EXPLOSION ENTOMBS MINERS

Thirty Men Believed to be Dead Near Brownsville, Penn.

TASK OF RESCUERS DIFFICULT

Bodies of Seven Men Found and One Boy Died After Removal.

BROWNSVILLE, Penn., Dec. 23.—Thirty men are entombed in the Braznell Mine, four miles from here, as the result of an explosion of gas which occurred this morning. At 10 o'clock to-night Mine Inspector James Blick said: "There is scarcely any hope that any man in the pit is now alive."

That any of the men will get out alive is exceedingly improbable, and mothers, wives, and sisters mourn them as dead. Since early this morning the imprisoned men have been without any air or food. They are separated from eager searchers by walls of débris, which fell when the explosion took place and blocked the road to liberty.

At 7:30 o'clock this morning the disastrous explosion took place. Owing to a shortage of cars, less than the usual number of men had entered the pit. The mine is that of the Stockdale Coal Company, and it lies near a station named Braznell, on the Redstone Creek Branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

At 5 o'clock this morning Fire Boss James Radcliffe went through the mine as usual and found gas, or "fire damp," in two places. He detected about four inches of gas in the main entry about 100 yards from the main shaft, and about an equal quantity in a room or side entry a short distance away. The fire boss reported the presence of the gas, but informed the superintendent that it was all right for the men to enter.

DISASTER NOT EXPLAINED.

The men were lowered into the mine in the cage descending the main shaft, which is vertical. From forty to fifty men had entered the mine and dispersed through it when the gas was ignited in some manner not yet explained. A tremendous explosion followed, the force of which must have reached every man in the mine. The cage in the main shaft, which was at the bottom, was blown into splinters and the hoisting machinery wrecked. About 100 yards from the main entrance was an air shaft, also vertical and brick lined. It was rent by the blast and the bricks were blown to the very top.

When the gas exploded there was a roar that shook the immense iron tipple above the main shaft and reverberated from the hillsides. There was no need to tell what had happened. Frantic women and frightened children dashed out of their dwellings just across the railroad track and rushed toward the mouth of the shaft. They were driven back by the smoke that poured up from the mine.

A minute later everything was quiet. The big engines stopped and the fan ceased to revolve. There was no possibility of aiding the imprisoned men through the main shaft, and a rush was made for the ventilating shaft 150 feet away. This is 112 feet deep, bricked inside to strengthen it, and had iron steps from top to bottom. A shout came from below and it was known that not all were killed.

FOURTEEN MEN RESCUED.

The anxious ones at the top waited a few moments for the men to appear. They did not come, and investigation was made. It was discovered that the explosion had torn away the brick lining of the shaft, taking with it about twenty feet of the iron steps. The men below were in a trap.

Promptly a rope and bucket were lowered and the men hauled up. The first was Albert Meese, fifteen years old, a trapper. He was unconscious and was tied in the bucket. He was lifted out and remedies were applied, but without avail. He gasped once or twice and expired from inhaling the after-damp.

Fourteen men were rescued by the bucket and rope. All of them were sick and some half fainting. Restoratives were applied, and they went to their homes, several having to be carried.

No more men appearing at the foot of the air shaft, attention was turned to the main shaft, from which the after-damp was pouring out in a thick volume. The fan id whose husband, Samuel Meese, was one of the seven dead men waiting transfer to the surface. She was watching for the men to bring up her husband's body.

Beneath the tipple weeping women found shelter from the rain. Shawls upon their heads gave them scant protection from the cold. There was no hope, and yet each nurtured the hope that husband, father, or brother would be rescued alive.

THE DEAD AND SURVIVORS.

No complete list of the dead can be compiled to-night. The managers of the mines have the pay-roll, but it has been impossible for them to discover all the survivors. There is general agreement that from thirty to thirty-five men are entombed. About one-half are Americans, and the balance are Hungarians or Slavs. The list as obtained is:

JOSEPH WAGYNOR, single, has mother and sister
JOSEPH BUTSCHME, forty; wife and three children.
PETER ORIS, thirty-six; has five children.
ALBERT MEESE, fourteen; died after rescue.
SAMUEL MEESE, his father, pit boss.
HENRY HAGER, fifty; wife and children.
JAMES THOMAS, married.

Among the fourteen men brought out by the rescuers on their first trip were: Joseph Meese, driver, badly burned on face and body; Harry Atwood, badly burned; Carl Hobidski.

Soon after the extent of the accident became known undertakers were summoned from Brownsville. A new building just back of the main shaft intended for a blacksmith's shop, was converted into a morgue. Here pine boards on trestles were shaped into receptacles for the dead. All is in readiness for the victims of the mines when brought to the surface.

There was an explosion in the Braznell Mine last July. It adjoins the Umpire Mine, in which eight men were killed last year the day before Christmas by a similar explosion. Henry Hagar, one of the men entombed in Braznell pit, is the uncle of Harry Hagar, who was killed in the Umpire Mine explosion.

A. S. Braznell, manager of the Stockdale Coal Company, says that the mine was entirely free from gas yesterday, and that the quantity found this morning was not considered dangerous.

COLUMBIA'S NUGGET SAFE.

Large Platinum Specimen Stolen and Offered for Sale—Recovered by a Detective.

The large platinum nugget which graced one of the cases in the Mineralogical Museum at Columbia University was yesterday returned to its accustomed place, from which it had been missing since Thursday. A man who describes himself as Charles Sweetzer, a Harvard graduate, of 164 West One Hundred and Sixty-first Street, but who, according to the police, is otherwise known as Willis Clifton of 136 West Twenty-sixth Street, is in the Tombs charged with the theft of it.

The nugget is of nearly pure platinum, and said to be the largest, but one, in America.

Its intrinsic value as a piece of platinum is $247, but as a nugget it is of far greater value on account of its size. On Thursday, when it was discovered that the nugget and nine gold crystals, valued at $350, which had rested beside it were missing, there was consternation in the university.

Frederick Goetze, the Superintendent of the museum building, notified the police, as well as the Pinkerton Detective Agency. C. C. Murphy, Assistant Superintendent of the agency, visited personally the various assay offices here and in the vicinity of New York, and left a description of the nugget, with the request that he should be notified when it was presented for sale. On Friday Sweetzer presented the nugget at the offices of Baker & Co., in Newark, and said that he wanted to sell it. He turned it over for an order for $274 on the New York office of the company.

Mr. Murphy, who had been notified of the discovery of the nugget, waited for Sweetzer at 120 Liberty Street, the New York office of the assaying company.

When Sweetzer arrived there he was led into an inside office and questioned about the history of the nugget.

He soon became suspicious, and jumping up suddenly, rushed out of the office, eluding the detective who tried to stop him. After an exciting chase he was intercepted by Policeman Kelly of the Church Street Police Station and locked up.

He was arraigned in the Centre Street Police Court yesterday, and held for trial on a charge of grand larceny.

NEW TROLLEY COMPETITION.

Extension of Electric System in Northern New York Designed to Rival the Railroads.

The overhead trolley system promises to be a dangerous competitor with the steam surface roads in some parts of the State, at least. The liveliest kind of a war is being waged between the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company and the trolley roads in Northern New York which are controlled by ex-State Treasurer A. B. Colvin, Joseph A. Powers of Lansingburg, and others.

The latter have a trolley road running from Waterford, Saratoga County, and connecting with the Troy and Albany systems, Mechanicsville, Stillwater, Schuylerville, and Greenwich. It parallels the Delaware and Hudson's road from Troy to Mechanicsville, and also the Fitchburg Railroad and Greenwich and Johnsonville Railroad at points further north.

In the early Spring it is proposed to build a spur from Schuylerville to Fort Edward, a distance of twelve miles, where the trolley will connect with the Colvin-Powers system to Sandy Hill and Glens Falls. This latter system is also to be continued to Warrensburg, if the State Railroad Commission, at it's meeting on Dec. 29, will grant the petition of Mr. Colvin and his associates.

Ex-Treasurer Colvin, at the Hotel Imperial last night, said:

"The Delaware and Hudson Canal Company is putting on half hourly trains between Troy and Mechanicsville, but we are carrying ten passengers to their one. We are not in the least alarmed, and we propose to go in for all the passenger, express, and freight business in sight. Our road to Greenwich will be completed by the first of the year, and in the early Spring we propose to run a line from Schuylerville to Fort Edward. There is a line from Saratoga to Ballston, and we propose to get in there.

"We have applied to the State Railroad Commission for permission to build an extension from Glens Falls to Warrensburg. The Delaware and Hudson's nearest station to the latter place is Weaverstown, which is five miles away.

"If our plans do not miscarry, and we do not fear that they will, we will have a continuous trolley line from Albany and Troy to Saratoga, and the Lake George region.

"The Delaware & Hudson may beat us on the time schedules, but we can run cheaper than they can, and make more stops. Then, too, we traverse cities, towns, and villages, while their cars run on the outskirts."

The Delaware and Hudson Station at Mechanicsville is quite remote from the village proper, and the trolley cars running to the station fail to make close connections in nine cases out of ten.

MR. CARNEGIE GIVES $50,000.

Will Help to Pay for a New Engineering Laboratory for Stevens Institute.

President Henry Morton of Stevens Institute announced yesterday that Andrew Carnegie had agreed to give $50,000 toward the payment for the construction of a new engineering laboratory as an adjunct to the institute in Hoboken, N. J. The new building will be begun immediately.

HUNT FOR AN INSANE WOMAN.

Fort Montgomery People in Terror, and She Is Likely to Perish.

Special to The New York Times.

HIGHLAND FALLS, Dec. 23.—Constable Irving Marquet and half a score of Highland Falls citizens were out through the mountains to-day, trying to locate an insane woman who is scaring the people of Fort Montgomery. The woman was first seen by Thomas Connolly on Thursday night. He was badly frightened and did not attempt to capture her. Connolly called his neighbors, but when they went to the barn where he had seen the woman she had disappeared. Later she visited nearly every house in the village and rattled the shutters after peering through them. It is said the woman is from Paterson, N. J.

The woman wears no clothing except a thin waist and skirt and no shoes. If the woman is not soon caught she must perish of cold and hunger.

GRAND JURY CALLS BROKER

May Be Asked About Brooklyn Rapid Transit Rumors.

JAMES R. KEENE'S SON-IN-LAW

Wall Street's Interpretation of the Summons to Talbot J. Taylor—Mr. Sheehan's Statement.

Talbot J. Taylor, the Stock Exchange member of Talbot J. Taylor & Co., and who is James R. Keene's son-in-law, was yesterday served with a subpoena to appear before the Grand Jury next Wednesday. The summons was served by a clerk employed by Sheehan & Collin of counsel for the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company. This railroad corporation has offered a reward of $25,000 for information leading to the discovery and conviction of those who have circulated false statements or rumors with intent, as alleged, to affect the market price of the stock and securities of the company. The lawyers' clerk quoted Mr. Taylor as saying when he received the subpoena:

"Why, I have a 'pull' in the District Attorney's office. I had Mr. Gray, one of the Assistant District Attorneys, appointed. This is very amusing."

Ex-Lieut. Gov. William F. Sheehan, the senior partner of the law firm, made this formal statement in regard to Mr. Taylor being called before the Grand Jury:

"Talbot J. Taylor, a broker, and a son-in-law of Mr. Keene, was to-day served with a subpoena to appear before the Grand Jury on next Wednesday, presumably in connection with the false rumors in circulation about the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company."

Mr. Sheehan added that he was before the Grand Jury on Friday, and that any inference that connected this circumstance with the serving of a subpoena on Mr. Taylor was fair, while he would not talk of either occurrence. "The Grand Jury will hear and possibly act," he added.

WILL TRACE THE RUMORS.

"As to the reward of $25,000 and the attacks on Rapid Transit," he continued, "I put aside the harm that has come to me personally and consider the unfortunate position of the many who at this season are in unhappy plight through the operations of market riggers. We are going to see this thing through, and will spare neither time, energy, nor money in tracing these statements and rumors to their source. We shall follow up every clue. I went before the Directors of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company and said, 'I want $25,000, and, if necessary, $50,000, to probe this matter to a result,' and I can count on all the financial aid I need.

"It seems to me that the action taken by Brooklyn Rapid Transit should win the commendation of the public and the newspapers. And Wall Street people should not only commend us, but aid us. Our fight is for honest business methods and winning it for Rapid Transit means an end, at least for a time, to stockjobbing tactics that are criminal."

The interpretation put on the calling of Mr. Taylor before the Grand Jury in the Stock Exchange district is that he is to be examined to discover if possible the responsibility of James R. Keene, the acknowledged leader of the bear clique, for the decline in the stocks and securities of Brooklyn Rapid Transit. Mr. Taylor married Miss Jessie Harwar Keene, James R. Keene's daughter, and their home is with Mr. Keene at Cedarhurst, L. I. Mr. Taylor's firm transacts such of Mr. Keene's Wall Street business as is not parceled out when he is making one of his market-moving coups. The firm consists of Mr. Taylor, James B. Taylor, and, as special partner, Foxhall P. Keene, Mr. Keene's son. Mr. Keene, Sr., ocupies a large share of the firm's offices in the Johnston Building. He directs, it is said, the policy of the firm.

In The Wall Street Journal, published by Dow, Jones & Co., the affairs of Brooklyn Rapid Transit have from time to time received large attention. These articles have been sent out into the Street as bulletins, and over the ticker sheets of Dow, Jones & Co. A member of the firm of Dow, Jones & Co. became not long ago active in the service of Talbot J. Taylor & Co.

In this paper appeared last night the advertisement of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company offering the reward of $25,000, and this editorial statement under the caption, "Brooklyn Rapid Transit":

The officers of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company have had their patience exhausted at last by the false report circulated that a receivership for the property was imminent. The Board of Directors has adopted a resolution offering a reward of $25,000 for information furnished to its counsel, Sheehan & Collin, 32 Nassau Street, that will lead to the discovery and conviction of the authors or circulators of these false and malicious reports. It is said that the attorneys for the company already have information which will be submitted to the Grand Jury.

DETECTIVES AT WORK.

Rumors that were not verified yesterday were that Mr. Keene, Sr., would appear before the Grand Jury, and that subpoenas had been or would be issued for several commission house brokers with Stock Exchange affiliations and for persons identified with the Brooklyn Rapid Transit strike of last Summer. It was admitted that several detectives engaged from an agency by rapid transit interests were busy.

At the various stations of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company this notice was posted yesterday:

Notice to Conductors and Motormen:

The following grades are hereby established:

Grade No. 1—Employes, who, on Aug. 1, 1899, had been in the continuous service of the company as conductors and motormen for at least five years prior to said date.

Grade No. 2—Employes who, on Aug. 1, 1899, had been in the continuous service of the compaless than five years, but at least three years prior to that date.

Grade No. 3—Employes who, on Aug. 1, 1899, had been in the continuous service of the company less than three years, but at least two years prior to that date.

Grade No. 4—All motormen and conductors not in any of the above grades.

Promotion from lower to higher grades will be effected Aug. 1 of each year as continuous employment increases.

On and after Jan. 1, 1900, the rates of pay for full runs will be as follows:

Grade No. 1—$2.30 per day, an increase of 15 per cent.

Grade No. 2—$2.20 per day, an increase of 10 per cent.

Grade No. 3—$2.10 per day, an increase of 5 per cent.

Grade No. 4—All employes in this grade will receive $2 a day for full runs.

The above increase in the wages is made in pursuance of the company's desire to recognize faithful and continuous service, and is now made possible by reason of the improved condition of the company, and it is hoped it will have the effect not only of creating additional interest on the part of the men in the welfare of the company, but that it will attract to the company competent and faithful men who may be sure of increasing compensation with increasing tenure of employment.

A high standard will be expected, and the company's desire is to have on its pay roll only such men as are qualified, intelligent, industrious, and best fitted properly to discharge their duties.

All conductors and motormen entitled to the increased compensation, according to the above graded system, will receive the same after Jan. 1, 1900, and on Aug. 1, of each year hereafter, as they become eligible to the different grades, there will be posted in each depot lists of employes who, according to the company's records, are entitled to classification in the first three grades, and if there are any errors in such lists they should be reported at once to the Division Superintendent, who will investigate the matter and make such correction as is proper.

If any mistake has been made in getting up the list of increases, the company will gladly correct same. It is expected that when the grades are finally established, men belonging to each grade will be recognized by a distinctive indication on the uniform.

BROOKLYN HEIGHTS RAILROAD COMPANY.
C. L. Rossiter, President; T. S. Williams, Secretary and Treasurer; W. W. Wheatley, Acting General Superintendent.

THE COMPANY'S AFFAIRS.

The capital stock, $45,000,000, of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, whose direct management, because it is a business corporation without authority to manage railroads, is vested in the Brooklyn Heights Railroad Company, has been held by a voting trust which expires by limitation Dec. 31. As soon as possible after this date the "certificates of beneficial interest," entitling holders to any dividend that may be declared, will be exchanged for Brooklyn Rapid Transit stock at the office of the Central Trust Company. The annual meeting of stockholders occurs Jan. 26, 1900.

Rapid Transit stock, which closed on Friday at 63⅞, opened yesterday at 66, went to 68½, and closed at 67⅞, a net advance of 4 points.

Assistant District Attorney Gerald Hull Gray, when seen last night in regard to Mr. Taylor's alleged assertion that he had Mr. Gray appointed, said:

"I do not believe that Mr. Taylor ever said any such thing. I know Mr. Taylor very well and have known him for five or six years. I never thought of such a thing as Mr. Taylor getting me appointed. I also know Mr. Keene. To the best of my knowledge and belief he never did a thing to get me appointed.

"When I was appointed, I had the indorsements of a great many people. Among them was the firm of Taylor & Co. At the time I had this indorsement, I did not know Mr. Keene, but I also had his indorsement on my petition."

Mr. Gray called up Mr. Taylor on the telephone at the latter's home, at Cedarhurst, L. I., in order to learn just what Mr. Taylor said when served with the summons to appear before the Grand Jury. Mr. Gray, after receiving the reply, said:
